"On Wednesday, the 15th July, the ladies of Simlah will hold a meeting at Bess Castle, for the purpose of consulting about the best measures to be taken for the protection of the gentlemen.

"The ladies beg to inform those who sleep in the khuds that they sincerely compassionate their sufferings, and are now preparing pillows for them stuffed with the purest white feathers. Should they feel inclined to attend the meeting, they will then be presented to them.

"Rest, warriors, rest."

"4th July, 1857.—CLEMENTINA BRACKS."

Those who have friends or relatives at this favourite sanatorium will be glad to learn that a force of 400 armed men has been embodied for the defence of the station. Of these, 120 form the European Volunteer Corps, under the command of Capt. Seymour, and are divided into four companies. The others are hill men, Ghoorkas, and Panjabees, without the admixture of a single Hindoostanee proper.

THE KING OF OUDE.—The Government has sanctioned a temporary establishment for the use of the King of Oude and the other state prisoners. The amount required for the expenses of the king and the other state prisoners has not yet been settled.

BENARES OPIUM.—In consequence of the disturbed state of the Benares districts, there is every probability of a short provision in the Benares opium agency. The Government, we observe, have issued orders that deficiency is to be supplied by an increased provision in the Behar agency.

BENGAL COAL COMPANY.—The agents of the Bengal Coal Company, as a precautionary measure, have memorialized the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, soliciting for a number of troops to be located at Raneeoogunge for the protection of their property, as coals are essentially necessary in these stirring times, as far as military transports are concerned. The expenses of the troops, the memorialists observe, are to be incurred by them.

MARTIAL LAW IN CALCUTTA.—A petition, embodying the opinion of the community, as expressed by the votes of a meeting of the inhabitants of Calcutta, was presented yesterday, Aug. 22nd, to Government, praying for the establishment of martial law in Calcutta. It is hoped that Lord Elgin and Sir Colin Campbell will support the suggestion.

THE DACCOTY DEPARTMENT.—In consequence of the increase of work in the Daccoty Department, the Government has increased Mr. Ward's establishment from Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,200.

ACCOMMODATION OF EUROPEAN TROOPS.—The Calcutta Mudirash and the Presidency College buildings have been taken up by the military authorities for the accommodation of European troops daily expected. The former is capable of accommodating 500 with comfort. Both these institutions will be removed for three months, or until further orders, to other houses to be engaged for them in other parts of the town.

THE I. G. S. N. CO.'S INLAND STEAMERS.—The I. G. S. N. Company have offered Government about seven of their inland steamers, with their respective flats, for service to the N. W. Provinces.

THE BODY GUARDS.—The two subahdars who assisted Major Thompson in inducing the Body Guards to give up their arms, have been rewarded by the Governor-General with the title of Bahadoor.

PROHIBITION OF LEAVE OF ABSENCE.—The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council has resolved that no furloughs shall be granted to the members of the civil service in the presidencies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, during the season 1857-58, except to applicants on medical certificate.

DEATH OF LIEUTENANT BEECHER.—We much regret to hear of the death (by his own hand) of Lieut. Beecher, 43rd N.I., at Barrackpore, on the morning of Friday last. It appears that the unfortunate officer first shot himself through the cheek, and finding that he had not succeeded in his design, blew his brains out with a second discharge. The death of his wife and child within one month of each other proved the cause of the temporary insanity which led to such a fatal and sad conclusion of his career.

OPIUM.—The Englishman states that Mr. Farquharson, who succeeded the late Dr. Lyell as opium agent of the Behar district, has applied to the Supreme Government for Rs. 86,36,200 for advances to be made to the cultivators during the season 1857-58, for the estimated outturn of 36,000 chests of opium.

INDIGO.—Directly the natives of the Shahabad district had heard of the defeat of the Dinapore troops, they rose and looted or burnt every indigo factory. The planters were about to commence the manufacture, and 3,350 maunds was expected to be the outturn of the crop. If we consider the cost of indigo to be 200 rupees a maund, we have a total loss of nearly seven lakhs of rupees, exclusive of the cost of the factories and other valuable property destroyed, which probably may be estimated at six lakhs.

This Swift Conservative was wrecked at her anchors (Aug. 24), by coming into collision with her buoy.

SEVENTY CONVICTS have been sent to Singapore from the Allpore gaol.

Troops arrived at Calcutta from Madras on the 24th August.

CHOLERA.—Government has appointed a committee to report on Dr. Honiburger's new plan of treating cholera by means of inoculation.

The Rancee Adjizgur has offered the services of her troops to the authorities at Banda, to fight against the mutineers, for which the governor-general has directed them to express his thanks to the rancee.

The Hurkaru is given to understand that the two subahdars who assisted Major Thompson in inducing the body guards to give up their arms, have been rewarded by the governor-general with the title of bahadoor.

The governor-general has vested Colonel Cavenagh with summary authority to punish all lurers in the fort of Calcutta to the extent of fifty lashes. The consequence, there has been some squealing in the fortress for the last day or two.

The supreme Government has sanctioned the proposal to man seven steamers with European seamen, and arm them with one howitzer and two three-pounder mountain guns. The cost not to exceed Co.'s Re. 1,540 per month.

SIR C. CAMPBELL, G.C.B., took his seat and his oaths as extraordinary member of the Council of India, on the 31st Aug., under the usual salute from the guns of Fort William. The delay has been caused by the gallant general's courtesy in declining to assume the chief command until after Sir Patrick Grant's departure from the presidency. A seat in the council is subsequent to the assumption of the command of the forces in India.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

ARRIVAL OF SIR COLIN CAMPBELL.

Fort William, 15th August, 1857.—His Excellency General Sir Colin Campbell, G.C.B., appointed by Her Majesty to be Commander-in-Chief of H.M.'s and all other forces serving in the East-Indies, having arrived on the 13th instant, assumed command of the army in India on that date.

Ordered, that all returns of the army be made in the usual manner to General Sir Colin Campbell, G.C.B., as Commander-in-Chief.

His Excellency Lieutenant-General Sir Patrick Grant, K.C.B., acting Commander-in-Chief in Bengal, will return to Madras and resume the command of the army at the Presidency of Fort St. George.

The Governor-General in Council directs that all the honours and distinctions paid to the Commander-in-Chief of all the forces in Bengal, shall be continued to His Excellency Lieutenant-General Sir Patrick Grant, K.C.B., until his departure for Madras.

(Signed) R. J. H. BIRCH, Colonel,
Secretary to the Govt. of India, Mil. Dept.

PROCLAMATION.

Sir Colin Campbell arrived in Calcutta on the 14th August, and on the 22nd issued the following proclamation to the troops under his command:—

"By the Commander-in-Chief.

"Her Majesty having been graciously pleased to appoint me Commander-in-Chief of the forces in India, in the room of the late lamented General the Hon. George Anson, and her Majesty having also been graciously pleased to confer upon me the rank of General in the East Indies, I now assume the command of the army in India.

"In doing so it affords me the highest satisfaction to find under my orders troops who have so fully proved themselves, in the recent arduous operations in the field, to be what I have ever known British soldiers in every quarter of the globe—courageous, faithful, obedient, and enduring.

"In former years I have commanded native troops of India, and by their side I have been present in many battles and victories in which they have nobly borne their part; and it is to me a subject of deep concern to learn that soldiers of whom I had been accustomed to think so favourably should now be arrayed in open and defiant mutiny, against a Government proverbial for the liberality and paternal consideration with which it has ever treated its servants of every denomination.

"When I join the force now in the field, restoring order to the district disturbed by the disaffection of the army of Bengal, I shall, at the head of the British troops, and of those native soldiers who, though few in number, have not feared to separate themselves from their faithless comrades, and to adhere to their duty, feel my old confidence that they will march to certain victory.

"I shall not fail to notice, and the powerful Government which I have the honour to serve will not fail to reward, every instance of fidelity and valour shown by the troops under my command.

"I call upon the officers and men of both European and native troops, zealously to assist in the task before us; and, by the blessing of God, we shall soon again see India tranquil and prosperous.

"C. CAMPBELL, General,
"Calcutta, Aug. 17." "Commander-in-Chief."

"His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to make the following appointments on his personal staff:—

"Major A. Alison, her Majesty's service, unattached, to be military secretary; Capt. Sir David Baird, Bart., her Majesty's 98th Foot, to be aide-de-camp; Lieut. F. M. Alison, her Majesty's 72nd Foot, to be aide-de-camp; Capt. W. F. G. Forster, her Majesty's 1st West-India regt., to be aide-de-camp.

"These appointments to bear date 18th August, 1857."

Fort William, Aug. 14, 1857.—With the sanction of Government, the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to make the following temporary arrangements, without prejudice to the permanent appointments of the officers concerned:—

"Brev. Lieut.-Col. C. J. Otter, her Majesty's 61st Foot, and officiating Deputy Adjutant-General Queen's Troops in India, to command the garrison and station of Allahabad. Capt. B. D. W. Ramsey, her Majesty's 75th Foot, and Brigade-Major Queen's troops, to officiate as assistant adjutant-general, vice Otter.

(Signed) "W. MAYHEW, Major,

"Dep. Adjutant-General of the Army."

"By order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief."

ABOLITION OF THE MEDICAL BOARD.

The following new arrangements for the medical departments at the three Presidencies, having been determined upon by the Court of Directors, have been published for general information. The Governors of the minor Presidencies will fix the date at which they shall come into effect:—

No. 964 of 1857.—Under instructions from the Hon. the Court of Directors, conveyed in their despatch No. 92, dated the 10th June, 1857, the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to announce for general information the new arrangements for the medical department at the three Presidencies, which have been determined upon by the Hon. Court.

1. The several medical boards at the three Presidencies are to be abolished, and the functions heretofore confided to those boards are to be placed in the hands of an officer at each Presidency, to be selected for that purpose by the Governor-General in Council or by the Governors in Council. This officer is to be designated Director-General of the Medical Department, and to be appointed for a term of five years' service, renewable by the Government, if they should think that the interests of the public service will be thereby advanced.

The Director-General is to be allowed the services of a secretary and of an adequate office establishment.

2. The Director-General at each Presidency will be assisted by officers to be designated Inspectors-General. In Bengal there will be one officer in each of the two divisions of the Bengal territories, viz.:—

The Lower Provinces, including Pegu;

The North-Western Provinces, including the Punjab; who shall be the inspector of all the hospitals, military and civil, and dispensaries, depôts of medical stores, and all establishments connected with the medical department in his division. This officer shall make periodical tours through his division, and shall report the results of his inspection to the Director-General, but he is not to be the channel of correspondence between the Director-General and the superintending surgeons, who are, as at present, to correspond direct with the head of the medical department.

3. There will be one Inspector-General in each of the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay. The appointment, like that of the Director-General, will be for a term of five years' service, renewable by the Government, if the interests of the public service will be thereby advanced.

4. The number of superintending surgeons at each of the three Presidencies, and their duties, will continue as at present.

The succession to these appointments will not depend on seniority alone, but the selection will, as prescribed in existing regulations, be made with reference to established character for distinguished zeal, strict assiduity, and professional ability, due regard, however, being had to seniority when not opposed by considerations of a still more powerful nature.

5. Assistant-surgeons will hereafter be divided into two classes. Those who have served ten years will be designated "1st class" and their juniors "2nd class" assistant-surgeons.

First-class assistant-surgeons in medical charge of corps will be allowed the medical staff salary of surgeons, viz., Rs. 300 per mensem.

6. With reference to the new Furlough Regulations (Government General Order No. 1150, dated 17th November, 1854, paragraph 20 to 37), the following scale of retiring pensions is applicable to the medical department:—

After 17 years' service	£191 12 6
" 25	300 0 0
" 29	365 0 0
" 35	700 0 0

By existing regulations, a medical officer holding the appointment of Member of the Medical Board, is required absolutely to retire from the service after he has served five years in that appointment. Hereafter, a medical officer who has passed a tour of duty in the highest appointments will, if he is still fit for the service, be permitted to return to the performance of other medical duties, until he shall have completed thirty-five years' service, and to be enabled to qualify for the highest rate of retiring pension.

8. The relative rank of medical with military officers under the new arrangements will be as follows:—

- Director-general with brigadier-general.
- Inspector-general with colonel.
- Superintending surgeons with lieutenant-colonels.
- Senior surgeons with majors.
- Surgeons with captains.
- Assistant-surgeons with lieutenants.

9. When committees are convened by Government, and composed of military and medical officers, or of these and civilians also, the relative precedence of the members is to be that in which they are named in the order convening the committee. In such cases, the president may belong to any branch of the service.

Whenever committees composed of military and medical officers are convened by the Commander-in-Chief, or by other military authorities, the president is invariably to be a military officer, and the members are to take precedence according to their relative rank.

10. The director-general, inspector-general, and superintending surgeons will be appointed by the Governor-General in Council or the Governors in Council.

11. Salaries at the following rates will be allowed:—

Bengal.

Director-General.

Consolidated pay and allowances, Rs. 3,000 per month.

Inspector-General of Hospitals.

Consolidated pay and allowances, Rs. 2,000 per month.

Superintending Surgeons.

Consolidated pay and allowances, Rs. 1,800 per month, with compensation for travelling expenses.

Madras.

Director-General.

Consolidated pay and allowances, Rs. 2,700 per month.

Inspector-General of Hospitals.

Consolidated pay and allowances, Rs. 1,900 per month.

Superintending Surgeons.

On the present Scale.

Bombay.

Director-General.

Consolidated pay and allowances, Rs. 2,500 per month.

Inspector-General of Hospitals.

Consolidated pay and allowances, Rs. 1,900 per month.

Superintending Surgeons.

On the present scale.

12. The present members of the medical boards at the three Presidencies who may not be selected for employment, will be employed under the orders of the Governor-General in Council and Governors in Council, in such manner as, without delaying the adoption of the new system, and without reducing the allowances of incumbents, shall allow them to serve the remainder of their tour of five years' service in the way most advantageous to the public interests.

13. A period will be assigned, from which the new arrangements shall come into effect in Bengal, and the Governors of Madras and Bombay in Council will be pleased to fix the date at which they shall come into effect at those presidencies respectively.

TREATMENT OF MUTINEERS, &c.

From C. Beadon, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, to C. B. Thornhill, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of the North-Western Provinces.

SIR,—I am directed to forward the accompanying extract from the proceedings of the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council, relative to the treatment of mutineers, deserters, and other persons concerned in the recent and present disturbances, and to request that the observance of the principles there laid down may be enjoined upon the local authorities.

(Signed) C. BEADON,

Sec. to the Government of India.

Fort William, July 31, 1857.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council in the Home Department, under date the 31st July, 1857.

Resolution.

Par. 1. The Governor-General of India in Council has observed, with approbation the zealous exertions of the local civil authorities for the apprehension and condign punishment of the mutineers and deserters concerned in the present revolt. It was necessary, by the severe and prompt punishment of such of these criminals as found their way into the districts in our possession, where the minds of the native troops could not but be in a very unsettled state, though the men for the most part had abstained from open mutiny, to show that the just fate of the mutineer is death, and that the British Government was powerful to inflict the penalty. It was necessary also, by the offer of rewards for the apprehension of all deserters, to check the crime of desertion, which was becoming rife in some of these regiments, and to prevent the possible escape of men who, apparently more deserters, had been concerned in such terrible atrocities that their apprehension and condign punishment was an imperative duty.

Par. 2. But, lest measures of extreme severity should be too hastily resorted to or carried too far, his lordship in Council thinks it right to issue detailed instructions on this subject, by which all civil officers will be guided in the exercise of their powers in the cases of mutineers, deserters, and rebels.

Par. 3. There is reason to believe that in some, even of those native regiments whose revolt has been stained by the most sanguinary atrocities, some men may have distinguished themselves from the mass by protecting an officer. In some such cases men of very guilty regiments possess certificates in their favour from officers of their regiments; but there may be others equally deserving of clemency who are without any such ready means of clearing themselves from the presumptive evidence of their deep guilt.

Par. 4. Where the number of men guilty of what it is impossible to pardon is so great, the Government will gladly seize every opportunity of reducing the work of retribution before it, by giving a free pardon to all who can show that they have a claim to mercy on this ground, provided they have not been guilty of any heinous crime against person or property, or aided or abetted others in the commission of any such crime.

Par. 5. It is understood that in regiments which mutinied, and for the most part went over to the rebels, without murdering their officers or committing any other sanguinary outrage, there were men who appeared to have had no heart in the revolt, though they failed in their duty as soldiers, and who have evinced their peaceable disposition, and their want of sympathy with those who are now armed in open rebellion against the Government by dispersing to their villages when the regiment broke up, and mixing quietly with the rural population. It is desirable to treat such men with all reasonable leniency.

Par. 6. The Governor-General in Council therefore deems it necessary to lay down the following rules for the guidance of civil authorities, in exercising the powers vested in them by recent legislation for the punishment of native officers and soldiers charged with mutiny or desertion.

Sec. 1.—No native officer or soldier belonging to a regiment which has not mutinied is to be punished by the civil power as a mere deserter, unless he be found or apprehended with arms in his possession. Such men when taken before or apprehended by the civil power, are to be sent back to their regiments whenever that can be done, there to be dealt with by the military authorities. When such men cannot be sent back to their regiments immediately, they should be detained in prison pending the orders of Government, to whom a report is to be made, addressed to the Secretary to Government in the military department.

Sec. 2.—Native officers and soldiers, being mutineers or deserters, taken before or apprehended by the civil power, not found or apprehended with arms in their possession, not charged with any specific act of rebellion, and belonging to a regiment which has mutinied, but has not been guilty of the murder of its officers, or of any other sanguinary crime, are to be sent to Allahabad, or to such other place as Government may hereafter order, and are there to be made over to the commandant, to be dealt with by the military authorities. Should any difficulty arise in sending the offender to Allahabad, either by reason of its distance from the place of arrest or otherwise, the offender should be imprisoned, until the orders of Government can be obtained, unless for special reasons it may be necessary to punish the offender forthwith, in which case a report will immediately afterwards be made to the Government.

Sec. 3.—Every mutineer or deserter who may be taken before, or apprehended by, the civil authorities, and who may be found to belong to a regiment which killed any European officer or other European, or committed any other sanguinary outrage, may be tried and punished by the civil power. If the prisoner can show that he was not present at the murder or other outrage, or, if present, that he did his utmost to prevent it, full particulars of the case should be reported to Government in the military department before the sentence, whatever it be, is carried into effect, otherwise the sentence should be carried into effect forthwith.

Sec. 4. If it cannot be ascertained to what regiment a mutineer or deserter taken before, or apprehended by, the civil authorities belonged, he is to be dealt with, as provided above, by the 2nd Rule.

Par. 7. Lists showing the several regiments and detachments which have mutinied will be prepared with all practicable despatch in the military department, stating in each case all known particulars of the mutiny, and accompanied by nominal rolls, with appropriate remarks opposite to the names of those native officers and men who are known to have been absent from their regiment at the time of the mutiny, and of those who, if present, are known to have taken an active part either in promoting or suppressing the mutiny, or to have simply joined, or abstained from joining it. These nominal rolls, as soon as prepared, will be printed and circulated to all civil officers, and to military officers in command.

Par. 8. The Governor-General in Council is anxious to prevent measures of extreme severity being unnecessarily resorted to, or carried to excess, or applied without due discrimination, in regard to acts of rebellion committed by persons not mutineers.

Par. 9. It is unquestionably necessary, in the first attempt to restore order in a district in which the civil authority has been entirely overthrown, to administer the law with such promptitude and severity as will strike terror into the minds of the evil-disposed among the people, and will induce them by the fear of death to abstain from plunder, to restore stolen property, and return to peaceful occupations. But this object once in a great degree attained, the punishment of crimes should be regulated with discrimination.

Par. 10. The continued administration of the law in its utmost severity after the requisite impression has been made upon the rebellious and disorderly, and after order has been partly restored, would have the effect of exasperating the people, and would probably induce them to band together in large numbers for the protection of their lives, and with a view to retaliation.—a result much to be deprecated. It would greatly add to the difficulties of settling the country hereafter, if a spirit of animosity against their rulers were engendered in the minds of the people, and if their feelings were embittered by the remembrance of needless bloodshed. The civil officers in every district should endeavour, without condoning any heinous offences or making any promises of pardon for such offences, to encourage all persons to return to their usual occupations, and punishing only such of the principal offenders as can be apprehended,—to postpone as far as possible all minute inquiry into political offences until such time as the Government are in a position to deal with them in strength after thorough investigation. It may be necessary, however, even after a district is partially restored to order to make examples from time to time of such persons—of any who may be guilty of serious outrages against person or property, or who, by stopping the dawk or injuring the electric telegraph, or otherwise, may endeavour to promote the designs of those who are waging war against the state.

Par. 11. Another point to be noticed in connection with this subject is the general burning of villages, which the Governor-General in Council has reason to fear may have been carried too far by some of the civil officers employed in restoring order.

Par. XII. A severe measure of this sort is doubtless necessary as an example, in some cases where the mass of the inhabitants of a village have committed a grave outrage, and the perpetrators cannot be punished in their persons; but any approach to a wholesale destruction of property by the officers of government, without due regard to the guilt or innocence of those who are affected by it, must be strongly reprehended. Apart from the effect which such a practice would have upon the feelings and disposition of the country people, there can be no doubt that it would prevent them from returning to their villages and resuming the cultivation of their fields, a point at this season of vital importance, inasmuch as if the lands remain much longer unsown, distress, and even famine, may be added to the other difficulties with which the government will have to contend.

CALCUTTA VOLUNTEER GUARDS.

Fort William, Aug. 14, 1857.—The Right Honourable the Governor-General of India is pleased to sanction the addition of a company of artillery, with four field guns, to the Calcutta Volunteer Guards.

Capt. C. H. Dickens, of the Bengal artillery, is appointed to command the company, with the following subalterns:—

Lieutenants A. Pearson and J. Leonard.

PENSIONS TO OFFICERS' AND SOLDIERS' WIDOWS, ETC.

Fort William, Aug. 18, 1857.—With adVERTISEMENT to Para. 11* of the Government General Order No. 931, of the 23rd of July, 1857, it is hereby declared that pension referred to will be paid at the rates and under the conditions on which pensions are payable from the Compassionate Fund, as laid down in Section XXI., paras. 21 to 29, of the Pay Code of 1849, and which rates include the payment from Lord Clive's fund.

Further, that the pensions will be extended within the limitations of the Compassionate Fund to the mothers, sisters, and children of officers and men of the Bengal yeomanry cavalry who may fall in action.

LEAVE TO WOUNDED OFFICERS.

Fort William, Sept. 1, 1857.—The following extract, paras. 18 and 19, of a military letter, from Hon. Court of Directors to Government of India, dated 22nd July, 1857, are published for general information:—

By the regulations established for the promotion of lieutenant-colonels to the rank of colonel after three years' service, it is provided that no longer period than one month in each year, or a total of three months in three years, or six months in six years shall be allowed to reckon, whether the leave shall have been spent in India or out of the country, except in cases of wounds or illness contracted, by service in the field, duly certified by a medical board, when each case will be separately considered with reference to the time to be allowed.

In reply to the question now put to us, we have much satisfaction in stating that we are prepared to extend the benefits of the exception above specified to the time required for retirement on full pay. Every claim to the benefit of this exception must be duly certified by a medical board, and be forwarded to us for our decision, accompanied by the opinion thereon of the Government and Commander-in-Chief of the Presidency to which the officer belongs.

R. J. H. BIRCH, Colonel,

Secretary to Government of India in the Military Dept.

EUROPEAN WOMEN AND CHILDREN TO LEAVE THE DISTURBED DISTRICTS.

Fort William, Sept. 3.—The Governor-General in Council hereby directs the civil and military authorities in all districts of the lower and central provinces of the Bengal presidency in which martial law has been proclaimed, and in the districts of the Bhagulpore division, to send away all European women and children of every class to Calcutta if possible, or at any rate to some station below Rajmahal.

A free passage is given on board the government and private river steamers and flats to all women and children proceeding down the river in compliance with this order.

European women and children will not be permitted for the present to enter any district in which martial law has been proclaimed, or any district of the Bhagulpore division.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council.

RE-CLASSIFICATION OF OFFICERS OF THE TENASSERIM, &c., PROVINCES.

COURT MARTIAL.

SURGEON ELLIOT VOYLE DAVIES, M.D.

Fort William, July 27, 1857.—At a general court-martial at Fort William, held July 27, 1857, Surgeon E. V. Davies, M.D., 70th N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—For conduct unbecoming an officer, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having, at Barrackpore, June 10th, 1857, when visited at his quarters by the adjutant by order of the commanding officer of the 70th N.I., been drunk, and, from the effects of intoxication, unable to afford any explanation whatever on the subject for which purpose the adjutant had been directed to call upon him.

Finding.—Guilty.

Sentence.—To be dismissed the service.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) PAT. GRANT, Lieut. General,
 Acting Commander-in-Chief.

Calcutta, 1st August, 1857.

The name of Surgeon Davies is to be struck off the strength of the medical department, from date of publication of this order at Barrackpore, of which a report is to be made to the deputy-adjutant general of the army.

By order of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
 W. MAYHEW, Major,

FREIGHTS.

Quotations to London and Liverpool, 4l. to 4l. 6s.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Sept. 9, 1857).—The market continues without any operation for the Upper Provinces. There has, however, been a fair amount of business done for lower Bengal in Twist, which has maintained a good position lately, stocks and supplies being very light. Particular makes of Grey Shirtings of 6½ to 7½ lbs. have also engaged attention at higher prices. Grey Madapolams have continued to engage attention at former rates. Grey Jaconets of the better kind are in good demand at a slight improvement. Prints and Woollens are still unsaleable. Metals continue in little inquiry.

EXPORTS (Calcutta, Sept. 9, 1857).—The stocks have been gradually working off; former high prices are maintained, and in some instances have ruled higher. Raw Silk.—A fair amount of business has been done at a fall of one rupee per seer on fair qualities; since the arrival of the Mail, holders have been anxious to sell at a further reduction; but there are no buyers. The stocks are large, principally of low and middling qualities—Radnagore and Hurriapaul; finer qualities are scarce. Large shipments have been made in the steamer Alma, a great portion of which are of European flature, and on proprietor's account. Rice.—Supplies of table sorts of all qualities are getting short in the bazaar, and operations for Great Britain and other places have consequently fallen off.

Oil.—Shipments of Castor Oil have lately been made for Great Britain, America, Melbourne, and Mauritius. Supplies in the market have reduced, and price has slightly risen. Coconut Oil engages little inquiry for shipment, and remains as last quoted. Mustard Oil has lately engaged inquiry, and some transactions have been reported at Rs. 12-12 to 12-14 per maund. Oil Seeds.—Shipments of Linseed are going on for Great Britain and America. Supplies in the bazaar are moderate, and prices keep steady. In Rape Seed a limited business is in progress for only Great Britain. The local crushers are the principal buyers at present, and prices remain unaltered. Jute and Hemp, of good qualities, are still scarce, the supplies being mixed and rather moderate: there is a good demand. Hides and Skins.—Cow Hides continue to be engaged for England. Supplies of good qualities are small, and former prices are maintained.

MADRAS.

HUMILIATION.—The Bishop of Madras with the approbation of Lord Harris, appointed the 20th of August as a day of humiliation and prayer. Morning service was held in all the churches of his diocese.

ARREST OF NATIVES.—The Madras Spectator states that upwards of 100 natives have been arrested in the Madras Presidency. They are confined in the ship Minden, under a strong military guard.

MYSORE HORSE.—The Bengalore Herald mentions that the Supreme Government have directed the Commissioner of Mysore, to prepare 2,600 Mysore horse for service in the Bengal Presidency. They will march shortly under the command of Colonel A. Macleod.

MADRAS GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

NEW COMPANY OF SAPPERS AND MINERS.

Head Quarters, Choultry Plain, Aug. 18, 1857.—Under instructions from Government, the Provincial Commander-in-Chief directs that a 10th company of the established strength be added to the Corps of Sappers and Miners, this augmentation to have effect from the 20th instant.

BOMBAY.

WRECK.—The British ship Ocean Queen, on her voyage from Bombay to London, was wrecked in the Mozambique channel. The commander, Captain Reed, with his son and a midshipman named Hoyle, appear to have been the only survivors.

KURRACHEE.—The customs receipts at Kurrachee for the month of June amounted to Rs. 7,565 4-5. The sum collected during the same month of 1856 was Rs. 15,344-5, in which, however, the duty on salt amounted to Rs. 9,848 14-9. Thus the sum really collected was Rs. 5,495 6-3. There is a balance, therefore, of rather more than Rs. 2,000 in favour of the present year. The increase is owing to the importation of railway materials.

THE THAKOOR OF BHOWNUGGUR, one of the Kattiawar chiefs, has offered to place at the disposal of the Government of Bombay a force of 1,000 men.

His Excellency Sir Henry Somerset arrived at the presidency on the 15th Sept. from the Deccan, and lauded under a salute of nineteen guns from the saluting battery.

THE H.C.'s steamer Berenice, having on board two companies of H.M.'s 86th regiment, under the command of Capt. Darby, and a detachment of artillery, under the command of Lieut. Malcolmson, left Bombay on the 10th Sept. for Gogo, en route to Ahmedabad and Guzerat.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN G. SKIPTON.—We regret to announce the death of Captain George Skipton, of the 2nd (or grenadier) regiment N.I., which melancholy event occurred at Ahmedabad, on the 1st September. Captain Skipton, who entered the service in 1842, served in the campaign in the Southern Mahrattacountry of 1844-45. This casualty promotes Lieutenant James Black to the rank of captain, and Ensign F. P. C. Roberts, a cadet of 1855, to that of lieutenant.

REINFORCEMENTS.—A portion of the 4th N.I. (Rifle corps), consisting of five European officers, and about 300 rank and file, under the command of Captain John Langston, arrived in Bombay from Bushire on Monday last by the ship Haddington, which left that port on the 15th August.

One wing of H.M.'s 89th foot, under the command of Colonel A. H. Ferryman, C.B., arrived on the 11th September, from the Cape of Good Hope, in the screw steamer England, which left the port of East London on the 16th August. This detail consists of 27 officers and 517 rank and file. The rest of the regiment, consisting of six officers and 181 rank and file, arrived on the 12th idem, in the transport Ocean Wave, which left East London on the 16th August. The men did not then land in Bombay, but proceeded to Gogo a day or two afterwards, en route to Ahmedabad, where they are to be stationed for the present. The 95th foot is daily expected there from the Cape.

LIEUT.-COLONEL JAMES KILNER, of the Bombay engineers, superintending engineer Southern Provinces, is about to retire from the service.

APPOINTMENTS.—The Poona Observer understands that Col. Edward Lugard, C.B., late chief of the staff with the Persian expeditionary force, has been summoned to Calcutta by Sir Colin Campbell as adjutant-general of her Majesty's forces in Bengal, and will leave Bombay for Galle by the China mail steamer on the 16th Sept. Colonel C. H. Somerset has been appointed deputy adjutant general of her Majesty's forces at Bombay, in succession to Colonel Lugard, promoted; and Captain H. G. E. Somerset, who has just returned from leave to the Cape, has been appointed military secretary to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, vice Colonel Somerset.

DEATH OF LIEUT. F. M. SMITH.—We regret to announce the death of Lieut. F. M. Smith, of the 4th rifles, which melancholy event occurred at sea, off Muscat, on board the ship Haddington, on his return from Persia on the 25th August last. This casualty will promote 2nd-Lieutenant A. N. Bruce, a cadet of 1856, to the rank of lieutenant.

SINGAPORE.

On Sunday, the 2nd August, her Majesty's steamer Encounter arrived at Singapore from Bangkok, having on board the Siamese embassy for England. The principal ambassador landed next day under a salute of nineteen guns. In a letter from the King of Siam to a gentleman in Singapore, the royal correspondent writes:—"Our embassy consists of twenty-eight Siamese personages, of whom his Excellency Phia Montree Suriwongsee, the full brother of his Lordship Chowfiya Suriwongsee, S.P.K., is the First Ambassador, and my beloved adopted son, his Honour Phra Noi Sarbthdha Chaelv, is the Second Ambassador." In addition to the two ambassadors, one representing the First and the other the Second King of Siam, there are four chief attachés, named Chamun Rajamale, Noi Bichar Sarbkick, Man Rajaday, and Chamun Mondir Bidecks. The embassy was to leave Singapore on the 8th August, in her Majesty's steamer Encounter. A war steamer will be in readiness at Alexandria to convey the embassy to England. Among the presents on board the Encounter is a white elephant, intended for her Majesty Queen Victoria.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

(From the Supplement of the London Gazette of Friday, Oct. 9.)

India Board, Oct., 1857.—The following despatches have been at various times received at the East-India House, and are now inserted in the London Gazette, although previous publication has not taken place in India.

No. 1.

The Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army to the Secretary to the Government of India.

Delhi, June 13.

SIR,—In continuation of letter of the 27th ult., to your address, from the late Adjutant-General of the Army, reporting the death of the Commander-in-Chief on that day, I am now desired by Major-General T. Reed, C.B., commanding the forces in Bengal, to request that you will inform the Governor-General in Council that the Major-General, having left Rawul Pindee on the 28th ult., reached the camp of the force under Major-General Sir H. Barnard, K.C.B., at Alleepore, one march from Delhi, about 1 a.m. of the 8th inst., when the troops were on the point of moving to drive in the posts of the mutineers outside Delhi.

2. Sir H. Barnard had been joined on the previous day by Brigadier A. Wilson with troops from Meerut, and on the 6th inst, by the siege-train, with its escort, so that the total force in camp was as enumerated in the margin.*

3. I beg to inclose copies of the Major-General's two reports of the successful operations of this day, and am only to add that Major-General Reed entirely approves of the whole of the dispositions made, and cordially concurs in the approbation bestowed on the officers and troops engaged, and particularly on those who are more especially mentioned.

4. The Commander of the Forces, I am to state, was unable, from severe sickness and fatigue, to accompany the troops, and in no way interfered with the arrangements of Sir H. Barnard, who was attended in the field by the head-quarters' staff.

5. Major-General Reed desires to express his deep regret

* 4 guns, 2nd troop, 1st brigade; 2nd and 3rd troops, 3rd brigade, Horse Artillery; 3rd company, 3rd battalion, Artillery, and No. 14 Horse Field Battery; 4th company, 6th battalion, Artillery; detachment Artillery Recruits; head-quarters detachment Sappers and Miners; H.M.'s 9th Lancers; two squadrons H.M.'s 6th Dragoon Guards; head-quarters and six companies 60th Royal Rifles; head-quarters and nine companies of H.M.'s 76th regiment; 1st Bengal Fusiliers; head-quarters and six companies 2nd Fusiliers; Sirmoor Battalion.

the loss of the Adjutant-General of the Army, Col. C. Chester, who was killed by a cannon-shot in the first advance on the enemy's heavy battery at Badulee Ke-Serai. The loss of this officer at the present juncture is deeply deplored by the Commander of the Forces.

6. Since the arrival of the troops at Delhi, several affairs have taken place, in all of which the troops engaged have greatly distinguished themselves. The most important of these occurred yesterday morning, when our position was attacked in great force, and the enemy completely repulsed with much loss. Sir H. Barnard's report of this action is inclosed.

7. The Guide Corps, under Capt. Daly, arrived on the morning of the 9th inst., having marched from Murdan, in Eusufzaie, a distance of 580 miles, in 22 days.

8. The Engineer and Artillery portions of the force have been actively employed in throwing up batteries, and in maintaining a fire on the city. The mutineers have mounted a very formidable artillery, and their practice is excellent and usually well sustained; but the Major-General trusts ere long we shall be enabled to strike a decisive blow at the place.

9. In addition to the inclosures already referred to, I am directed to attach copies of Brigadier Wilson's reports of his two actions at Ghazee-od-deen Nuggur.

I have, &c.,

W. A. NORMAN, Lieutenant.

No. 2.

Brigadier Wilson to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Ghazee-od-deen Nuggur, May 31.

SIR,—I have the honour to report, for the information of Major-General Sir H. Barnard, K.C.B., commanding the Umballa force, that, as reported in my brief despatch of last night, my advanced pickets were driven in at about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and that I was attacked by a large force of mutineers, accompanied by heavy guns, from Delhi.

I immediately sent off a company of H.M.'s 60th Royal Rifles, with another in support, to hold the iron bridge, which is the key of my position, and I detached the four guns of Major Tombs's troop, supported by a squadron of Carabineers right along the bank of the Hindun river.

The insurgents opened upon these advanced parties with heavy guns. I ordered two more companies of the 60th to support their advance, and brought up four guns of Major Scott's battery, the sappers, and a troop of Carabineers to their support, leaving two guns and a troop of Carabineers to protect the camp.

The first few rounds from the insurgents' guns were admirably aimed, plunging through our camp; but they were ably replied to by our two 18-pounders, in position under Lieut. Light and Major Tombs's troop, most admirably led by Lieut.-Col. M. Mackenzie, who, raking them in flank with his 6-pounders, first made their fire unsteady, and in a short time silenced these heavy guns.

On remarking the unsteadiness of their fire, I ordered Lieut.-Col. Jones to advance his Rifles and attack. This was done in a most spirited manner. They drove the enemy from the guns; but in the act of taking possession of two heavy pieces on the causeway, close to the toll-house, I regret to say that Capt. Andrews and four of his men were blown up by the explosion of an ammunition-waggon, fired by one of the mutineers.

The insurgents were now in full retreat, leaving in our hands ordnance, ammunition, and stores. They were followed for a considerable distance on the Delhi road by Lieut.-Col. Custance, who commanded the Carabineers with the force.

Where all behaved so well, and showed such gallant conduct, it is almost invidious to particularize, but I wish to bring to Major-General Sir H. Barnard's notice, and through him to the Commander of the Forces, Lieut.-Col. Mackenzie, 1st brigade Horse Artillery, who so ably led; Major Tombs, who so gallantly fought the 2nd troop of that brigade (the latter had his horse shot under him); Lieut.-Col. Custance, commanding the Carabineers; Lieut.-Col. Jones, who so gallantly led the 60th Royal Rifles; and Major Scott, who ably supported that regiment.

Mr. Greathed, the Commissioner, attended on me during the whole of the action. From this gentleman, and four of my own personal staff—Capt. Johnson, Staff Officer of the Force; Capt. O'Hamilton, officiating Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General; Capt. Russell, of the 51th; and Lieut. Barchard, of the 20th Native Infantry; my orderly officers, and Lieut. Waterfield, of the Commissariat Department—I received every assistance.

The casualties may not be considered great under the advantages we have gained; but with my small force I cannot afford to lose men. I have applied to Major-General Hewitt, commanding Meerut division, for a reinforcement, as I consider my present force much too small for the position I am placed in—liable to constant attacks from Delhi. Parties of horse have been seen from that quarter reconnoitring my position all the morning, and it is very harassing to the men to be kept so constantly on the alert.

I have, &c.,

A. WILSON,

Brigadier, Commanding Field Force.

No. 3.

Brigadier Wilson to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Ghazee-od-deen Nuggur, June 1.

SIR,—In continuation of my demi-official express of last night's date, I have the honour to report, for the information of Major-General Sir H. Barnard, K.C.B., and, through him, of the Commander of the Forces, that the insurgents attacked me again yesterday afternoon, at about 1 o'clock, in force.

They took up a position extending fully a mile on the high ridge, on the opposite side of the Hindun, about a mile from my advanced picket, in front of the bridge, and commenced a fire with their guns from this long distance.

The guns of the Horse Artillery, supported by a squadron of Carabineers, immediately moved forward to reply to the fire, and the two 18-pounders under Lieut. Light moved to the bank of the river for the same purpose. The Rifles, leaving one company in camp, moved forward to the support of the picket at the bridge, supported by two guns of Major Scott's battery and a troop of Carabineers.

Perceiving that the Horse Artillery were exposed to a very heavy fire, I advanced two more guns of Major Scott's battery, under Lieut. Davidson, to support them.

For nearly two hours the action was one of artillery chiefly.

The Rifles clearing the village on the left of the toll-bar, and the fire of the enemy's guns slackening, I ordered a general advance, the insurgents retiring, continuing their fire until we drove them from their position and crowned the ridge, from which we could see them in full retreat to Delhi.

My men were so knocked up by the heat of the sun, by which many officers and men were struck down, that I could not follow them further, as I wished. I therefore withdrew the force into camp, after having first burnt a village on our right flank, from which the insurgents had given us much annoyance.

All the force performed their duty well and to my satisfaction; and in addition to those officers whom I brought to notice in my despatch of yesterday, detailing the action of the 30th, I wish to report favourably of Lieut. Elliot, of Artillery, who supported the Rifles with two guns of Major Scott's battery, in the most steady and determined manner; Lieut. Light also did admirable service with his 18-pounders. The Sappers and Miners under Lieut. Maunsell, whom I brought up in support of Lieut. Elliot's guns, performed most efficient service.

I have to regret the loss of Lieut. Perkins, of Horse Artillery, an invaluable officer, and a great loss to me.

I beg to inclose reports from the commanding officers, and a return of killed and wounded.

I regret to say that the insurgents were enabled to carry off all their guns, which appeared to me to consist of two heavy pieces, on the Delhi road, and five light guns, most probably the remains of Capt. de Teissier's battery; one of their ammunition waggons only was destroyed.

I have, &c.,

A. WILSON, Brigadier, Commanding Field Force.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Our friends who favour us with communications will greatly add to their obliging kindness by writing on one side only of their paper. All persons acquainted with the details of a printing-office know how much this promotes convenience.

THE LATE CAPT. DOUGLAS AND THE DELHI MISSION.—We have to tender an apology to our correspondent on the above subject for the non-insertion of his letter in our last issue. It has been accidentally mislaid, so that we are still unable to publish it. We can, however, assure him that we had no intention of reflecting on Capt. Douglas's character as an officer and a Christian gentleman, and we deeply regret that anything we may have said should have caused even a momentary pang to his widow. By a clerical error, we were made to quote the Archdeacon as our authority, whereas the letter in question was written by Dr. Kay, Principal of Bishop's College, Calcutta. After mentioning the murder of the Rev. Mr. Jennings and of the gentlemen belonging to the Mission, he added:—"Capt. Douglas, too, a warm supporter of the Mission, shared their fate." This letter appeared in the Times of the 15th July, and certainly justifies the remarks we considered it our duty to make.

VOLUNTEERS FOR INDIA.

The atrocities committed by our Mahomedan and Hindoo soldiery have inspired the entire population of these Christian realms with an insatiable thirst for vengeance. No rank, no age, no sex is exempt from this morbid craving for retribution. There is never a linen-draper's apprentice in Holborn that does not shoulder the yard-measure and fancy himself a Sekunder. There is never a walking gentleman in Regent Street that does not cultivate a moustachio and burn to prove himself a Roostum. These heroes of Cockaigne are daily fooled to the top of their bent by a portion of the press, who bid them remember the deeds of the English yeomen at Crecy and at Agincourt. It might be somewhat difficult, indeed, to trace the analogy between the yeomanry of those days and the shopocracy of our own times. Nor would it be more easy to discover any resemblance in the character of the service required of the bold retainers who followed their lord to the field, and that which would now be demanded at the hands of the spruce drapers and adventurous cheesemongers who long to flesh their maiden swords in the bodies of the treacherous sepoys; but these gallant spirits care not to scan too nicely all the circumstances of the exceptional position they seek to occupy and ennoble. It is enough for them to have heard of battles, and to have read in history—as written by Sir Walter Scott or Mr. G. P. R. James—how a simple youth has oft-times won the golden spurs of knighthood, together with the heart and hand of a high-born damsel. Not on the Grampian Hills alone are young Norvals born and bred. They swarm for the nonce in Bond Street, Cheapside, and Tottenham-court Road. Their ardent ranks already fill the columns of the Times with daring aspirations and impracticable suggestions. Give them but an Arab steed and a trusty falchion, they will carve a path to fame, and restore the fading lustre of the brightest jewel in the Imperial crown. Unhappily, we cannot sympathize with all this bombast, or mistake a flourish of penny trumpets for the neighing of the war-horse. We do not deny, that if a brigade of volunteers could at this moment be placed under the command of General Havelock, they might do good service to their country; but many months must elapse before our martial shopmen could reach the scene of action. At least two months would be needed to teach them the manual exercise and the simplest elements of discipline. Other two months would be lost before they could commence their march up-country from Calcutta, and it could not be until six months had expired from their enrolment before they found themselves under the walls of Delhi. By that time volunteers will no longer be required, or if required, will no longer avail. By that time the regular forces will have triumphed over the enemy, or the knell of British supremacy in India will have sounded. Besides, how are these volunteers to be employed? As scouts and intelligencers they will be useless, from their ignorance of the language. As outposts they will not be reliable, from their inexperience of military details. As a battalion in the field they will be less useful than half their number of regular troops, from their inferior training. And as bushrangers they will quickly perish from the effects of the climate and their new mode of life. Volunteers are, undoubtedly, invaluable as a defensive corps when their own country is in danger, and even in offensive operations in a foreign land when there is time to drill and discipline them like regiments of the line; but that is far from being the case in the present instance. To be of any real service, their immediate presence is imperative, but months must pass away before they will be efficient even for garrison duty. And what is the reward they modestly demand? Simply, that they may be placed over the heads of meritorious officers of the regular army. True, they only ask that this honour shall be reserved for those who distinguish themselves. But would they really be satisfied if, on the final suppression of the mutiny, a few ensigns' commissions were distributed among their number? And these, be it remembered, would, on the consequent reduction of the army, be placed on the unattached half-pay list. Having become gentlemen by the sword, they could no longer live by wielding the yard-measure, and then, perchance they might sigh for the happy days when, as gaily apparelled gents, they smoked their mild Hawannahs on Ampstead Heath, or danced Partisan quadrilles on the "Platform Monstre" of Cremorne. In truth, the occasion calls for no such Brummagem warriors, the British army asks the aid of no such auxiliary corps. There are regiments of well-trained militia ready to volunteer, to a man, for service in India, and to accept as a reward the privilege of remaining there. Such volunteers as these we hold in the highest respect; but we protest against any Germanized innovations in the constitution of the British army. It may very possibly differ in many respects from the Continental armies it has hitherto almost invariably defeated; but until victory deserts its colours, we cannot recognize the expediency of imitating those armies it has so seldom encountered without vanquishing. Let our peasants and artisans continue to recruit the ranks with a patient, courageous, and hardy soldiery; let the aristocracy continue to supply officers as distinguished for their chivalrous valour as for their courteous and gentlemanly demeanour; and we care not if the British army continue to differ from the most perfect German model, even though it were the model of Saxe-Coburg Gotha.

OUR FUTURE POLICY.

SINCE the issue of our last number, a discussion has been carried on in the Times newspaper, which has excited much attention. A correspondent, under the signature "P.," took up the question of the future policy of this country towards India much in the same spirit in which we have treated it in successive articles. He pointed out that the real source of the discontent and disaffection which produced the general revolt of our native army, was the apprehension felt by the sepoys of a systematic design to make them Christians, and that this feeling was common to both Hindoos and Mussulmans, excited, perhaps, amongst the former, by emissaries of the Dharma Subha, and worked upon afterwards by agents of deposed sovereigns and of disappointed or injured chiefs and princes, so as to take the turn of a conspiracy and rebellion for the re-establishment of a native dynasty: the only assigned motive, however, for throwing off the Angréz ka Raj, or sovereignty of England, being this fear of conversion, either by direct proselytizing, or by indirect measures of education and progress, "P." argued that it behoved us to be cautious not to fall into a policy that would justify the designs thus imputed, and so bring the entire population of India to take up the same impression that had driven our sepoy army to revolt. He represented, as we have done more than once, that such a spirit in the people at large would be a much more difficult thing to deal with than a disjointed rise, such as we had seen, of segment after regiment, without combined action or any leader to direct the movement; that it would make administration quite impossible, and place in jeopardy and peril the life and property of every European in India, whether functionary or free settler; that the true policy of the nation was to seek to restore confidence, instead of adopting measures sure to alienate and increase mistrust, and of the effects of which we had now such sad experience: and this writer in the Times clenched his argument by referring to the Governor-General's recent proclamation, pledging this nation to the same non-interference with caste and creed that had characterized the past policy of the Government towards its native subjects. This proclamation having been approved and confirmed by the authorities empowered to speak for the public of this country, was a declaration and pledge for the future precluding the possibility of change: therefore, that the advocates for measures of a more Christian character than heretofore (meaning a more direct encouragement of proselytizing, and more adverse legislation against caste and against customs repugnant to our ideas), and those who agitated for education with the Bible read and scripture lessons taught in public schools supported from the State revenue, were seeking to lead the Government to commit a breach of faith, and laying the Governor-General and the public officers of India open to the charge of treachery and deceit,—a course destructive to confidence and fatal to their influence and position in the country they were sent to govern.

Now this is exactly the line of argument we have been endeavouring to enforce; and strongly have we entered our protest against the cry that has been raised from the pulpit and from the press, exciting the people of this country to take up the question of the present mutinies in a fanatical spirit, and to make them a reason for raising the banner of the Cross, and for avowing the determination to do everything possible, short of absolute compulsion, to make the whole population of India Christian. We can excuse indiscreet ebullitions of religious zeal in the young curates who for the most part filled the pulpits of London on the recent day of humiliation for the deplorable consequences of the mutiny; but that the writers of editorial articles for the leading journals of this metropolis should forget their state-craft, in order to fall in with the impulses of the day, promoted by a party habitually given to raising cries to mislead—that these men should become the advocates of a breach of the national faith—that we should see the Times, the Morning Post, and other journals of wide circulation, advocating a change of policy in the Government to more Christianity and less of non-interference—and never one of them even noticing the proclamation of the Governor-General pledging the Government to no change, does indeed astonish us.

We have returned to the subject in order prominently to draw attention to the manner in which the discussion thus opened, under the signature "P.," has been treated in the Times. Each of the two letters of this correspondent was met on the following day by a leading article, not answering nor attempting to answer the arguments he brought forward, nor noticing at all the fact that the Government of India had, by proclamation, pledged itself to make no change of its policy, and had declared it never had intended to do so, but urging that the policy of non-interference and of respect for the customs and religions of the country had manifestly failed, of which failure the existing mutinies were proof; therefore that it behoved us to abandon that policy, and to try another with more encouragement to Christianity and less of respect for the native creeds. No one accustomed to deal with Indian questions could fail to see the shallowness of this mode of treating the subject. The logic of it stands thus:—The sepoys have cast off their allegiance and mutinied, and murdered man, woman, and child of the race that had entertained and paid them, because they feared they were going to be made Christians; therefore, in order to maintain and confirm the people at large in their allegiance, show them that you really do entertain the design so imputed to you by the sepoys unjustly. Now, unreasonable as this seems, we cannot say it is un-English. We have heard indeed an anecdote of our soldiers before Delhi which is all-fours with it in spirit. On the day of the attack upon the position outside the city, then occupied by the mutineers but now our own, a party of our troops surprised a number of sepoys in an inclosure, and they, seeing escape to be impossible, threw down their arms. Our soldiers, in their then fury at the recent atrocities committed at Meerut and Delhi, not content with taking their lives, which were justly forfeit, drew from their pouches a number of greased cartridges and made each of the victims swallow one before he was bayoneted. No reasonable man will attempt to justify this act of vengeance; yet is it not much the same in spirit as the course the Times advocates? "You are afraid of being made Christians, are you?" it says to the natives of India; "our conduct and policy make you fear this. Take and swallow more of these obnoxious measures, whether you like them or no." The insanity of the course lies in this; that this forcible swallowing of obnoxious measures is recommended, not as a punishment as applied by the rough soldiers, but as a means of conciliating and restoring confidence, and of maintaining allegiance and safely conducting our future administration of the country.

But pass we from the shallow reasoning of these articles. "P." was answered also by many correspondents of the Times, the most prominent of whom was a writer under the signature of "An Anglo-Indian of the New School." This advocate for the introduction of more Christianity into the Indian Government, attacked boldly the traditional policy which "P." had maintained we were bound to adhere to. That policy he declared to have produced no good hitherto, to have failed in its end of conciliating, as evidenced by the mutinies; and he further attempted to show it to be inconsistent, because, when Lord Glenelg was President of the Board of Control, a despatch went out declaring the Government not to be bound to maintain rites and customs based on a religion we did not believe, when they were injurious in a civil or social point of view, which was a justification of the policy of interference which he only desired to be carried further. But most of all, this writer impugned the old traditionary policy as not being content with pure neutrality in matters of religion, but requiring further a practical abnegation of Christianity.

Incidentally this writer referred by name to Colonel Sykes as supporting the opinions advocated by "P.;" whereupon he was answered by that "E. I. Director and M. P." in a letter under his own name, which brought forth a letter from Mr. J. L. Thomas, late member of Council at Madras, avowing himself to be the author of the letter signed "Anglo-Indian of the New School," and citing facts and instances which he conceived to warrant his assertion that the old traditionary policy of non-interference with religion involved an abnegation of Christianity.

There was no answer in the Times from "P." to this and other letters on the same side. We cannot suppose that one who had shown himself so conversant with the subject in all its bearings would have retired from the controversy for lack of arguments; we must rather conclude that the Times, having taken its own side upon the question, has refused to give space in its columns for anything more on the other side. Let us then examine these arguments and assertions of Mr. Thomas, and see how far they will stand the test of such an examination, or the contrary.

He denies first that the traditionary policy of non-interference has been productive of good. Surely he cannot mean that the acquisition of India for the British nation is no good result of this policy, and that it is nothing to have maintained armies of different races and religions in perfect discipline and allegiance for more than one hundred years, and to have made them the instruments for establishing this dominion? Will Mr. Thomas or any Anglo-Indian deny that this was a fruit of the policy of non-interference with religion, and of the confidence felt by those who so served and obeyed, that the customs and traditions and faiths they prized were safe from any effort of the Government to effect a change or otherwise to interfere with them? Mr. Thomas cannot be so ignorant of Indian history as not to be able to contrast this policy with that of the Portuguese, whose victories under Albuquerque gained them no footing or political influence in India, only because that nation raised the banner of the cross, and made converts of all they conquered. But Mr. Thomas, like the Times editorial, refers to the fact of the present mutinies in evidence of the failure of this traditionary policy. He knows, however, that the reply is ready; namely, that the influence of the proselytizing party on the one hand, and of the men of progress on the other, has led to measures, if not implying a change of that policy, at least leading to the suspicion and well-grounded fear that it was to be changed, and that this produced the mutinies, and not the policy to which we did not strictly adhere.

This brings us to Mr. Thomas's chief argument, which we shall put for him in the strongest shape we believe it capable of taking. "What," he says, "was this traditionary policy of non-interference? Under it you put down suttee and infanticide, and were warranted by Lord Glenelg's letter in attacking everything injurious to society. We ask you only to persevere in this course, carrying your measures of progress and of education a little further in the direction of Christianity. All we insist upon is, that there shall no longer be an abnegation of Christianity, that is to say, disfavour shown to converts, and prohibition to proselytizing and to scripture teaching in schools supported by Government." Mr. Thomas will not deny that his argument is here stated fairly and for the best. Before we deal with it, we must examine what he means by the charge of an abnegation of Christianity, which he has thus brought against the old traditionary policy. In this letter, under his own signature, he has cited instances, at the head of which stands the fact that a sepoy of the Bengal army was expelled, as he calls it, from the ranks, because he had sought Christian baptism.

This charge was repeated and largely preached upon from the pulpits of the metropolis on the day of Humiliation, and not a few of the more inflamed zealots treated the mutinies, with all their atrocities, as a judgment on the wicked East-India Company, for having so long pursued an unchristian policy, and so treated converts to Christianity. Now, how stand the facts? The frequent reference made to this case has produced a publication of the papers connected with it in the Times of last Saturday. It appears that so far back as in 1819, it was reported to Lord Hastings that a naik or corporal of a native infantry regiment had applied to the Rev. Mr. Fisher, at Meerut, to be baptized, professing himself to have adopted Christianity from sincere conviction. Mr. Fisher had acceded to his application, and there was much excitement in consequence in the native regiment to which he belonged. An inquiry was ordered, the native officers were assembled by the commanding officer, and the result communicated to the Government. Was the naik in consequence expelled, that is dismissed, and deprived of his bread, and so made a martyr to his new faith? No such thing; he continued for the rest of his life to be borne on the roll of his regiment, and to receive his full pay and batta, without being required to render any equivalent service. He lived and died at Meerut as a sepoy on leave, not allowed to join his regiment, because of the feeling entertained towards him by his fellow-soldiers, and because he was no longer of the class of men of which the regiment consisted. Instead of being a martyr for his new religion, he was especially favoured, and so favoured merely because he was looked upon as a sincere convert to Christianity. But he would rather have continued in the ranks and done duty as a soldier, yet was not permitted. Why should this be? No one at all acquainted with the constitution of an army will impute blame to the Government of 1819 for relieving a corps from the presence of one whose remaining gave offence to his fellow-soldiers, and was a ground of irritation or excitement. If ever the feeling of the men of a native regiment, whether Sikh or Goorkha, or Hindoostanee, should be such as to make them indifferent to the tenets and faith of those who stand with them shoulder to shoulder in the ranks, then of course there will be no reason for taking notice of any change of religion in a comrade; and assuredly there would, under no policy, present or future, be objection raised on the ground of conversion to Christianity, unless it was taken by the men of the regiment. But it is the deference shown in this instance to the sentiment of the Hindoos and Moslems, that is objected to as an abnegation of Christianity. Is it not, however, just the same thing as the objection that would be made to enlisting a native Christian in a corps of Hindoostanees? and what difference is there between such an objection and the objection to enlist a negro in a regiment of the Guards, otherwise than as big drum? Will this be cried out against as illiberal and unchristian? The Hindoostanee sepoys say: "Let this man, who is now a native Christian, enlist, or be transferred to a corps of Topases or native Christians; ours is a corps of Hindoostanees, and he is no longer one of us." It is unfortunate that the men should have such prejudices, and we believe they are at the present day by no means so strong as they were in 1819—thanks for this to the consideration shown by the Government under its old traditionary policy, and to the effect of non-interference in promoting liberality of sentiment—still, while they exist, they must be deferred to, as they were in this instance. Discipline and a good feeling in corps can never be maintained without some management and consideration for the feelings of the men commanded. Vellore and the present Bengal mutinies are examples never to be forgotten, of the consequences of refusing all consideration for such feelings—prejudices, if you will so call them, when entertained by the men you train and discipline as soldiers.

We maintain that the course pursued towards the sepoy convert of 1819 was no abnegation of Christianity, and had nothing to do therewith; it was a mere question of military discretion and management, and only so far connected with Christianity as that the feeling against the man in the corps had its origin in his conversion. The removal from the ranks would have been equally necesnary if the same feeling had been produced by any other cause; but in that case he would have been much less favoured than he was because of his conversion.

Mr. Thomas's next instance of abnegation is the salutes fired heretofore from British fortresses on the occasion of Hindoo and Mussulman festivals. These things never had place among the practices of Bengal, and have for some time been discontinued at Madras. They were remnants of the old time, when our relations with the Nawab of Arcot and Rajah of Tanjore stood on quite a different footing from any that have been established with the princes of India since the battle of Plassey. Seeing that they were discontinued in the time of the old traditionary policy, we wonder at Mr. Thomas referring to them; but it may be his object to swell a false cry, and pander to a particular party's view, and not to elicit truth and establish sound maxims of policy.

Again, the offerings to idols in the name of the Government, and grants from the treasury for idolatrous rites at times of famine and drought, and the connection of Government with Hindoo and other temples. These, Mr. Thomas knows, have all been discontinued for some time, in deference to the strong feeling against them excited by the evangelical party in this country. But how were they ever abnegations of Christianity? We entered into the contest for dominion in India proffering ourselves to the population as better stewards of their revenue, and better able to use it for their protection and benefit, than any previous rulers or any rival competitors. We were received by the people as such, and they readily paid to us what heretofore they had paid to Hindoo or Mussulman rulers. We took the revenue as it stood, encumbered by the obligation to maintain temples and to pay for rites established and desired to be maintained by those who paid us that revenue. Would it have been wise—would it have been just—to do violence to all those local feelings, and to tell the population, that, stewards as we were of their revenue, we could not reconcile it to ourselves to make any payment out of it for objects to which they attached religious weight? The time might, and eventually did come, when these, or some of them, were capable of being discontinued without exciting a bad feeling; but under the old traditionary policy, it was clearly wise and proper to wait till that time arrived.

The prohibition to making the Bible a class book in Government schools, and to reading and teaching the scriptures to Hindoo and Mussulman scholars in such seminaries, is the next fact referred to by Mr. Thomas as an abnegation of Christianity. But little weight will be attached to this in a country where, in the schools for Christian youths supported by this Christian Government, no Bible or religious instruction of any kind can be allowed, because of the differences between sects of Christians, and their fear that the instruction would be made a means of educating the youths to the particular tenets of the preceptor; much more justly may Hindoo and Moslem fathers fear that the religion of their children would be undermined, were the scripture of another faith made a class book of ordinary instruction in the schools to which they were invited to send them.

There is only one other point to be noticed, and we have done then with the charge that the traditionary policy of non-interference implied an abnegation of Christianity. Mr. Thomas complains that proselytizing civil servants have been proscribed and held out to the natives of India as offenders, and he refers especially to a despatch discountenancing and prohibiting their joining missionary societies or subscribing for purposes of conversion. Surely Mr. Thomas would not advocate the Government avowing one course of policy and permitting their high functionaries and servants openly and in the face of the world to contravene and subvert that policy. Unfortunately too many men of this proselytizing school have latterly found their way into high places; men who have proclaimed it to be their mission to convert, and who profess that their duty to God must override the obligation to follow out the policy prescribed by those they serve in India. We have seen too much of this in the conduct of Colonel Wheler, and its consequences, to think that the public of England is prepared to approve of such double-faced proceedings. We recollect some of these over-pious functionaries avowing that they could not reconcile it to their religious feelings and convictions to administer oaths according to the forms of religions which they deemed false. Would the advocates of the policy of making our Government more Christian have yielded to this conscientious scruple, and desired the oaths to be taken on the Bible, whether it was believed or no? or will they admit that the non-interfering Government did wisely in immediately removing these men from the judicial office? There is but one rule and one principle for any government; and that is, to lay down its policy and to require all its servants to carry it out, regarding as a resignation, and removing every servant who contravenes it, or considers it as not consistent with his individual opinions and convictions. Much of the mischief—but that is far too mild a word—much of the horrors, disasters, and atrocities we have witnessed in India, must be set down to the easy fatuity of the Government in permitting men like Colonel Wheler to use the authority of their position and influence to do the precise thing which the Government had pledged itself not to do. Hence the mistrust, and the suspicion, and the charge against the Government of designs to convert, covertly entertained, though openly disavowed.

But Mr. Thomas, under the signature of "An Anglo-Indian of the New School," declared that it was of no use proclaiming and professing even neutrality in matters of religion, because so long as we were seen to be Christians, and promoted measures of progress, we should not be believed. Both the Hindoos and the Moslem, he said, must see, and indeed were already convinced, that education and intelligence were sure to undermine the existing religions, and so to lead to the people becoming Christian. Sorry indeed should we be to believe that the distrust engendered by past proceedings is such, and so deeply rooted, that the British nation and its Government in India can hope for no credence in any avowal of policy, no trust in any pledges it may give in matters of religion. We know the contrary of this to be the case, and we believe the bulk of the population of India to be fully convinced that the Government is to be trusted in its declaration of no intention to interfere with religion, and no design to change its traditionary policy. Therefore has that population taken no part with the sepoys in revolt—therefore have they assisted in apprehending and giving up the mutineers to justice—and God forbid that they should be so misled by writers such as this Mr. Thomas, or by missionaries and proselytizers and others, who proclaim it to be the mission of England to make India Christian, as to be brought to believe this nation and its Government to be thoroughly dishonest, professing one thing while they intend another. We have not yet come to this state, notwithstanding Mr. Thomas's efforts to produce it.

But the spread of intelligence and the measures of progress which must still be promoted even according to our views, these, it is urged, will always be looked upon with mistrust, and regarded as means and instruments of conversion. How get over that impression? We deny that any intelligent Hindoo or Moslem would object to scientific instruction on the ground that the truths of science were opposed to many articles of his faith or superstitious belief. Men of these religions are as keen seekers of knowledge, and equally acute reasoners, as any Christian professor of mathematics, chemistry, or political economy. The truths of these sciences they receive as Christians did the evidence that the earth moved round the sun, though supposed at the time to contravene Scripture. Their belief will be modified—their opinions will be made more liberal, by their minds being opened to these new convictions; the Hindoos will become like the enlightened Ram Mohun Roy, or the equally intelligent Dwarkeanath Thakoor, Vedantists. The faith in the Koran will be purified by new interpretations suited to the growth of intelligence; but we do not find that this teaching of science necessarily leads to the adoption of Christianity. If the belief is spreading amongst the natives, that, in promoting the spread of knowledge and the growth of intelligence, the Government has the design of converting to Chris-tion, we owe that consequence to the indiscreet preachings and misrepresentations of missionaries and proselytizers. We have now before us the letter of a regimental colonel (the only one whose corps is still faithful and has been left with its arms), and he, after attributing the blame of the horrors witnessed to the zeal of proselytizers, expresses wonder that the Government did not prohibit the missionaries from wandering about and committing such "imprudences." "To give an instance," he adds, "of one of this fraternity at Benares, it will suffice to say that, when preaching in the public bazaar, and holding forth on the excellence of the Christian creed, he added:—The college which you see just finished is the great tree of knowledge, from whence the true religion is to spring, when you all will have your eyes opened. You will then knock down your temples, which the Devil has been permitted to raise for a while, and you will then all become Christians. To this end is our great mission." Can it be wondered at, if the unenlightened followers of the old superstitions should view education, and progress with distrust when it is so held up to them by these zealots? But we maintain that, in spite of these injudicious attempts to pervert and mislead the public mind upon the subject, there is no refusal in the population at large to seek knowledge and to master the sciences, through fear of religion being undermined. Let measures for this end be followed out honestly and with discretion, according to the rules and principles of the old traditional policy, and the population will still flock with confidence to the Government seminaries of education; and European civilization may yet be introduced without infringing on the observances, customs, and beliefs of either Hindu or Moslem, leaving each free to follow the leading of his own conscience and convictions, unbiassed by any influence or act of authority.

One word more and we have done. The advocates of this so-called Christian policy hold out that, while encouraging by all means conversion to Christianity, they will yet practise impartiality and perfect toleration. Will the public of England be content to hand over India to these zealous proselytizers, and believe that they will deal fairly with those who refuse to listen to their teaching? Is it in history—is it in human nature—that men with such convictions should be liberal and impartial in their judgments and proceedings, when questions of religion have to be decided and the interests of opposing sects come into collision? The people of England may depend upon it that there is only one safe course by which to re-establish confidence and maintain the national dominion in India; and that is, sternly to require that the Government shall not only be neutral and non-interfering with the religion of its subjects, but shall treat their faith, and customs, and observances, with the respect that is due to the knowledge that they are held in reverence and dearly prized by the bulk of the population which has accepted this nation for rulers.

THE INVALID ESTABLISHMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—Permit me to draw your attention to the new Invalid Regulations. Perhaps you are not aware that the establishment is now divided into,

"1st. The invalid battalion. For officers who, although disqualified from further active service, are still equal to the discharge of garrison duties.

"2nd. The invalid pension list. For officers disqualified for both active and garrison duties."

Officers of the invalid battalion are available to be sent anywhere, where detachments of the Veteran Battalions are posted, and where Superintendents of pensioners are required—mostly hot stations, that is, stations in the plains. Officers of the Pension List may reside where they please, in India. So far, so good. But now mark the difference between the two sets of officers. The pay of the latter is reduced to a minimum on which no gentleman can subsist in this country, while that of the former remains as before. The following is the scale laid down for the Pension List:—Lieut. col., Rs. 200 a month; major, 170; captain, 130; lieutenant, 100. Or the rate of full-pay pension to which they are entitled at the time of their transfer to the Invalid Pension List. Thus, after twenty or thirty years' service, an officer may suddenly, and without any fault on his part, be reduced to a worse social condition than when he commenced his career. The allowance to a lieutenant-colonel is only ensign's pay, and it is notorious that very few ensigns can contrive to make the two ends meet. How, then, can a man of superior rank, very likely burdened with a rising family, be expected to maintain even the appearance of respectability on such a miserable pittance? These Regulations act with peculiar severity against captains, who may be transferred to the Pension List before they have served their time for full-pay pension, and they are evidently excluded from counting service after their transfer. Those of the invalid battalion, on the other hand, are permitted to complete their service for the full pension of their rank, as has always been the case. Thus runs the order:—"Officers of the invalid battalion may retire on the pension of their rank after the prescribed period of service, or on the pension to which they were entitled on their removal to the invalid establishment. Officers on the Invalid Pension List may retire upon the rate of pension to which they were entitled when they joined that establishment." In these days of slow promotion lieutenant-colonels and majors, with scarcely an exception, have served their twenty-two years in India before they attain to those ranks; but captains and subalterns are not entitled to a pension under twenty years' service to the east of the Cape, and are consequently the greatest sufferers by the new rules. This innovation is, moreover, a breach of faith on the part of the Company. We entered their service with the understanding that, if our health failed, we should be invalided, and allowed to serve out our time in India on the established invalid pay. The Company have no right, therefore, to deprive us of that pay, or to make the rule retrospective. For the future, they are clearly at liberty to make what terms they please with those who have not yet taken service under them. Besides, the number of those who cannot perform garrison duty is so very small, that the savings to the Government will be quite insignificant, and not worth the odium due to illiberality. It is, indeed, hard upon officers whose only fault is that their constitution has broken down in the faithful discharge of their duty, that they should be deprived of their means of livelihood when too old to attempt a different profession. It is to be hoped, therefore, that, when the hardship of this order is pointed out to them, the Court of Directors, with their wonted liberality, will put the few officers who may unfortunately be disqualified even for garrison duty on the same footing, as regards pay and pension, as other invalid officers.

I am aware that the principle of the invalid establishment has been too often abused, and that in some instances the alternative has been offered of standing a court-martial or invaliding; but this abuse might surely be guarded against without running into the other extreme. Greater and more stringent precautions might be taken before admitting an officer upon the establishment; but the misconduct of a few is no excuse for injustice to the many.

Your obedient Servant,

A MADRAS FIELD OFFICER.

STAFF IN INDIA.

The Herald has authority for stating that the following is the last list settled for the staff in India. It will be seen that all the officers of which it is composed are men who have given distinguished proofs of their ability:—

BENGAL.

Commander-in-Chief, Sir Colin Campbell. Chief of the Staff, Major-General Mansfield. Lieut.-Generals: Beresford, from Madras; Ashburnham, from China. Major-Generals Wyndham, Havelock, Sir Robert Garrett (from China), Cotton. Dupuis commands the Royal Artillery. A major-general of cavalry remains yet to be selected. Deputy Adjutant-General, Packenham. Deputy Quarter-Master-General, Wetherall.

MADRAS.

Sir Patrick Grant, Commander-in-Chief. Major-General, Craigie.

BOMBAY.

Lieutenant-General, Somerset. Major-General, Sir Hugh Rose. Major-General Van Stau Benzee remains to command the forces at Hong Kong.

It is calculated that there is a general officer for every 5,000 men. This gives a force of 85,000 men for the whole of India.

DIRECT CADETS.—The following gentlemen passed the required examination for direct cadets on the 6th of October:—G. D. Bengin, Geo. Chrystie, Alex. England, John Finnis, F. F. Leslie, G. E. Harris, A. J. Hes, A. F. Orchard, J. E. B. Rogers, D. J. K. Sangster, and A. J. Wallace.

DIRECT ARTILLERY CADETS.—An examination took place at the East-India House, on the 13th inst., of fifteen gentlemen who had obtained nominations as direct artillery cadets. The examiners, Maj.-Gen. Sir F. Smith, Lieut. T. Cooke, R.N., and the Rev. J. Cope, A.M., reported ten to have passed the examination, viz.:—E. Pottinger, Tillard, B. Pottinger, Low, Jackson, Grierson, Gillies, Clark, Abbot, and Hoyland.

EXPORTATION OF ARMS TO INDIA FROM THE CONTINENT.—According to Prussian journals, public notice has been given by the diplomatic agents of England in Germany and Belgium, that the introduction of firearms will no longer be permitted in India. The gunmakers of Liege and the German States have been driving of late a roaring trade with Calcutta, and are unprepared for the prohibition.

TWO CASES OF TORTURE AND EXTORTION in the district of Coimbatore have recently been brought to the notice of the Madras Government. In the first case the offenders were the monigar and moonsiff monigar of the village of Elatoor in Jattimungalum. Their names were respectively Timma Gounden and Oochoo Veera Gounden. It would appear that they entered after dark the houses of four villagers, tied their hands, carried them to the choultry, and kept them in confinement for five days. They in addition severely beat one of their prisoners. The four villagers were only released from confinement after the payment of ten rupees to the monigar. The magistrates of Coimbatore for the above offence fined the monigar thirty rupees, compelled him to restore the sum extorted from the villagers, and dismissed him from his office. The moonsiff was fined twenty rupees and reprimanded. In the second case of torture the offenders were the monigar of the village of Cooppanandum Polliem in the Coimbatore talook and another official. It would appear that they trumped up a false charge against one Roodna Bozen of stealing some coin. At midnight they came to search his house with two chucklers. They were unsuccessful in their search. Accordingly they returned to the master of the house, whom they had tied up, and upon his persisting in declaring his innocence mounted the chuckler, low caste men, upon his back and compelled him to run about with them, flogging him at the same time with a string of leather so severely that it eventually broke in pieces. They then confined the man for two days and demanded six rupees, which however he refused to give. Eventually he was set at liberty. The monigar was fined forty rupees, and dismissed, while the second prisoner was fined thirty rupees, and in default, sentenced to twenty-five days' imprisonment.

INDIAN MUTINY RELIEF FUND.—We are happy to learn that the committee are not relaxing their efforts either for the augmentation of this fund or for the prompt relief of the sufferers. Ten thousand pounds were transmitted to the Relief Committee of Calcutta by the mail which left on the 10th instant. At the same time they sent the further sum of 1,000*l.* to Sir John Lawrence, in aid of the funds of the Lawrence Asylum. This institution was established by the late Sir Henry Lawrence, who subscribed 1,000*l.* annually to its support. It has also received support from the subscriptions and donations of civil and military officers in India. Many of these sources of income have been temporarily, and many more finally, dried up by the calamities which have recently occurred. The asylum is situated at Kussowlee, in the lower ranges of the Himalayas, and its object is to supply maintenance and education to the children of British soldiers who have lost either one or both of their parents.—Times.

INDIAN PAMPHLETS.

What is to be done with the Bengal Army? By QUI HI. Effingham Wilson.

QUI HI is a bitter and acrimonious writer. He himself acknowledges the acerbity of his feelings, which he ascribes to the neglect and obscurity under which his modest merits have been allowed to languish. He appears to have been slighted by all the authorities, both civil and military, and has consequently nothing to say in favour of any one but himself. Even his brother officers fall under his displeasure, and are represented as being either themselves blackguards, or the willing companions of such. For himself, he preferred the solitude of detachment duty, and thus became better acquainted with the native character than is usually the case with Bengal officers—according to "Qui Hi." Without pausing to comment on the singularly bad taste that impels this pamphleteer to malign his former comrades as habitual drunkards, gamblers, and swindlers, we shall briefly notice the few topics on which he expresses opinions worthy either of refutation or support. Against Lord Dalhousie he cherishes an animosity so keen that he cannot even take the trouble to be accurate in his charges. Thus, when alluding to the awkward affair between the commandant of the 6th N.I. and Mr. Cockburn, of the civil service, he condemns the late Governor-General for not having indorsed the "wiggling" that gentleman received from his immediate superiors—unmindful of the fact that it was Lord Canning who then sat at the head of the Indian Government. His lordship's great fault he alleges to have been dishonesty as a statesman, mingled with avarice. And yet he does not appear to object so much to his lordship's policy, as to his neglect in securing sufficient means for carrying it out. Had he possessed a fuller knowledge of the constitution and requirements of the Bengal army, he might have used it as a "safe tool for supporting him in any course of injustice that did not affect its own interests—in the spoliation of every semi-independent rajah, or in spunging out the entire national debt." But Lord Dalhousie was only half a despot. He had still some regard for right, he still entertained some scruples about employing the minor portion of the community to oppress the majority. He even attached some value to financial considerations, and was anxious to make India profitable also in a pecuniary point of view. We shall probably be pardoned for not undertaking the refutation of such peculiar charges against the representative of a constitutional sovereign; and likewise for giving an entire assent to "Qui Hi's" proposition that the Governor-General should be a man possessed of Indian experience. We perfectly agree with him that in the ranks of the Company's civil and military officers may be found many men better calculated to govern India with wisdom, than the needy aristocrats who are sent out from this country to fill their exhausted coffers. But we do not quite perceive how this agrees with his subsequent recommendation to invest the entire government in the Crown, and to annihilate the Court of Directors. It seems more reasonable to expect a larger influx of poor cadets of noble houses, who would remain in the East no longer than was absolutely necessary for the accumulation of a certain amount of pelf. "Qui Hi," however, cannot see anything beyond the army. In his eyes, the sole object of government is to maintain an immense armed force, all the officers of which should belong to the staff corps. This idea pervades and vitiates his entire pamphlet, and neutralises whatever advantage might otherwise be derived from some of his suggestions for the re-organization of the Bengal army. The following extract contains the most sensible remark to be found throughout his ninety-six pages of querulous fault-finding:—

"If the fall of heathenism in India be a mere question of time, it is equally certain that the masses there must have some religion; and common sense suggests the policy of trying to bind them to us by a common faith, even were this not our imperative duty as Christians. It is notorious that the most disaffected of our native subjects are the philosophical Calcutta baboos, and, but for the cowardice inherent in every Bengalee, they would be the most dangerous. A consistent and manly policy is, therefore, not merely right, but expedient. Let us dismiss all missionary officers, civil or military,—preaching is not their vocation; and to these weak-minded zealots who neglect their legitimate duties, disobey the Government, and embarrass its action by this abuse of its authority, I would show no mercy. But, while punishing impertinent interlopers, let every encouragement be afforded to legitimate labourers," &c. &c. &c.

A Glance at the East. By A RETIRED BENGAL CIVILIAN. L. Booth.

THE writer of this little pamphlet appears to have retired from the Bengal civil service so long since as to have forgotten the plural of Mussulman. He always speaks of them as Mussulmen, —would he call their wives and daughters Mussulwomen? It is also a little startling to learn that "want of prestige and misgovernment are synonymous;" especially as we are told in the next sentence that "the former is brought about by the latter." The fact is undoubtedly, but we do not quite understand how things that stand to one another in the relation of cause and effect, can be likewise synonymous. Equally unhappy is the inquiry—put by way of illustration,—“How would the people of England like their important business to be referred to India or China, for the authorities there to determine upon?” In other words, How would the people of England like to be subject to the King of Delhi or the Emperor of China? So long as we happen to stand in the position of masters of India, and do not propose to render the Governor-General entirely independent, it is quite clear that reference must continue to be made to the home Government on all questions of vital importance. The pamphleteer, having retired from the service of the Company, has made the notable discovery that the civil servants of that Company—probably judging of his fellow-labourers by himself—have not administered the public business in a manner to deserve the commendation, or justify the confidence, of their countrymen. He therefore proposes to abolish the Court of Directors, and to replace them by “one governing head in India, and one responsible controlling head in England.” He is in favour, however, of the expediency of retaining Haileybury College, and sensibly remarks that, “by a residence in it, its future rulers become acquainted with each other, and bonds of friendship and union are cemented which work well, not only for themselves in a foreign land, but for the people and the service in which they are engaged.” Not less judicious are his views with regard to the manner of men best adapted for the civil administration of India. The best man is not always the one who has carried off the greatest number of marks at a public competition, and exhibited a familiarity with the classic languages for which he will have no further use. Urgent duty often requires an Indian magistrate suddenly to mount his horse and ride forty, fifty, or even a hundred miles, with the least possible delay. A bookworm would find this much harder work than writing Greek Iambics, or tracing the derivation of some obsolete word. Knowledge of the native dialects, some acquaintance with practical science, good manners and gentlemanly deportment, and persevering industry, combined with a healthy and vigorous frame, constitute the real requirements of an Indian civilian. And these qualifications have certainly been possessed to a very unusual degree by the servants of the Company for many years past. The faulty point in the system has been the paucity, not the character, of the Government officials. Add, then, to their numbers, but do not subvert a system that has hitherto worked so well; for, assuredly, the civilians are not responsible for the mutiny of the Bengal troops.

Colonization, Defence, and Railways in our Indian Empire. By HYDE CLARKE. John Weale.

THERE is an ancient and well-known fable, that illustrates the impossibility of pleasing all parties. While one section of the community inveighs against the East-India Company for monopolizing the public works in India, another attacks them with still greater animosity for leaving too much to private enterprise. We must admit, however, that Mr. Hyde Clarke, who belongs to the latter party, is a courteous and gentlemanly opponent, though too exacting in his demands on the public purse of the Company. In this country, nearly all men are agreed as to the unadvisability of Government interference with private undertakings. And yet it is the fashion to abuse the Court of Directors, because they would not plunge into inextricable debt, in order to construct works which should rather have been due to British capital and enterprise. One adventurer is clamorous because the Government will not build him a silk-factory, and guarantee him against all loss; another demands money and labourers, to enable him to work a mine or cut down a forest; a third is dissatisfied that he cannot appropriate some thousands of acres, rent free, for the cultivation of tea, cotton, jute, or indigo. A new element of discontent is now furnished by railway projectors, engineers, contractors, and speculators. The surface of Hindostan is to be covered with a network of railroads, connecting all sort of places that have no desire to be connected, and even running some thousands of feet up the Himalayan mountains. The result proposed is the introduction and location of 50,000 English colonists on the hills, easy and rapid communication between the head of the Government and all his subordinates, and the cheap and speedy conveyance of the produce of the soil. No doubt all these objects are very desirable, and may even be possible of attainment, but it is also possible that they cannot be attained without an outlay of public funds which the present circumstances of the country would by no means justify. It is easy to allege that the grant of 100,000*l.* a-year would suffice for the completion of any particular line, but we have had too much reason to be incredulous as to the accuracy of railway calculations, to permit us to accept this statement without hesitation. And even if it should prove mathematically correct, what is to be the limit to aid thus afforded? How many lines are to be assisted? How many private undertakings publicly supported?

India: the Revolt, and the Home Government. Robert Hardwicke.

THIS is by far the most sensible pamphlet on Indian affairs that has appeared since the commencement of the mutiny. The anonymous writer is evidently well-acquainted with the subject he has undertaken to illustrate, and is therefore able to speak with decision and authority where others darkly insinuate or feebly suggest, only too happy to cover their presumptuous ignorance beneath a load of turgid and unmeaning phraseology. The impertinent petition of certain third-rate lawyers and merchants residing in the city of Calcutta, is very summarily disposed of, and its gross misrepresentations ably refuted. The recent Act to restrain the licence of the Indian press is shown to have been necessitated by the seditious scurrility of the native, and the reckless antagonism of the English, journalists. The most experienced Indian statesmen, including Lord Metcalfe himself, have agreed in pointing out the contingencies that might arise to require the temporary suspension of the liberty of the press. The case thus foreshown has now actually occurred, and Lord Canning has acted in strict conformity with the opinions expressed by the ablest Indian authorities. In answer to the vulgar outcry against the Court of Directors and the double government of India, the constitution of the Court is explained, and also the true working of the system, whence it appears that, if there be any defects in the machinery, they are not to be imputed to Leadenhall Street. Even Lord Ellenborough, whose prejudices assuredly do not lie in favour of the Court, has freely acknowledged the beneficial distribution of its patronage, and the advantages derived from the mingled elements of its composition. It cannot be denied that a certain amount of delay in the despatch of business may sometimes arise from the double government; but, the more India is governed in India itself, the less will this evil be felt. By placing the Government of India in direct relation with the House of Commons, the danger is to be apprehended that questions of administration may be converted into political capital and degenerate into party war-cries. Mr. Disraeli has already favoured the public with a foretaste of what may fairly be anticipated, when an unscrupulous leader and an ambitious faction are struggling for power and place. The native mind of India is not fit for the agitation and excitement of parliamentary warfare. The only individuals who would really profit by such an innovation would be a limited number of sharp practitioners and needy barristers, rendered callous by the urgent want of briefs. “The native mind would be kept in a continual ferment, and the Government would be despised for its supposed impotence.” But whatever difference of opinion may exist on other points, there can be none as to the advisability of appointing “men of ability, activity, and wisdom,” to the command of the Indian armies. The Horse Guards, however, can with difficulty be induced to send out other than effete old gentlemen, whose only recommendation is their genteel poverty, and an experience which they have outlived. The Court of Directors are free from blame on this head, for they have ever strenuously remonstrated against the abuse of patronage perpetrated by the chief military authorities in this country. No doubt many causes have combined to produce the present insurrection, but “it is worse than folly to lay them to the charge of the East-India Company, which, after winning the country, handed it over to the Crown, and now shares with the Government the administration of its affairs.” In conclusion, we strongly recommend an attentive perusal of this little pamphlet to all who sincerely desire to form a correct judgment upon the existing phase of Indian affairs.

Allen's Maps of India & China.

MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP OF INDIA;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

MAP OF INDIA:

From the most recent Authorities. On two sheets—Size, 5 ft. 10 in. wide 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

MAP OF THE

ROUTES IN INDIA;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A MAP OF THE

WESTERN PROVINCES OF HINDOOSTAN;

THE PUNJAB, CABOOL, SINDE, BHAWULPORE, &c.

INCLUDING ALL THE STATES BETWEEN CANDAHAR AND ALLAHABAD.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—The extraordinary effect of these remedies in every disorder incidental to the human frame would appear incredible, if it were not vouched for by so many thousands. They are infallible in their effects for every description of wound, sore, or ulcer; while the Pills in every internal complaint are actual specifics, restoring health where all other means have failed to benefit the unfortunate sufferer. In cases of asthma, these Pills will work wonders, if the Ointment be well rubbed in the chest night and morning.

WATCH, CLOCK, and CHRONOMETER MANUFACTORY, 33 AND 34, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON. ESTABLISHED 1749.

J. W. BENSON, MANUFACTURER OF GOLD and SILVER WATCHES of every description, construction, and pattern, invites attention to his magnificent and unprecedented display of Watches, which is admitted to be the largest and best selected Stock in London. It consists of Chronometer, Duplex, Patent Detached Lever, Horizontal, and Vertical Movements, Jewelled, &c., with all the latest improvements, mounted in superbly-finished engine-turned and engraved Gold and Silver Cases. The designs engraved upon many of the cases are by eminent artists, and can only be obtained at this manufactory. If the important requisites, superiority of finish, combined with accuracy of performance, elegance, durability, and reasonableness of price, are wished for, the intending purchaser should visit this Manufactory, or send for the ILLUSTRATED PAMPHLET, published by J. W. BENSON (and sent post-free on application), which contains sketches, prices, and directions as to what Watch to buy, where to buy it, and how to use it. Several hundred letters have been received from persons who have bought Watches at this Manufactory, bearing testimony to the correct performance of the same. The following extracts from the opinions of the Press will, it is hoped, be a sufficient guarantee to the public that they may secure at this House a good Watch at a reasonable price:—

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.

THE REV. G. SMALL (ten years a Missionary in India), assisted by a Gentleman long resident in Persia, GIVES INSTRUCTIONS in Hebrew, Arabic, Sanscrit, Hindustani, Persian, and Bengali, at No. 3, Leadenhall Street; or at Schools and Private Residences in London and environs.

Address, 1, St. John's Grove, Croydon, S.

HANWELL COLLEGE, MIDDLESEX.
SEVEN MILES FROM LONDON.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

The increasing importance of the cultivation of the LANGUAGES of the EAST, and the immediate advantages that result from their acquisition, have induced the Principal to make arrangements for affording INSTRUCTION therein.

The rudiments of Hindustani, Persian, and Arabic, will be taught to all who are intended for employment in our Eastern Possessions; and the more advanced Pupils will be prepared for their examination on their arrival in India.

The course of instruction includes not only that which is necessary to pass at Addiscombe or Haileybury, but all that may be requisite for those who are destined to pursue an Indian career.

The history and geography of the country, and the general features of Anglo-Indian life, are taught by a gentleman whose perfect acquaintance with India, from long residence there, peculiarly qualifies him for the duties he has undertaken.

The great advantage to Parents in India of an Institution of this kind must be evident. At a short distance from London, in a proverbially healthy locality, they may place their children from an EARLY AGE under a system from which there need be no departure until their education is completely finished; a class being expressly formed for the matriculation at the University of London, wherein they may matriculate at sixteen years of age, and graduate two years after that time.

Prospectuses, with full particulars, may be had on application to the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, D.D., Hanwell College, Middlesex.

MR. C. J. YEATMAN, who during many years was successfully engaged in preparing Candidates for admission to Haileybury College, now RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS under sixteen years of age, to be educated for the Universities, the Public Schools, and Indian Appointments. Edgware, Middlesex.

PRIVATE PUPILS.—A CLERGYMAN, residing in a most pleasant and healthy part of England, wishes to INCREASE the NUMBER of his PUPILS. Indian Children received. Terms: if under Twelve years of age, £50 per Annum; above that age, £60. Address, Rev. B., Westfield Lodge, Faringdon, Berks.

THE PRINCIPALS of the FRENCH and ENGLISH MOSELY EDUCATIONAL ESTABLISHMENT RECEIVE CHILDREN from a very early age, supplying the place of Parents as far as that relation can be replaced. The situation is excellent, the air pure, and, from being in a pastoral district, they are enabled to supply food of all kinds of the most wholesome description, and wholly free from adulteration. Where personal supervision is not possible, arrangements will be made to furnish Clothing, &c., for one moderate sum, avoiding all extras. To those having the charge of Orphan Children, or to Parents about to proceed to or returning from the East or West-Indies, this Establishment offers great and peculiar advantages.

For Particulars and References address Messdames FREFONTAINE, 6, Trafalgar Terrace, Mosely, Worcestershire.

TO INDIAN PARENTS AND OTHERS.

THE WIDOW of an Indian Officer will be happy to receive ONE or TWO LITTLE GIRLS to be EDUCATED with her own, for whom she has a Governess. The Children would have the benefit of careful and religious training, and change of air in the Autumn. A Lady with One or Two Children, who would share the same bed-room, not objected to. Address, X. Y. Z., care of Mr. Edmonds, News Agent, Polygon, Clapham, of whom full particulars may be had.

TO PARENTS IN INDIA AND OTHERS.

THE Wife of a medical man, residing in a healthy village in Buckinghamshire, wishes to take the entire CHARGE of TWO or THREE LITTLE GIRLS, to educate—with the assistance of a resident French Governess—with her own children.

Apply by letter, or personally, to C. C., 42, Bedford Square, London.

A WIDOW LADY and her family, residing in the country, having a house larger than they require, are desirous of undertaking the CHARGE of a FAMILY or TWO of CHILDREN, of any age, whose parents are abroad, and can accommodate a Lady with her children. Situation, a healthy and pretty part of East Kent, close to a railway station, and near a town where good masters can be obtained. References can be given of the highest order.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE news received by this Mail is of a very chequered character. It is true that Delhi has fallen, and that the last of the descendants of Timour has closed his brief and shadowy reign amidst the roar of artillery and the shrieks of his slaughtered subjects. There can be no doubt that this will prove a heavy blow and great discouragement to the mutineers in every part of Hindostan. But there is equal reason to fear that the Mahomedans, driven to despair, will collect their scattered forces, and make a desperate stand in Oude. In that country there are innumerable forts which may be held by inferior numbers against considerable detachments, and many of which are impregnable except by heavy artillery. It was in such positions as these that the more warlike tribes in former days offered a determined resistance to British troops, and frequently inflicted a heavy loss upon their assailants. The subjugation of Oude and the final destruction of the mutineers is not likely to be effected in less than two campaigns, and those of a harassing and inglorious nature. It is also worthy of remark that the spirit of disaffection has manifested itself at several points within the Bombay Presidency, and that it has even broken out in the favourite hill sanitarium of the Punjab. In the north-east, too, there have been unmistakable symptoms of disquiet, and Assam is too near to Burmah not to excite unpleasant apprehensions. And there is yet another consequence to be noted with regard to the dispersion of the Delhi rebels. Every one of these fugitives goes forth as an apostle of rebellion, and carries into remote districts the germs of distrust and confusion. But sufficient for the day is the evil thereof, and for the present we are content to rejoice over the triumph of our arms at Delhi. No sooner had the long-expected siege-train reached the camp, than General Wilson at once determined to push forward the operations that must necessarily precede an assault. The heavy guns were speedily placed in position, and a tremendous fire of shot and shell was opened upon the devoted city. Within a very few days the Cashmere bastion and a large portion of the adjacent curtain were in ruins, and a practicable breach yawned in the walls. The 14th of September was the day selected for the assault, and a spirited order of the day was issued, enjoining the men to preserve their ranks, and almost entreating them to spare the women and children: as for the armed miscreants who might venture to withstand their onslaught, death was to be their certain punishment. When all the preparations were completed, the signal was given, and in a short space of time the eager troops had effected a lodgment within the walls. But their work had only then commenced. The rebels, despairing of safety in flight, or inflamed with fanatical fury, fought desperately behind every barrier, and were driven slowly and sullenly from street to street. Many of them, indeed, and especially the cavalry, early retreated across the bridge, and thus deferred their doom for a while; but the greater number acquitted themselves in a manner worthy of their ancient fame, and met with a soldier's death. It was not until the morning of the 16th that the magazine, with its store of 125 guns, fell into our hands; nor was the city wholly won until the 20th, after six days of hard fighting. The slaughter of the enemy was enormous, and even the victors had to bewail the loss of 12 officers killed and 38 wounded, and 600 rank-and-file killed or wounded. Considering the numbers engaged, this was a fearful proportion, and told unmistakably of the obstinate nature of the defence. The next mail will furnish us with the full particulars of this glorious feat of arms, and until then we can do no better than follow Lord Elphinstone's example, and pledge "General Wilson and his brave army" in a loving cup.

Of Lucknow we can say no more than that the heroic garrison still held out. Their deliverance, however, was nigh at hand. Sir James Outram reached Cawnpore on the 14th Sept., and on the 19th General Havelock had not only crossed the Ganges, but had commenced a new series of successful skirmishes. Soon after Sir James Outram had started from Allahabad, a small body of mutineers passed over from the Oude territory with a view to harass his flank and impede his march. But they had reckoned without their host. The gallant Eyre was speedily detached to chastise their insolence. His approach filled them with terror, and they fled to their boats, but not with sufficient rapidity to escape the avenger. The cavalry, and then the infantry and the guns, came up with them as they were embarking, and destroyed them almost to a man.

From the lower part of Bengal the latest intelligence is, on the whole, satisfactory, and indicative of a change for the better. It must be acknowledged, however, that the authorities are entitled to a minimum amount of credit for this improvement. An insane passion for mercy appears to have taken possession of Lord Canning and his advisers, and Mr. J. P. Grant has inaugurated his assumption of power by liberating 150 of General Neill's prisoners. It is not surprising that such a premature and ill-judged exhibition of leniency should have raised a bitter outcry against the new Lieu.-Governor, and that Lord Canning himself should largely participate in the odium thus created. His lordship, indeed, has afforded the European community a peculiar cause for complaint and dissatisfaction. Apparently repentant of his former refusal to disarm the native population, he has now passed an act to disarm the Europeans. With the exception of the military, the volunteers, and the police, no man for the next two years may possess a gun, or pistol, or sword, without being duly licensed to possess such deadly weapons. It is obvious that this measure is directed solely against the Europeans, for they alone will have the honesty to give in a list of what arms and ammunition they may own, while the natives will scarcely take the trouble even to conceal their forbidden goods. Another unpopular act of the Government has been the temporary suspension of the Hurkaru, the oldest and perhaps the most respectable journal in Calcutta. It may be that some of the articles which have recently appeared in that paper have been personal, if not actually libellous; but that is not a sufficient offence to call for the interposition of a powerful Government engaged in an arduous and alarming struggle.

In the Punjab, generally, tranquillity continued to be preserved, nor is there much danger of its interruption in that quarter. The same cannot be said of Rajpootana, where General George Lawrence appears to have some difficulty in opposing a bold front to the enemy. A movable column, however, was marching to his aid, and he is not the man to wait for a superiority of numbers. An incident that has occurred during the fortnight under review encourages a hope that some of our missing countrymen may yet be restored to their sorrowing friends. The rajah of Shahguri is stated to have released and sent into Saugor several officers and ladies whom he had kept for three months in confinement and on short commons. These were Lieutenant A. C. Gordon, deputy commissioner, Lullupore; Captain Sale, 6th regiment Gwalior contingent; Captain and Mrs. Irwin and two children; Dr. O'Brien; Mr. Verria, a patrol; and Quartermaster-serjeant Carrol and his wife. On the other hand, Kurrachee has only been saved from becoming the scene of murder and desolation by the fidelity of two native officers, and the prompt energy of the commanding officer, Major McGregor. The mutinous regiment was the 21st Bombay N.I., but the 2nd European fusiliers, and the 3rd troop horse brigade of artillery, hemmed them in, and compelled them to lay down their arms. Thirty of the ringleaders have since been hanged, blown from guns, or transported for life. At Shikarpore some native artillerymen nearly succeeded in seizing the guns, but their more faithful comrades, aided by a body of police, killed three of them and put the others to flight.

In the Madras Presidency order universally prevailed. With the exception of the 8th cavalry, there have been no symptoms of mutiny, though in our last issue we were misled by a correspondent into the belief that the 50th regiment had conspired to murder their officers at Nagpore. It appears that that corps was then actually at Bangalore, and free from all taint or suspicion. The neglect of the native officers of the 8th cavalry to acquaint their European superiors with the real spirit and state of their troops, has very properly drawn down upon them the marked displeasure of the Government. The senior native officer present with each troop has, therefore, been summarily dismissed the service, as well as the jemadar adjutant and the regimental havildar; all promotion and recruiting in the corps have likewise been suspended.

It only now remains to announce the death of Mr. John Russell Colvin, Lieut.-Governor of the North-west Provinces. This able and zealous public officer died of dysentery in the fort of Agra, on the 9th of September, engaged to the last moment of his life in the discharge of his official duties.

From China there is little to report, save the notification of the blockade of the river and port of Canton, "by a competent naval force of her Britannic Majesty:" this measure to have effect from the 7th of September.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

BENGAL.—Capt. H. Belson, 53rd N.I., murdered by the insurgents at Cawnpore; Ensign Evelyn C. Hill, H.M.'s 32nd regt., killed at Cawnpore; Lieut. P. H. Jackson, 67th N.I., murdered by the insurgents at Cawnpore, aged 29, June 27; Capt. W. A. Crommelin, B.N.I. at sea, on board the st. Chusan, Sept. 26.

MADRAS.—Lieut. J. A. Grant, 35th Eur. regt., at Cawnpore, Aug. 22; Capt. J. W. Hay, H.M.'s 70th regt., at Madras, Sept. 14.

THE European inhabitants of Calcutta have memorialized Government on the subject of an Arms and Ammunition Act (No. 1199 of 1857) passed by the Legislature on the 21st Sept. By this Act it is unlawful for any European or native, not specially licensed, to retain arms in his possession, under a penalty not to exceed 500 rupees. The duration of this extraordinary measure is fixed at two years, and its operation may be extended to any district, at the pleasure of the Governor-General in Council. Its effect will be simply to disarm the Europeans, while the natives will conceal both weapons and ammunition.

ALTERATION IN EXCHANGE.

East-India House, 21st Oct., 1857.

East-India Company's Bills from 2s. 1d., on Calcutta and Madras, and 2s. 1½d. on Bombay, to 2s. 2d. and 2s. 2½d. respectively.

THE Calcutta volunteer infantry guards mustered in nearly full force on Tuesday evening, the 15th September, upon the Kidderpore-road, to be reviewed by the Governor-General. His Lordship was accompanied by the Commander-in-Chief, and both were attended by their respective staffs. Lady Canning was also present in an open carriage. The manoeuvres arranged for the occasion were as extensive as the limited extent of the ground would permit, and were executed in a highly satisfactory manner, to the great delight of an immense concourse of persons, who were assembled upon the occasion, of all classes, in every kind of vehicle, on horseback, and on foot.

At the conclusion of the proceedings the officers were called to the front, and addressed by Lord Canning, who expressed himself highly gratified by what he had seen; observing that he had expected a great deal from having seen the progress made by the cavalry, but the proceedings of that day had surpassed his expectations, and his opinion of them was borne out by a great military authority. His Lordship added that he should call the corps out again on an early day, for the purpose of presenting them with colours. The message was communicated to the volunteers by Major Davies, and received with loud cheers, to which some hearty ones were added in honour of the major himself, who is deservedly popular in the corps, in whose instruction he manifests uniform care and interest.

BENGAL.

THE MUTINY.

AGRA.—The following telegraphic messages have been received in Calcutta:—

4th September.—Everything here is going on so monotonously, that there is nothing to write about. Montgomery's party is still at Allyghur, where everything is quiet, and Mr. Cocks is administering justice and collecting revenue as if no disturbance had ever taken place. Ghose Mahomed Khan, the head man of the rebels of that district, is at Malaghur, with, it is said, a large congregation of Ghazees and other fanatics, who some day may be mad enough to make a rush upon Allyghur; but, as we have secured the co-operation of a loyal zemindar, who is at the head of a force of well-disposed natives, including 2,000 horse, their chance of success is but small—that is, if the zemindar's men only fight as bravely as they talk, regarding which I offer no opinion.

We hear nothing new from Gwalior, but every day the mutineers delay coming to Agra, the more secure we become; but should they come (although by no possibility could they get into the fort), they might cause us much annoyance, for were they to encamp out of reach of our guns on any side, our servants would bolt, and we should get no out-of-door supplies. We are too weak to go out and drive them away, so they might sit down and vex us without fearing any molestation from us. We are thriving under the new régime. Brigadier Cotton gives satisfaction to every one, and we have confidence in his pluck and ability. With a few exceptions we are healthy here, except children, who mope like new-caught birds in a cage; but no doubt liberty and fresh air will restore them to health.

September 8.—Mr. Colvin, the lieutenant-governor, is very dangerously ill—he had been suffering for some time from bowel complaint; but yesterday the disease took an unfavourable turn. The medical attendants consider his situation to be most critical, and have strictly prohibited him from attending to any business. Under these circumstances, pending the receipt of the Governor-General's order, Mr. G. A. Read, the senior civilian, will conduct the duties of the Government.

Sept. 9.—Mr. Colvin, the lieutenant-governor, sank rapidly since the despatch of last message, and died this afternoon at half-past four.

The latest authentic news from the Chumbul up to the 8th of September, is, that the river has risen, and that the main body of the mutinous infantry, cavalry, and guns had not yet crossed; that their advanced guard continues at Dholpore, with two guns; that at present, of the two streams between Agra and the Chumbul, one is certainly unfavourable, and that the boats have been destroyed.

THE LATE MR. COLVIN.—Another of our most distinguished men has been removed. John Russell Colvin, the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, is dead! We need not pay even a passing tribute to the worth of this great and good man, for no words of ours can add to the estimation in which he was universally held by all classes of society, nor lessen the affliction which his death will occasion, not only to the members of his own family and among his personal friends, but to those who, with ourselves, regard the loss of such a man at this moment as a national calamity; for although Mr. Colvin's career was not uniformly successful, it will be no easy matter to find an Indian statesman to succeed him, having equal grasp of understanding, the same capacious views, and great experience, and moreover one who possesses in an equal degree the confidence of the supreme Government, and the respect of his subordinate co-adjutors. Mr. Colvin was first taken seriously unwell on the 3rd July, but soon recovered. About a week or ten days since he was attacked with dysentery, but was considered in no immediate danger till two days ago, from which time he gradually sank, until his death, yesterday afternoon. His remains were interred in the fort of Agra this morning, with military honours, minute guns firing from the ramparts during the performance of the burial service, at which the whole population of the fort, military and civil, assisted. Mr. E. A. Reade, the senior civil functionary on the spot, has temporarily assumed the civil administration of the N.W. Provinces.—Mofussilite, Sept. 10.

ALLAHABAD.—The writer of the subjoined extract was at Allahabad on the 4th Sept. "Thousands of coolies are busy building breastworks, digging ditches and demolishing that part of the city nearest the fort. The trees which line the various avenues leading from the fort have had their lower branches lopped off, so as to afford less cover to an attacking force, and a well-finished breastwork runs from the fort gate to Kidgunge, encircling the ghaut where the steamers anchor, and the Government g-downs. At the ghaut lay the James Hume, Mirzapore, Nemesis, Calcutta, and Jumna gun-boat. The ghaunt was crowded with hackeries, guns, tumbrils, arms, all the paraphernalia of war, for the steamers had brought Major Eyre's battery and a portion of H.M.'s 5th and 90th regiments. Most of these officers and men wore the Crimean medal, and all were anxious to get at the niggers.

Letters from Allahabad state that the Lieut.-Governor has intimated to Colonel Neill that the work of retribution is not to be proceeded with, in any case, without reference to him. To this Colonel Neill has replied that martial law has been proclaimed and that he shall take his own course.

Dr. and Mrs. Corbyn had a most providential escape from Sultanpore (Oude). He was attached to Colonel Fisher's corps. The day before he was killed, Colonel Fisher directed Dr. Corbyn to escort the ladies from the station to Allahabad. They were pursued by the police and sowars, and were only saved by the fleetness of their carriage horses. On reaching Purtaburh they heard of the mutiny at Allahabad. The police and sowars at Purtaburh also mutinied, and the fugitives were concealed in a cowhouse for a week, fed and sheltered by a Hindoo zemindar, Ajeeb Sing, who eventually sent them into Allahabad.

"9th Sept.—A friend has just come in, and reported that five regiments of infantry and two of cavalry had arrived from the westward, and taken position at a place called Mouza Aounta, about twenty miles from us. The Tehseeldar of Saroun, a place ten miles hence, across the Ganges, with his amlah, many of them wounded, came in this morning from their district. The Tehseeldar of Karee, sixteen miles across the Jumna, has come in with the treasure in his charge. M'Gowan, our postmaster, has sent me, for perusal, a report from Bhowanee Deen of Sohagee district, about thirty miles to the westward across the Jumna, Surburokar, in which he states the treasure sent to Rewah has been returned; a large party of mutineers had left Kheeree (thirty-six miles from us) for Kuttra, where the Rewah troops under Hinde met, engaged, and were worsted by the mutineers, who, after dispersing the Rewah troops, were advancing on Rewah! This is a serious matter, and we pause for confirmation or contradiction of the report. After sending 1,300 men with General Outram to reinforce General Havelock, we have but 170 left in our garrison, of whom one-half are in the hospital! The Koladyne left three days ago to bring up Captain Peel's marines, who, if not stopped at Mirzapore, may be expected in a week from this."

AHMEDABAD.—A futile attempt to get up a rising of the troops at Ahmedabad was made by some men of the 2nd N.I. Grenadiers on the night of the 15th September. A letter from that station says:—"It appears that some ten or twelve men of 2nd Grenadiers went to the gun-sheds, either with the intention of seizing the guns or of inciting the Golundauze to join them. The guard of the latter, however, turned out and threatened to shoot the first man who came a step nearer. The whole of the Golundauze then turned out, drew out the guns, harnessed the horses, and got ready for action. The men of the 2nd then went to the quarter-guard of the 7th N.I., and were there received with the same threats of being instantly shot unless they took themselves off. Finding it a failure, they dispersed. The roll-call was taken, and every man of the artillery and the 7th was found to be present, but two of the grenadiers were missing, and eight or nine of the same regiment were made prisoners. Some of the muskets were found to be loaded. This, is all that is yet known, but an inquiry is to take place to-day. The Golundauze and 7th appear to have behaved well. Some native officers of the 2nd gave information that something was wrong, and the military authorities were on the qui vive to prevent disturbance."

ALLYGHUR.—We have great pleasure in giving prominent insertion to the following extracts from Garrison Orders, containing copy of a portion of Major G. J. Montgomery's despatch to Brigadier Cotton, relative to the gallant action fought at Allyghur on the 22nd ultimo, introduced by a well-merited laudatory notice from the brigadier:—

"Lieut.-Col. Cotton, commanding at Agra, has much pleasure in publishing to the garrison, the following extracts of a despatch from Major Montgomery, commanding a detachment at Hattass. Major Montgomery in command of a party consisting of 3 guns and 61 artillerymen, 154 of the 3rd European regiment, of all ranks, and 22 militia cavalry, with a party of Jat horse, on the 24th ult. attacked and totally routed, near Allyghur, a force of the insurgents, numbering from 5,000 to 6,000 men under Ghose Mahomed Khan, Naib Subah of the king of Delhi. The defeat was most signal, and the lieut.-colonel commanding offers his congratulations to Major Montgomery on his able conduct in the field. He assures the troops of his high appreciation of the gallantry of all, and he will have great satisfaction in forwarding Major Montgomery's report for the information of the Commander-in-Chief."

The following is the major's report:—

"Having secured the baggage, &c.—my greatest care and anxiety—I commenced the action by attacking with the militia cavalry, under Lieut. De Kantzow, and the Jat horse, a large body of cavalry, chiefly irregulars, who threatened our left and rear. This duty was most gallantly and promptly performed, and our left and rear having thus been cleared from the enemy's cavalry, who were driven back to the rear of their main body, I brought the guns into position, under cover of skirmishers, and opened fire, which was sharply replied to by the enemy from behind the garden-walls, against which I found artillery of little avail.

"Information was now brought to me by Mr. P. Saunders, who considerably and kindly placed his services at my disposal, that the enemy were in great force on the right of the garden. I immediately directed Captain Murray to move round to the right with the Jat Horse and cut off the enemy on the general assault, and carrying their position with the infantry, at the same time ordering Lieutenant Griffin to move up two of his guns in the same direction. This movement took some little time, evidently occupying the attention of the enemy, and enabling me to make arrangements for the assault. Leaving a sufficient number of men under Captain Stroker to protect the gun on the left, and all being ready, I gave the word 'Forward,' and went to the front accompanied by Lieut. Clarke, and followed by No. 8 Company of the 3rd European Regiment under Lieut. Blake. On reaching the garden-wall, a large party of fanatical Mussulmen, headed by Moulvees, rushed forward sword in hand from the right corner, and there ensued a most desperate hand-to-hand encounter, which terminated in their total destruction, and where we met with our chief loss. Lieut. Griffin moved up his two guns, and getting well to the right, opened fire with terrible effect on their reserve, killing great numbers, and completely dispersing the remainder. Captain Murray at the same time, taking advantage of an opening in the wall, dashed forward with part of the Jat Horse, entered the garden, and cut up the Ghazees who remained in it, among whom was the chief Moulvee, Abdool-zaleel, who was cut down in a hand-to-hand encounter with that officer. The field was now our own, after two hours' fighting, the enemy having been completely routed and dispersed in all directions, leaving at least 300 dead, thus terminating a decided victory against great odds, and with comparatively small loss on our side, considering the strength of their position, and the number of Ghazees who fought with the utmost desperation and contempt of life.

"My best thanks are due to the civil authorities, and to all the officers and men under my command. To Capt. Stroker, second in command, who in quarters and in the field has rendered me every assistance, and to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the 3rd European regiment, who behaved with the valour of British soldiers. To Lieutenant Griffin, non-commissioned officers, and men of the artillery, for the promptitude with which my orders were carried out, and to whose energetic exertions I attribute, in a great measure, the success of the day. To Lieut. De Kantzow and the Militia Cavalry, who with the Jat Horse, under Captain Murray, rendered important service by successfully attacking and dispersing a large body of Irregular Cavalry at the commencement of the action. Of the conduct of the Militia Cavalry both in the field and quarters, I cannot speak too highly. To Assistant Surgeon Mackellar, for his judicious medical arrangements, and his assiduous and humane attention to the wounded. To Lieut. Blake, 3rd European Regiment, and Lieut. Clarke, of the late Gwalior Contingent, who behaved with conspicuous gallantry, the latter being severely wounded. Ensign O'Donnell, 67th Native Infantry, who during the march and in the field assisted me very greatly. Mr. Volunteer Hennessey, who greatly distinguished himself, shooting five men, and as he was also present in the action of the 5th July, and is the son of an old and deserving officer, I respectfully solicit that the services of the youth may specially be brought to the notice of Government with a view to his obtaining military employment.

"I beg to bring prominently forward the praiseworthy conduct of the Rev. Mr. Keilner, who gratuitously accompanied the detachments, and for whose humane and unremitting attention to the wounded during the action, and under fire, too much praise cannot possibly be bestowed. I am also greatly indebted to Mr. Cocks for his cordial co-operation and assistance on all occasions, particularly on the day of the action, and for the very accurate information he obtained when the most conflicting and contradictory accounts were spread abroad, evidently with the view of discouraging and throwing difficulties in the way of an advance; also to Mr. Paterson Saunders, and Messrs. Lane and Colvin, of the civil service, whose services I cannot speak too highly of in carrying orders throughout the heat of the action; to Captain Fanshawe, in charge of the carriages, &c. for his admirable management in providing ample carriage for the detachment, and energetic exertions in the postal department, as also for the very accurate information he has at all times procured; to Mr. Daniell, C.S. to whom was assigned the responsible duty of protecting the baggage with the Jat matchlock men.

"I deeply lament the loss of J. O'B. Tandy, Esq. and Ensign M.ersh, 16th grenadiers, both of whom were volunteers—the former fell whilst attempting, quite alone, to enter the walled enclosure."

We (Allen's Indian Mail) have been favoured with the following interesting letter from a gentleman serving with the volunteer force:—

We left the fort on the 20th August—three companies of Europeans, three guns (two 9-pounders and one 24-pounder howitzer), and thirty-five mounted volunteers—to take possession of Hattass, which was menaced by a fellow named Ghose Mahomed, who had taken possession of Allyghur, and proclaimed himself subahdar of the king of Delhi. He had collected 400 sowars, of sorts, from contingent cavalry and others, and about 1,500 foot sepoys, Mahomedan Ghazees, &c. &c. Arrived at Hattass, we found he was determined to fight us, and so we marched to Sarie on the 23rd. We again took the field early next morning, and discovered their horse at Malrak, who immediately fell back. Near Maun Singh's garden, where their infantry were posted, they made a stand, and we drew up in order of battle. Then we commenced at them with our guns, when the cavalry bolted; but their foot kept up a sharp fire from the garden, and our guns failed to make much impression on them. I then rode to the rear of the garden, and saw the enemy were masked by the wall. I went back to Major Montgomery, who commanded, and informed him of what I had seen. He instantly sent a couple of guns, a company of Europeans, and a few volunteers, and we were in their rear in five minutes. The guns quickly opened upon them and absolutely mowed them down. The fellows fled by hundreds, and as they had a clear plain of more than half a mile to cross before they reached shelter, a great number were killed. In the meantime, however, some fifty or sixty fanatics, headed by the Moulvie of Allyghur, who had sworn to die (it was the Mohurrum), jumped out of the garden and attacked us in front, hand to hand, with their swords. It was here that Tandy fell, fighting among the foremost. But the skinnishers—for our main body stood firm—with the exception of twelve or fourteen, took to their heels, and left us to fight the battle for a short time by ourselves. You never saw such a fierce mêlée, every man of us slaying at three or four of them. The European soldiers who remained with us fought like devils, and in a short time the others rallied and came up—and not a fugitive was left alive. The enemy lost at least 300 men, most of whom were killed in the rear of the garden, and very soon afterwards not a scoundrel remained in sight. What do you think of a fight like that with Mahomedans, Mewhatties, &c. &c., who had nothing to do with the Company's mutineers? And yet it is asserted in Parliament that it is only a sepoy mutiny! We took possession of Allyghur, and held the district in awe. We killed their Moulvie and principal men, and not a Mahomedan was to be found in Allyghur when we marched in. As usual I escaped without a scratch, though in the very thick of the fight. The lieutenant-governor, Mr. Colvin (who, alas! was buried to-day—his constitution broken up by anxiety, overwork, and long confinement in the fort), was good enough to write me a letter, in his own handwriting, after the fight, expressing his warm approbation of my share in the work. I was also appointed Hon. A. D. C. to Brigadier Polwhele, the day of the bloody battle of the 5th July. The fellows are fighting with ropes round their necks, and we hang or blow away from guns every mutineer and traitor we catch. Of the mutineers of the 51st regiment, 785 were shot out of 871, and the rest are being brought in by twos and threes. 237 of the 26th N.I. were caught, tried, and shot; and so on all over the country. No one either gives or asks quarter.

ASSAM.—The insurrection appears to have spread to Assam, and the 1st Assam battalion openly canvass the restoration of the Ex-Rajah, we suppose, Poorunder Singh. The magistrate of Seebager has invited all planters to take refuge in that station, and we believe that the majority, leaving all their effects, have deemed it prudent to be guided by his advice. The 2nd battalion at Gowhaty are said to be equally mutinous, and there is reason to fear that Assam will give us yet a great deal of trouble. A few policemen and others, mustering in all about 100 men, have been sent round from Bengal. It is a matter for surprise that an outbreak has not occurred in Assam before this. The A-samese are not an unwarlike race, and the two battalions, each 1,000 strong, are composed mainly of Poorbeas. The King of Delhi is still looked upon as the titular sovereign in many parts of the country. Nearly the oldest titles to land are documents granted by that sovereign or the local Governor of Rangamutty.

The better classes in Assam have hardly yet become reconciled to our rule. The resumption of the Liksoos, or land held by the great officers of the state during the time Assam was under native government, in Upper Assam, and the emancipation of the slaves together with the alienations of land in Lower Assam reduced all the better classes, at the time, to great distress, and they have never recovered their former importance. Both the resumptions and the emancipation of the slaves were necessary and beneficial to the people at large, who are more contented and richer than by far the majority of the peasantry in India; but the doing justice to the many has raised us up some enemies, who may take occasion of the present disturbances to work us harm. In the mean time the Europeans are quitting the open country, and taking every precaution which their limited means can furnish to secure their safety.—Friend of India, Sept. 17.

September 10th.—"The first intelligence: that a conspiracy had been discovered in Upper Assam came upon us like a thunder-clap, and immediate and energetic measures were judiciously adopted at all the stations, and the crisis, we now trust, has passed. Colonel Hannay has entrenched himself with his Goorkhas at Debrooghur, and sent off his Hindoostanee sepoys to Jorhat, where there are no European residents. Actual mutiny has not broken out at any station, but all feel that they are on a volcano. All is outwardly quiet just now, and every one tries to feel secure, although great alarm actually exists, for there is not a European soldier in the province. It is said that Kooar Sing is the instigator of the plot discovered here.

"The ladies have left Nowgong for Gowhaty. There a volunteer force has been formed, consisting of the residents and some few natives in high position.

"In Assam the 2nd battalion, containing fewer up-country men, is said to be most trustworthy. The 1st battalion, who lately volunteered, are said to be dangerous. Residents in outposts of Upper Assam are flitting, and tea cultivators dropping down stream. We learn that in Lower Assam, a volunteer guard is raised, among whom some of a batch of new rifles are distributed for service. An occasional steamer would be useful in many ways."

AZIMGHUR.—"August 19.—The Goorkha force had their first opportunity of showing their warlike powers, and, I trust, of thereby counteracting all the unfounded reports which have been spread abroad of them. For two or three days rebels, said to be of Mahomed Hossein's party, had been collecting in our rear; but not wishing to throw away either Goorkha lives or ammunition, deeming both more adapted for more active service, they were not attacked; however, the rebels having co-operated with a village a few yards from our camp at Glugga, opened fire, on the morning of the 19th, on all four sides of the tope in which the Goorkhas were encamped. The elephants were mostly laden, and ready to march. At the report of musketry from all sides they took fright, running right through the camp, and knocking down the tent of Col. Pulwan Sing, commanding the force. The little Goorkhas deserted their breakfast, and stood to arms as sharp as Europeans. Not a word was heard among them; they brought one of the guns to the front, and opened fire; the remaining Goorkhas then went out, and on all sides succeeded in driving the whole number of rebels off, while the village was burnt, and the rebels therein shot or cut up with the 'kookries.' Instances were seen of some of the Goorkhas charging, seizing with one hand the matchlock of the rebel, while with the other he playfully used his kookree. Another Goorkha was known to have killed five men with his own hand. Whoever says the Goorkhas cannot fight, had better make himself over to the tender mercies of a Goorkha's kookree. They have invariably reported every man who has come into camp on a tampering expedition; and all officers attached to the force unite but in one wish and opinion, that the sooner they are actively employed the better.

BELLARY, Sept. 22nd.—A letter from a friend at Kurnool states that Colonel Whitlock has left that station with the column (with the exception of the two companies of the 74th Highlanders, who have been directed to remain there) for a town about 25 miles from Kurnool called Morecondah. There is a strong fortification at this place, and it has been for some time past the headquarters of a gang of marauders (Rohillas and Arabs), who have committed some daring robberies in the villages and towns between Kurnool and Cuddapah. Colonel Whitlock intends destroying this fort, and after this is done, he will proceed to Hyderabad. It would be well if the various forts which the Colonel will meet with on his way to Hyderabad were all similarly dealt with.—Athenæum.

BENARES.—A correspondent of the Hurkaru thus describes the new fortifications at Rajghat, near Benares:—

"All your readers who have travelled up-country will recollect the bluff bank and plateau on which Mr. Gordon's house stands. Well, from the points where the bluff abuts upon the Ghat at which you land, down to the Nala beyond Mr. Gordon's house, the plateau swarms with coolies; buildings, breastworks, pulling down houses, filling holes, levelling hills: all busy in setting up a fort which is destined henceforth to hold Benares in check, and to stand a perpetual threat to the time honoured shrines of the scoundrels who have declared such an unholy crusade against the Christian. As you reach the crest of the road leading to the plateau, you remark a couple of heavy guns peeping over the parapet of a bastion, and looking along them you can easily imagine what swift destruction they could inflict on the swarming city lying below. Inside the fort there are Seikhs encamped; a battery of guns stand ready; and there are lots of European artillerymen very hot and very busy with warlike matériel of all sorts. It would do some of your insouciant interossals good to see the stir and bustle of the plateau of Rajghat. The position is undoubtedly a strong one, but I think it unnecessarily large. Poor old Gordon, who, during a residence of thirty years there, spared neither labour nor money in improving and beautifying his little estate, must feel deeply the wholesale and sudden devastation of this miniature Eden. The old man has a poetic soul, and from a bold plateau created knolls, and dells, and bowers, tastefully planted, and enriched with some of the choicest children of Flora. All these are rapidly passing away beneath the unsparing hand of the engineer; and, poor old fellow, while the stern necessity of war lays his 'old house' desolate, the dearest members of his family have been torn from him by the red hand of rebellion, and—sleep at Cawnpore. Here, indeed, is a case of desolation. Had my Lord Canning stood beside me and heard poor old Gordon's tale, much of that squeamish distaste of doing summary justice on these human wolves—the mutineers—would rapidly evaporate.

"Benares yields one a pleasant contrast to Calcutta. In Calcutta the native population is insolent, and carries a defiant front towards Europeans. In Benares, thanks to Neill, and to Gubbins also, the nigger has discovered that the Feringhee has a gauntlet under the silk glove, and that he can smite heavily with it. Consequently, from the oily Baboo down to the skinniest cooly, you are treated as you pass, not only with respect but servility, and salaams and obeisances are tendered on every hand."

CANPPORE.—OFFICIAL.—Copy of a despatch from Maj. V. Eyre, artillery, commanding a detachment, to Col. Napier, military secretary to Maj.-gen. Outram, K.C.B., camp, Koondhun Puttee, 11th Sept. 1857.

Sir,—I am happy to have it in my power to report, for the information of Maj.-gen. Sir J. Outram, K.C.B., that the expedition he did me the honour of entrusting to my command has been attended with entire success, and the daring invasion of this territory from Oude has been signally punished.

I arrived at Hutgoan last evening at dusk, where I was joined by Capt. Johnson's troop of the 12th irregular horse, forty in number. As they had marched twenty-four miles, and were in need of rest, I halted until half past one, a.m., when we had the advantage of moonlight to pursue our march to Koondhun Puttee, where we arrived at daybreak.

The Oude rebels having been apprised a little previously of our advance, had fled precipitately to their boats, about half a mile off. I ordered the cavalry under Capt. Johnson and Lieut. Havelock to pursue them, and followed up myself, with all practicable speed, with the infantry and guns. We found the cavalry had driven the enemy into their boats, which were fastened to the shore, and were maintaining a brisk fire on them from the bank above. On the arrival of the detachments of H.M.'s 5th fusiliers and 64th foot, under Captains Johnson and Turner, the fire of our musketry into the densely-crowded boats was most telling, but the enemy still defended themselves to the utmost, until the guns, under Lieut. Gordon, opened fire, when the rebels instantly threw themselves, panic-stricken, into the river. Grape was now showered upon them, and a terrific fusillade from the infantry and cavalry maintained, until only a few scattered survivors escaped. Their number appeared to be about three hundred. Previously to their plunging into the river, they threw their guns overboard and blew up one of their boats, which had been boarded by a party of infantry, whereby, I regret to say, one man of H.M.'s 5th was killed and ten more or less injured, of whom five were Europeans and five natives. All the officers mentioned above distinguished themselves highly, and the conduct of the men was all that could be desired.

Lieut. Impey, of the engineers, and Mr. Volunteer Tarby have likewise, by their zeal and usefulness, merited my thanks and commendation. (Signed) VINCENT EYRE, Major, Commanding Field Force.

P.S.—Having heard of another party of rebels at a ghat higher up the river, I have despatched the cavalry to reconnoitre.

The son of the Goorseraï chief Tantia, who holds the Fort of Calpee, had sent in Messrs. Griffith and Passana. Notwithstanding this service, the Mahratta chief is hostile to our Government.

In a letter of the 6th instant, Mr. Sherer writes that "intelligence is confirmed of the Nana being in durance at Futtehpoore Chourassee; but I question whether Jursa Singh's son, being a Thakoor, will give up a guest, though I dare say he will bully him."

Extracts from Mr. Passana's letter, dated Cawnpore, 16th of September:—

"On the approach of the Jhansie mutineers, I left Oorai with my family and Griffith's, on the evening of the 14th June. My poor mother, who I thought would be safe in disguise, was pointed out by some of our own Burkundazes and cruelly murdered. Fleming, who had been wandering about in a state of distraction, was found near the camp of the mutineers and murdered. Mr. Double and his family were brought over from a village where they had taken refuge; the mutineers took them on to Chowk, near Calpee, and are said to have released them, but they died from heat and fatigue. Mr. D.'s son alone was found alive. The Goorseraï Rao has assumed possession of the district, appointed his own officers, and is levying forced loans from all the mahajuns and men of substance; his eldest son, who has taken Calpee and other pergunnahs as his share, is said to have realized upwards of 30,000 rupees from the town of Calpee alone.

"We unfortunately fell into the hands of the company which had escorted treasure to Gwalior. We had put up at Koodaree. They encamped at Baugra, and hearing of us, made a dour, plundered all our property, and made us prisoners for six days; as soon as we got out of their hands, we were detained by the Rao's people at Oorai, and made over to the mutineers from Lullutpoor. But by the mercy of God our lives were spared. The Rao's son, Tantia, at Calpee, then seized us, and was sending us to the Nana at Cawnpore, but the defeat of the Nana prevented him; since then we were treated with civility and taken care of as prisoners. I managed to communicate with General Neill at Cawnpore, who wrote several letters to the Rao to send us over to Cawnpore. After a deal of hesitation and delay he did so at last, and we arrived here on the 4th."

The H.C.'s steamer Berhampootee, whilst on her way to Cawnpore, stopped off a village called Nursingur (about forty miles above Allahabad) for fuel. The zemindar, in company with the villagers, fired into her, the commanding officer ordered fifty of the 1st Madras Fusiliers, under command of a senior lieutenant, to land; and on the men reaching about 100 yards from the bank, they were fortunate enough to defeat 200 rebels and to capture four guns with ammunition, besides taking the zemindar prisoner, all within an hour.

The expedition against Blittoor, in the early part of August, was commanded by Major Stephenson, of the 1st Madras fusiliers, on which occasion they took from Blittoor twenty-one guns, three elephants, sixty-three cows, 120 bullocks, the Nana's carriage and horses, saddle-cloth of gold, and jewel-hilted sword, and abundance of silver in rupees and images.

We have been favoured with the following interesting intelligence by an officer with General Outram's force, who writes on the 12th inst. from the camp at the eighty-sixth milestone beyond Allahabad:—

"Sir James Outram, with head-quarters of the 5th fusiliers, 500 of the 90th foot, and detachments of H.M.'s 64th and 84th foot and 78th Highlanders, will reach Cawnpore on the 18th inst. We are now (12th Sept.) three marches from that place. When about fifty miles from Allahabad, it was ascertained that a rebel force of 400 men, with two guns, had crossed the river to our side. A detachment of about 200 men, with two guns, was despatched on elephants to look for them. They came up with the rebels when re-embarking, killed 200, and compelled them to throw their guns into the river, to escape the fire of our guns. This will tend to keep them on the Oude side of the river, and to render the communication between Allahabad and Cawnpore more secure.

"Sir James Outram, with the 90th foot, and the detachment which punished the rebels, is one day's march in rear of the 5th fusiliers, the Highlanders, the 64th, and the 84th.

"The detachment which so effectually punished the rebels as above, was under the command of Major Vincent Eyre, who so distinguished himself at Arrah."

CHUPRAH.—A correspondent at Chuprah writes on the 12th of September:—

We have 100 Seikhs now in the district, 25 here and 75 at Sewan. The left wing of the 17th M.N.I., 275 strong, is also expected to reach this in a day or two, en route to the latter place, to guard the frontier against the descent of the Goruckpore rebels, said to be some 6,000 in number, mostly unarmed rabble. There is not much fear, however, of their paying us a visit for some time yet, as Mohumud Husen is quite taken up with levying black mail and feathering his nest at present; and should the force (consisting of 200 Europeans, two guns, and a Madras corps) recommended to be sent up by Major-gen. Outram for the re-occupation of Goruckpore arrive in due time, our apprehensions from that quarter will be effectually relieved.

River dacoities have grown rather frequent now-a-days. A boat, with property to the value of about Rs. 600, belonging to Mr. Dixon, the sub-deputy opium-agent of Burubra, was looted the other day on the Gunduk. Rice, and all other articles of consumption, are selling at famine prices; and cholera, which abated for a time, is again virulently raging.

DELHI.—The following particulars of the siege operations are taken from official reports and letters:—

Sept. 4.—The siege train arrived this morning, together with a detachment of H.M.'s 8th foot, and a wing of the Belooch battalion.

Sept. 5.—Active preparations are going on for offensive operations. Lieut. Tytler, 60th rifles, and Lieut. Somerville, artillery, have both died since last message was sent.

Sept. 6.—200 men of the 60th rifles and 100 artillery recruits from Meerut arrived to-day. The 4th Punjab infantry comes in to-morrow.

Sept. 8.—Wilde's rifles and the Jheend rajah's troops came in to-day. Last night the new advanced light-gun battery was armed, with the loss of one man wounded. To-might further operations will take place towards establishing offensive batteries.

Sept. 8.—Last night parties of our troops took possession of the Koodsea Bagh, within 320 yards of the city walls, and batteries for ten guns were established at about 650 yards from the Moree bastion, to put a stop to its fire and that of the Cashmere bastion. Everything was successful, and the batteries are firmly established in their advanced position, our loss up to this time being under fifty killed and wounded. Lieut. Hildebrand, artillery, and Lieut. Bannerman, Belooch battalion, killed. An accidental explosion took place in our park, but fortunately only four natives were killed. The Jummoo contingent arrived to-day.

Sept. 9.—Since last message, the Cashmere and Moree bastions have been severely pounded by our near advanced batteries, and we shall shortly have more batteries at work much closer to the walls. Notwithstanding that, the enemy have kept up a heavy fire, particularly of grape and musketry: our casualties have been small since yesterday.

Reports state that some of the 10th light cavalry mutineers had reached Delhi, in somewhat sorry plight; that they were abused by the mutineers, as being abettors of the English, when the first Ferozepore outbreak took place. They were denied admittance within the city gates, and told to remain outside.

General Van Cortlandt reports from Hansi, on the 6th instant, that an insurgent village in the neighbourhood had been successfully surprised that morning by a party of horsemen, under Messrs. Ford and Pearce, and that a pensioned subadar, named Goor Buksh, one of the chief instigators of the mutiny in the Hurrianah regiment, and twenty-five of his party, were killed and wounded, after a stout resistance. Our loss, one killed and sixteen wounded, two severely. Messrs. Ford and Pearce speak highly in praise of their men in this little affair.

Sept. 10.—We have now two batteries for heavy guns constructed in front of Ludlow Castle, and ready to open to-morrow morning. We have also a heavy mortar battery completed in the Koodsea Bagh, and have possession of the Custom-house, in the compound of which another heavy battery is being constructed about 200 yards from the city wall. The enemy keep up a heavy fire of artillery and musketry, and have made some unsuccessful demonstrations with their cavalry. Our loss during the last twenty-four hours has been fifty killed and wounded, including Lieut. Eaton, 60th rifles, wounded. One of our recently erected heavy batteries caught fire to-day, and was rendered unserviceable, but this is of no consequence, as the guns were to be withdrawn and taken elsewhere to-night.

Sept. 11.—Sixteen heavy guns and howitzers, and ten large mortars, opened this morning on the Cashmere and Water bastions and adjoining curtains, and have maintained an effective fire all day. Last night and to-day one or two sorties have been made by the enemy without any result, notwithstanding the proximity of our batteries to the walls. Our losses are not heavy. To-morrow morning eight more heavy guns and twelve five-and-a-half inch mortars will open from the Custom-house compound. Lieut. Lockhart, 7th N.I. attached to the Sirmoor battalion, wounded yesterday afternoon, and Lieut. Gillespie, of artillery, this morning.

Sept. 12.—Last night the batteries continued their fire at intervals, and have fired all day. The Cashmere bastion and half of the adjacent curtains are in ruins. The Moree bastion is also nearly unserviceable. At 1 p.m. to-day, Maj. Scott was able to open with four 18-pounders on the Water bastion within 200 yards, and two light mortars, under Capt. Blunt, about 250 yards, at the same time. The enemy's musketry-fire is still kept up with vigour, but our casualties are less numerous than might have been expected. Maj. Campbell, of artillery, was wounded last night. Yesterday evening a body of the enemy's horse attempted to carry off our camels; they were routed by some of our cavalry, and twenty-five of them killed, including two native officers.

Sept. 13.—Telegraph communication is now open to Delhi. Our batteries are keeping up a heavy fire on the city, and this morning the enemy's expense magazine in the Water bastion was exploded by our fire, also the wagon of a light gun which enfiladed our batteries from the Talloewara suburbs. Our loss was under fifty killed and wounded yesterday. Capt. Fagan, of artillery, an officer who has earned the admiration of the whole force by his constant cheerfulness, energy, and courage, was killed at the Custom-house battery yesterday evening. Capt. Chancellor, 75th foot, and Earle, artillery, have been wounded.

The following extracts are from Mr. Greathed's letters:—

Sept. 12.—It was before reported that the 18-gun battery No. 2, in front of Ludlow Castle, had, with the aid of the heavy mortars, quickly silenced the Cashmere bastion.

That bastion has not since replied, and heavy salvos are continually directed against it. No. 1 battery continues to fire into the Moree: it is a heap of ruins, but the gunners manage to fire light guns from different parts.

No. 3, at the Custom-house, has not yet opened. Some alterations had to be made in it. It is expected it will be ready this evening.

The enemy have not made any more sorties, but they keep up a brisk fire of musketry in front of the bastions from rifle-pits, and among the jungle, and they have a flanking fire from field-pieces on the right, and from a heavy gun and mortar on the other side the river; Seelymghurh and the Water bastion also fire on the left and centre batteries. Rockets are occasionally fired from a martello tower in front, and there are single light guns on two others.

All this does not retard the progress of the siege, or lead to any interruption of fire. And though the delay about No. 3 is certainly a disappointment, there is still every reason for congratulation. A position has been seized and maintained for breaching purposes, which, if worked up to according to rule, would not have been ours for some time, and our fire is very destructive.

A party of the enemy's cavalry, 200 in number, got across the cut of the canal yesterday, to cut off our camels. They retired on seeing a force coming against them, and might have got off, but they were met by eighty of the Guide cavalry under Capt. Sandford; and two ressalidars and twenty-five sowars were killed on the field. The rest got off to Delhi.

The sense of impending danger has roused the energies of the Pandies, and they talk of nothing but defence, and are making dumdummas near the magazine, and between the Cashmere and Cabul gates. But experience has hitherto shown that those energies fail when the moment of action arrives; and I think it is generally a source of congratulation that the rebels are not availing themselves of the many avenues of escape. The population appears quiescent.

Major Campbell, of the artillery, was wounded by a grape-shot in the leg in battery, and Lieut. Lockhart is also wounded. The enemy was quieter last night, and the casualty return for the last twenty-four hours is, I hope, moderate. The erection of No. 3 costs a good many men.

Sept. 13.—After I wrote yesterday, the left batteries opened against the Water bastion and curtain, with one gun bearing on the causeway leading to the bridge, and have continued in full play. They have to endure a warm musketry-fire from the walls, and shot and shell from Seelymghurh, and from across the river.

The army has suffered a severe loss in the death of Capt. Fagan, of the artillery. He was an admirable officer, and has been the life of the camp. His daring was unbounded, and he could not be restrained from exposing himself over the breastwork to observe the line of fire from the new battery, and was shot through the head.

The other casualties are Lieut. Earle, artillery, and Chancellor, 75th, wounded. The loss among the men is held to be moderate.

The centre batteries have continued an increasing fire against the Cashmere bastion and curtain, and the mortars keep up a searching fire on its neighbourhood. No. 1 still grinds away at the Moree.

The enemy have mounted a heavy gun in two places on half-moons in the wall, and are persevering in their enfilade from the right, and are doing their best to defend the place.

The officers never leave the batteries, which are open to the sky. But the only men who are dispirited are those whom sickness or wounds keep in camp.

Sept. 14.—Delhi was stormed this morning, and the British forces are in possession of the line of defences from the Water bastion to the Cabul gate, including the Cashmere gate and bastion, and the Moree gate and bastion, the English church, Skinner's house, the college, and the grounds about. Preparations are being made to turn the guns from the captured bastions on the city, and to bring up other guns and mortars to commanding points.

The enemy for the present retain the Lahore and other bastions, the Palace, Seelymghurh, and the chief part of the city; but our hold of the position that has been secured appears firm, and the fall of the remainder is to be expected.

Gen. Nicholson, Col. Campbell, 52nd, Maj. Reed, Sirmoor batt.

are among the wounded officers, who are numerous. Lieuts. Bradshaw, 52nd, and Fitzgerald, 75th, were killed.

A body of troops was observed to march off by the bridge, but pursuit is impracticable until Seelymghur and the river front have been occupied.

The chief losses were experienced in attempting to reach the Jumma Musjid, and to penetrate beyond the Cabul gate.

The following description is from a letter from Col. Becher:—

"The troops entered at the breach near the Cashmere gate without serious opposition, and gained possession of the large buildings in its neighbourhood, and advanced along the ramparts to the Moree bastion and Cabul gate; in progress to which the resistance was very obstinate, and the loss consequently has been severe. But we are advancing gradually within the city.

"Large bodies of the enemy have been seen retreating both in the direction of the Kotub and over the bridge. Arrangements are making for batteries to be made in the city, and their heavy guns have been turned against them."

GENERAL WILSON'S ORDER TO THE TROOPS AT DELHI, ON THE EXPECTED ASSAULT.—The force assembled before Delhi has had much hardship and fatigue to undergo since its arrival in this camp, all of which has been most cheerfully borne by officers and men. The time is now drawing near when the major-general commanding the force trusts that their labours will be over, and they will be rewarded by the capture of the city, for all their past exertions, and for a cheerful endurance of still greater fatigue and exposure. The troops will be required to aid and assist the engineers in the erection of the batteries and trenches, and in daily exposure to the sun, as covering parties. The artillery will have even harder work than they yet have had, and which they have so well and cheerfully performed hitherto; this, however, will be for a short period only, and when ordered to the assault, the major-general feels assured, British pluck and determination will carry everything before them, and that the bloodthirsty and murderous mutineers, against whom they are fighting, will be driven headlong out of their stronghold, or be exterminated; but to enable them to do this, he warns the troops of the absolute necessity of their keeping together, and not straggling from their columns. By this can success only be secured.

Major-General Wilson need hardly remind the troops of the cruel murders committed on their officers and comrades, as well as their wives and children, to move them in the deadly struggle. No quarter should be given to the mutineers; at the same time, for the sake of humanity, and the honour of the country they belong to, he calls upon them to spare all women and children that may come in their way.

It is so imperative, not only for their safety, but for the success of the assault, that men should not straggle from their columns, that the major-general feels it his duty to direct all commanding officers to impress this strictly upon their men, and he is confident that, after this warning, the men's good sense and discipline will induce them to obey their officers, and keep steady to their duty. It is to be explained to every regiment that indiscriminate plunder will not be allowed; that prize agents have been appointed, by whom all captured property will be collected and sold, to be divided according to the rules and regulations on this head, fairly among all men engaged; and that any man found guilty of having concealed captured property, will be made to restore it, and will forfeit all claims to the general prize; he will also be likely to be made over to the provost-marshal to be summarily dealt with. The major-general calls upon the officers of the force to lend their zealous and efficient co-operation in the erection of the works of the siege now about to be commenced; he looks especially to the regimental officers of all grades, to impress upon their men, that to work in the trenches during a siege is as necessary and honourable as to fight in the ranks during a battle. He will hold all officers responsible for their utmost being done to carry out the directions of the engineers, and he confidently trusts that all will exhibit a healthy and hearty spirit of emulation and zeal, from which he has no doubt that the happiest results will follow, in the brilliant termination of all their labours.

We now return to the official bulletins of the Lahore Government:—

Sept. 15.—We continue to hold the city from the College to the Cabool gate, and the enemy holds the magazine, which we are now shelling. The palace is also being shelled. Many of the mutineers had fled yesterday. The following officers were killed:—Lieut. Tandy, engineers; Lieut. Fitzgerald, 75th foot; Lieut. Bradshaw, 52nd foot; Capt. M^r Barnett, 53th infantry; Lieut. Murray, Guide Corps; Major Jacob, 1st fusiliers, has died from his wounds. About thirty officers have been wounded, including Brig.-Gen. Nicholson; Lieut. Nicholson, of Coke's regiment; Greathed, Maunsell, Chesney, Salkeld, Brownlow, Hovenden, and Medley, engineers; Waters and Curtis, 60th rifles; Ross, of Carabineers (dangerously); Anson, a.-d.-c.; Baynes and Pogson, 8th foot; Greville, Wemyss, and Owen, 1st fusiliers; Reid, Sir-moor battalion; Boisragon, Kumaon battalion, and several others whose names have not yet been received; but our total loss is estimated at 500.

Another message (hour not given) states that "the captured guns on the Mooree and Cabool bastions are also in play on the Burn bastion and Lahore gate—new positions occupied by mutineers. Some cavalry and infantry have left since yesterday evening, but the garrison still shows every intention of disputing our further entrance."

Sept. 15, 8 p.m.—"All well. We have made a breach in the magazine, and storm it at dawn. The enemy's musketry-fire is much reduced."

No official account has yet been received of the successful attack by a portion of General Van Cortlandt's force on the rebel village of Mungella, but a number of the 10th cavalry men have been killed, and thirteen of them, with some others, made prisoners, were immediately executed on the spot. About 20,000 rupees' worth of plunder is said to have fallen into the hands of our men, and eighty horses and some two thousand head of other cattle.

Sept. 16.—"The magazine was stormed at daylight by 61st foot, Belooch battalion, and part of Wilde's regiment. We had only a few wounded, and the enemy about forty killed. One hundred and twenty-five guns were taken in the magazine.

Our mortars continue to play upon the palace from the magazine inclosure. The enemy entirely abandoned the Kishengunge battery, and we have found it, in position, five 18-pounder mortars, making a total number of pieces of ordnance taken in and before Delhi upwards of 200.

The battery across the river opposite Kingurh is also reported to have been abandoned by the mutineers, who are in detached groups fighting from the tops of houses: their organization into regiments is fast being broken up.

Dewan Hurree Chund, the commandant of the auxiliary forces of his Highness the Maharajah Runbheer Sing, died of cholera yesterday. His death is much to be regretted. He was the trusted servant of the Maharajah, and a man of great experience.

A supplementary list of casualties received yesterday mentions Capt. Ross, Carabineers, and Lieut. Humphreys, 4th Punjab infantry, died of their wounds.—Wounded, Sept. 14: Pemberton, H. Gustavinsle, sappers; Cuppage, 6th cavalry; Bayley and Atkinson, 52nd foot; Shebheare, Guides; Graydon, 16th grenadiers; Spece, 65th N.I.; Lambert, 1st fusiliers; Gambie, 38th L.I.; Hay, 60th N.I.; Prior, 1st Punjab infantry.

General Van Cortlandt reports the destruction on the 13th September, by a portion of the Hurrianah irregular force, under his command, of the insurgent village of Mungulphore. The rebels drew up a force of from 700 to 800 horse, from 400 to 500 infantry, and some guns to defend the village; but after the exchange of a few shots, they broke, and fled with the utmost rapidity, leaving their camp in our hands just as it stood, some ammunition, and five cart-loads of sepoy's things; such as coats, pantaloons, &c. &c."

The following was received by express from General Roberts, commanding the forces at Ahmedabad, who dispatched the intelligence to the Governor of Bombay on the 29th of September:—

"By express through Dr. Derinzy, residency surgeon, Jeypore, 23rd September, 5 a.m. We have this moment received information from the Durbar, of our troops having occupied the entire city of Delhi, on Sunday last, the 20th. The vakeel of the Jhujiur Nuwab had been here a little while before, with the same intelligence, so you may rely upon it. The king is said to be in the Durgh Nizam-ooddeen, about six miles from Delhi. He and his two sons escaped disguised as women, and the women of the zenana in men's clothes.

"It was reported at Ahmedabad, upon the strength of letters from Ajmere, that the King of Delhi had been captured."

Mr. Cocks writes as follows from Hattass, on the 17th:—

"A man I sent to Khoorja for news has just returned, and says that two and a half regiments have reached Khoorja, being fugitives from Delhi, and swearing they are off to Lucknow where is their home, and where they will die. The Sepoys are very badly off for arms, and even for lotas, although they have money."

DINAPORE, 6th Sept.—This place is pretty quiet, but people are finking from there being only two guns, and about three hundred European troops. There are two guns and 100 Europeans at Bankipore, and 100 Europeans at the Opium Godown at Patna; the distance from each party is so great, that in the event of an attack, it will be each party for themselves, and God for us all. If Dinapore should go, all Behar will go with it, and, I should say, Calcutta would not be in a very enviable position, since all communication between it and the north-west would be cut off, and the steamers rendered useless. In peaceable times, Dinapore had one European and three native regiments, with a battery of six guns.

Letters from Dinapore mention that the soldiers of H.M.'s 10th regiment have released the two men who were still in confinement, owing to the part they were supposed to have taken in the late affray, and that the soldiers have expressed a determination to take their released comrades under their own protection.

The Hurkaru publishes an account which, in some measure, explains the conduct of the men of the 10th in attacking the sepoy who remained behind at Dinapore. A detachment of Europeans had, on the day the attack was made, been ordered to disarm the native horse artillery at Digah, they were in a mutinous state. During their absence, the sepoy of the 40th N.I. were overheard by a Seikh, who happened to be passing, to say that as there were no Europeans in the station but those on guard, it would be a capital opportunity to seize the battery. The Seikh told the 10th on their return, who, despairing of any peace so long as the sepoys remained in the station, and knowing that it was useless to report matters, determined to take the law into their own hands, and kill all the sepoys. About 20 Europeans left their barrack about 9 P.M. to carry out the resolution of the whole body; but though they conducted their operations with the utmost despatch, the sepoys raised such cries that the men of the 10th only had time to kill about seven, and inflict mortal wounds upon twelve more. The surviving sepoys have left Dinapore on leave, and the Europeans at that station are relieved of these spies.

DIVISION ORDERS.—Major-General Sir James Outram has perused with feelings of the utmost horror and indignation, the proceedings of a Court of Inquest held at Dinapore, on the 17th instant, from which it is too evident that certain European soldiers of H.M.'s 10th foot have stained their hands with the blood of inoffensive men of the 40th N.I., who had laid down their arms in submission to the orders of the British Government, and had reposed on the good faith of that Government, which has thus been compromised by the cowardly acts of assassination committed by its own soldiers.

Unfortunately, the individual perpetrators of this atrocity have not been detected.

Until this has been done, this disgraceful stigma must attach to the whole regiment.

It is with pain that the major-general records such a sentence against a corps which once had so high a character.

The major-general having been compelled by the exigencies of the service to depart from Dinapore before the inquiry could be brought to a final close, and deeming that so grave an offence can only be adequately dealt with by higher authority, refers the proceedings for the orders of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

Until these orders are received, the regiment will attend hourly roll-calls in barracks during the day, and be visited by an officer at uncertain hours during the night, to ascertain that no men are absent.

DARJEELING.—A letter from Darjeeling states that all was quiet in that quarter, but that anxiety was felt for more troops. There are no troops in the station, save 140 convalescent European non-commissioned officers. The writer recommends that a strong depot of artillery should be formed at Kurseong—which would keep Julpigoree in check—and that more European troops be sent up. But for anything of this kind, notwithstanding the vicinity of Bootan, and the large number of women and children in the station—we are afraid our correspondent must wait for some time. If the rumours which reach from the Assam country should turn out well founded, Darjeeling will be no place for European women and children. The question indeed is, is it a fit place for them now?

GYA.—It having come to the knowledge of Mr. Samuells that a considerable force of the rebels were moving in the direction of Gya, he ordered Rattray's men to advance and attack them. In reply to the peremptory orders it was pointed out, that Rattray's force, consisting of about 200 men, stood no chance against the rebels, who numbered about 800, including 300 cavalry and some guns, and that to assume the aggressive would be most dangerous. A remonstrance of this kind, the Commissioner of Patna considered an act of insubordination, and the offended dignity appealed to the Lieut.-Governor for support, of course. His Honour could not but uphold the dictum of Mr. Samuells, and a telegraphic message peremptorily ordered the advance of Rattray's men in accordance with Mr. Samuells' request. They advanced—returned defeated with a loss of about forty men in killed and wounded, and blessed their stars for having escaped altogether.

By latest intelligence received from Gya, we learn that up to the latest date of the quarter for receiving revenue deposits at that collectorate, no deposits have been made by the zemindars. The prospects of the opium revenue for the ensuing year appear to have been blighted.

Mr. Money has applied for more troops. The rebels, with horses, tatoos, and two elephants, have proceeded towards Teekaree.

The Gya people went out against the 5th cavalry, but the latter were too numerous for them. Our side, consisting of 200 men, lost twenty in killed alone. The rebels got into Gya before we could return; they did not loot, but they released all the prisoners. They were off to the Soane, to try and cross at Daood-nuggur.

Ummur Singh, Koor Singh's brother, is badly wounded. He is anxious to cross over to Jugdeespoore, to dig up some treasure there. He has about sixty sepoys, and his people are suffering from fever and want. Hanton is guarding the Soane on the grand trunk-road with sixty Sikhs and two guns.

The Rewah troops have (nearly all) mutinied, and are parleying with the rajah, who has shut himself up in Bandogurh.

Another correspondent thus writes:—

"The sowars have had a brush with Capt. Rattray's small force at Gya. The gallant leader, of the Sikhs was sent to Gya to stop their crossing the Fulgo river. He did so, and was taken at certain great disadvantages. Before he had crossed, the sowars dashed up; the firing continued from nine to two o'clock in a dark night; but the rebels succeeded at least in crossing the river. Our casualties were small, however.

"The rebels entered Gya; the Europeans had to take shelter in a fortified house prepared for that purpose; but, for all that, the rascals succeeded in raising a regular confusion throughout the city, in which a moonsiff and darogah lost their lives. The sowars then took the way to Teekaree, where they compelled the rajah and ranees to treat them very kindly; the former was obliged to give them something in cash, and the latter to furnish provisions to them.

"Modhnarian Singh, the Rajah of Teekaree is dead. He departed this life the day the sowars left his town."

Gya is in a sad state of desolation, almost all the property is destroyed. The prisoners actually sold gentlemen's buggies to each other for three and four annas each. Books cast into the compound and ruined by the rain, pianos smashed, furniture destroyed, and empty bottles even broken and collected in heaps on the road."

HYDRABAD.—The Mohurrum has passed, and there has been no disturbance. Solarjung paid devoted attention to provide security for the Residency, by posting numerous guards within the city and in the suburb between it and the Residency, and at all places of great resort. Shumshool-oomrah, on the last day of the ceremonies, had the rear of the Residency occupied by a guard of 150 horse and foot, to prevent insurgents from the city making a detour upon the Residency from that side; the political effect of this not very strong support was good—it showed that this respectable man was with us. The Residency has been fortified in a manner, and they were prepared with their means, such as it was, to make a stout defence. The Residency was not to be abandoned; our prestige must not be lowered, especially here, for though 20,000 were to beat 500 of our men, the prevailing opinion would be, and they will become presumptuous from it, that their city contains a class of soldiers superior to the English. Col. Davidson has been vigilant, and carries along with him the sovereign and the minister, and the highest noblemen, the relations and counsellors of the sovereign, Shumshul-oomrah. Solarjung's devotedness to provide for the security of the Residency was seen in the incessant attention paid to this object, and in the judicious arrangements made by him for that purpose. He has intelligence enough to understand that the permanence of the sovereignty in the present dynasty depends upon the continuance of the alliance with the English, and in its possessing, I will not say a paramount, a directing influence in the State. I wish this could be better understood here than it is. We have the example before the accession of the Nizam-ool-Moolk to the musnud of four sovereigns being assassinated in the short space of thirteen years.

The brigadier, Colonel Coffin, is placing himself in a strong posture of defence, and otherwise making good arrangements to meet such difficulties as may occur incidentally. Twenty-eight guns are placed in position at the artillery barracks, which are being intrenched, and where we have 184 European artillerymen, and other guns are posted elsewhere. A few Enfield rifles, which were lying idle in the arsenal, have been made over to the 3rd European infantry, and, what is better than all, the foot artillerymen are being taught to ride; they have already been taught gunnery; so that in case of necessity, they might assist in the management of the horse artillery battery. It was impossible that the repeated defections of the regiments in Bengal, trusted by their officers, should not put us upon our guard, and make us resort to extraordinary precaution, although events in the end might show that they were unnecessary.

HYDERABAD IN SCINDE.—Sept. 11th.—The Battery at Hyderabad, Scinde, was disarmed on Wednesday the 9th. This was thought necessary on account of information given by the Subadar Major to Lieutenant Battiscombe, of some plotting going on among the men. The energetic measures taken by Brigadier Morris quite foiled their plans. A parade of the battery was ordered at 4 o'clock at the extreme end of the lines. After the gunners were inspected by the Brigadier, they were disarmed, their swords taken from them, and the guns were removed to the Fort, where there is a party of Europeans, and where all the European inhabitants are located. The gunners were completely surprised, and of course did not offer the slightest resistance. Our active engineer, Lieutenant Merriman, is putting the fort into a state of complete repair, and we have now, we trust, no further cause of alarm.

The authorities at Kurrachee have acted with the greatest promptitude. The half of the newly raised Volunteer Battery, and a detachment of the Fusiliers, were at once despatched to the scene of disturbance.

JHODPORE.—Captain Monck Mason, political agent at Jhodpore, writes on the 12th September that all is quiet at Rajpootana. A terrific thunder-storm had occurred at Jhodpore on the 10th. A Hindoo temple in the fort had been struck by lightning, and three powder magazines exploded; great damage to the fort, and great loss of life. The property destroyed in the city valued at five lakhs, while the loss of the rajah is estimated at six lakhs. Two hundred and thirty dead bodies had been dug out the next day from the ruins, and the medical officers of the agency were doing all in their power to render aid to the wounded.

KISHNAGHUR.—The following is an extract of a letter from Kishnaghur:—

"I am glad to inform you that this district continues in the most quiet, orderly state, and not the least symptom of discontent or disaffection on the part of the people. In the adjoining district of Jessore this is equally the case; and I understand also it is much the same in that of Moorsshedabad. It would seem some people are alarming themselves about sepoys passing down the rivers in boats. I believe the story to be without foundation; and residents on the banks of the Bhagerutty, Jellinghee, and Matabangah, can find no trace of such a tale being true. A gentleman also who holds large property in Jessore reports to me that the tale about sepoys coming down the Coomra and Gosaie rivers is pure nonsense. Some timid people have been much alarmed with the story, and have thought of sending their families to Calcutta; whereas I believe the whole consists of one of those mischievous rumours that have lately got abroad—nobody knows how—and without a particle of truth to recommend it."

Our indigo season is just terminating most unfavourably, and with fully a quarter in many of the large concerns below what was confidently expected two months ago. I have seen most incorrect reports in the papers as to what the different factories in this district have made. The following is, I believe, a pretty accurate list of the outturn in some concerns:—Mechindipore, about 1,450 mds.; Katchkatta, about 800; Lokonatpore, about 750; Sindoorie, about 800; Khalbalya, about 700; Mullnath, about 800; Katgarrah, about 350; Putkabarry, about 800; Hurrah, about 435; Sonadah, about 280; Moisingunge, about 450; Moiseda and Kissenpore, about 340; Culna, about 540; Gobraungunge, about 200; Banshareah and Hanskolly, about 650; Katullea, about 400; Baimoodie, about 425; the Barasset concern, about 200. The rice crop, I am happy to say, is most favourable; a great blessing, as the high price of the article lately has been a sad tax upon the people, and has been the cause of much misery.

KURRACHEE.—Sept. 14.—"You will be sorry to learn that the 21st regiment N.I. were disarmed here last night at twelve p.m., in consequence of information given to Major McGrigor by two subadars of his regiment, last night at half past eleven, that the whole of the regiment had arranged to loot the treasury, arsenal, magazine, and the camp bazaar, at twelve p.m. Major McGrigor immediately assembled his officers, and then rode to the 2nd Europeans, of whom four companies are here at present, and then to the artillery, and got them ready. Measures were taken to get the European ladies of the station assembled at the mess-house of the 2nd Europeans. The men of the 2nd Europeans and the artillery were marched to the lines of the 21st, and just as they were coming near, a bugle was sounded from the 21st N.I. for the men to assemble, as arranged by them, to loot the station. They were surprised to find themselves surrounded by the men of the 2nd and the artillery, and ordered to pile arms, which they did, after which the lines were searched, and it is reported a very large number of swords, cutlasses, and hatchets (very sharp), were found, and many of the muskets ready loaded. It is now found that about twenty-five of the men of the 21st have run away yesterday with their muskets, and the police have gone in search of them."

The following is an extract of a letter from Kurrachee, dated 23rd September:—

"Many arrests have taken place amongst the sepoys of the 21st N.I., subsequent to the date of my last letter; seven have been hanged, and one transported for life, on account of his extreme youth. This evening one was blown away from a gun, and nineteen were sentenced to transportation for the term of their natural lives. The man blown away was the ringleader, and held the rank of havildar in the 21st. This man deserted his corps on the night of the 13th, when the regiment was disarmed; he, with two others, was apprehended about twenty miles west of Kotree. They had their muskets with them ready loaded, but by a stratagem on the part of the police authorities, they were first disarmed and then arrested; which was effected on the 17th, four days after the 21st was disarmed. This gives a total of forty-three mutineers disposed of, namely, fourteen hanged, three brought in with their heads cut off, four blown away from guns, and twenty-two transported."

We understand that orders have been received for fortifying the arsenal at Kurrachee without delay. Fort Bukkur is also being put into thorough repair for the reception of ordnance stores.

Some of the Christians living in the vicinity of the sepoy lines quit their homes every night, and seek shelter in more secure places. We are anything but safe. No one is to be out after ten p.m. under pain of imprisonment. A volunteer corps has been raised of gentlemen and non-military men, including clerks and others; they patrol the camp all night. The services of the seamen belonging to the vessels in harbour, three of which are French, are put in requisition for guarding the treasury and other duties. About twenty-five individuals have already enrolled their names as volunteers, all bachelors, the married men having been advised to remain at home to protect their families. The volunteers have been supplied with arms from the Government stores.

A wing of H.M.'s 4th regiment (King's own) has since arrived in Kurrachee, and confidence has been completely restored.

LUCKNOW.—The Hurkaru has been favoured with the following account of the proceedings at Lucknow, from the beginning of May to 23rd July, 1857, by "a Sufferer":—

"While insurrections of the worst type were raging at Meerut, Delhi, Muttra, &c. the aspect of the British Government in Oude looked daily more gloomy. Preparations to meet the melancholy occurrences in the metropolis were vigorously made. Grains of all sorts were daily purchased and stocked; fuel piled; and commissariat and magazine stores collected and laid in. The old castle Muchibhowun was repaired, armed, and manned. The residency premises were fortified with all engineering skill. All European soldiers and officers, together with about 200 native and Sikh sepoys, were concentrated into the Residency; free quarters to all Christians (living in the city and suburbs), were liberally given in the edifice. A voluntary corps was raised (composed of clerks, gentlemen, and unposted military officers, who had been thrown out of the service on account of mutiny), armed and drilled. The police force was augmented, and nocturnal patrolling ordered. In short, Sir Henry Lawrence adopted all measures to avert the impending danger which prudence could dictate.

On the night of the 19th of the month, portions of the three native regiments cantoned at Mundgaon revolted; burnt down their officers' bungalows; plundered all they could reach; shot down all who opposed them, and ultimately joined the rebels in Delhi.

The telegraph and electric communications in the surrounding countries were cut off. To keep them open the Lieutenant-Governor of the N. W. Provinces requested Sir Henry Lawrence to depute some discreet officers and troops to Allypore. Captain Hayes and five other officers, together with two troops of Oude Irregular Horse, were ordered to proceed towards the above station. The troopers nearing their destination put all their officers to death, and proceeded to Delhi to join the mutinous yelet Delhi Royal Army.

Captain Weston, superintendent of military police, was sent about this time to Mullyabad, a village about nine miles from Lucknow, to suppress an émeute; he finding the inclination of his troops to fraternize with the rebels, retreated in all haste to Lucknow.

The local regiments stationed in the districts began about this time to mutiny also, taking possession of the Government treasure, ammunition, guns, and arms, placed for security under their guard. They killed some officers, ladies, children, Christians, and Bengali baboos, and plundered their property: those who escaped their rage went over to Lucknow or elsewhere under various disguises.

In the middle of June, intelligence of the gathering of the mutinous regiments and rebellious zemindars at Nawabgunge reached Sir Henry Lawrence, who sent escorts to reconnoitre their position and movements; nothing further was done for want of sufficient troops.

On the 29th June, a report of the march of the insurgents to Lucknow was brought in again. Sir Henry Lawrence issued out of this city with 200 Europeans, 6 guns, and some police burkundazes, and planted a battery at Kookral to check their progress; but their number being overwhelming, lost the guns, and retreated to Lucknow. On the way, about 104 Europeans were killed. On arriving at the iron bridge over the Goomtee (near the city), he endeavoured again to oppose their passage over the bridge; but the rebels, crossing the river at several fordable places, penetrated into the heart of this city. Sir Henry, finding his plan frustrated, entered into the Residency, and stood the siege.

The rebels, after taking possession of the city, opened trenches round the Residency, and kept up a continuous fire of musketry and guns. At times combined attacks of all mutinous regiments and rabble troops were made upon the Residency, but were heroically met by the Europeans and repulsed with slaughter. The shells made great havoc among the rascals, and struck their hearts with terror.

The number of the rebels was about 125,000 men: among them there were 14 regiments of mutinous sepoys, 3 resalals of irregular horse, 4 troops of local horse artillery; the remainder all rabble troops; these are imperfectly armed, ill paid, and ill provisioned. The men are no doubt courageous.

The most conspicuous among the rebels were Rajah Goorbuccus with about 20,000 followers.

Nowab Ally with about 4,000 followers.

Pathans of Malzabad about 3,000 in number.

The Amirs or Mahomedan nobles, begums, and wealthy mahajuns supplied the rebels with provisions.

Killing and plundering the Christians and Baboos were the order of the day. The bloody acts continued for some days. Plundering extended over the commercial class of men also.

On the 30th of June, one of the young sons of the ex-king, named Birjis Kadur Buhadoor, sat upon the guddee as a minister to the king of Delhi. Tom-tom was beat to this purport:—His naib or deputy was named a shuruf-ood-dowla, formerly a minister in late Nusr-ood-dowla's time. He held the reins of government; re-enlisted the disbanded regiments of Wajid Shah; invited the petty rajahs and great zemindars to join him with all their followers; issued orders to the zemindars and villagers, &c. to kill all Europeans and Baboos passing through their villages; and held out alluring promises to the annihilation of the Europeans and their dependents.

Since the annexation of that country by Lord Dalhousie, dark conspiracies had been fostered with secrecy and diligence by the dethroned princes, wealthy and great zemindars, and the sycophant nobles and dismissed courtiers. Secret and seditious correspondence among them was always carried on. Attempts were at times made to excite the people by means of fanatic Moulvies, or disguised emissaries; and at times they were promptly smothered; but never finally extinguished by the local authorities. Inquiries were some times made to discover the miscreants; but the native agency through which they were conducted, being interested in the country, and bribed for misrepresentation, the object was always defeated. The little though troublesome affair of the late Fuzul Ally, had a kindred connection with this conspiracy. He was secretly supplied with men and money by the conspirators to perpetrate atrocities on the north of the provinces. Nobody informed the British officers of the whereabouts of this desperado, not even a single peasant, although all of them had a thorough knowledge of his movements. A day or two before the horrible tragedy of the life of the late Mr. Boileau, deputy commissioner of Barraitch, deliberately perpetrated by Fuzul Ally, the rajah of that place, to show his innocence, went into Lucknow to pay his respects to the Burra Sahib. This rascal was at the bottom of the murder, and had supplied men and money to Fuzul Ally for the purpose.

Since the outbreak of the insurrection, the people have been led to believe that the English had intended to convert all the Hindoos and Mahomedans into Christians; mills in Lucknow were consequently stopped, and some boat-loads of atta, mixed with finely-pounded bones, were imported, and introduced into the market. Now, as the insurgents have committed excessive outrages, and are afraid of the just vengeance which awaits them, they have given the people to understand that the English soldiers will spare no black man of the realm; they ought, therefore, to allow no Englishman to pass alive through their country. Some thousands of men, under Rajah Goorobuccus Sing, and four or five mutinous regiments, have posted themselves on the shore opposite to Cawnpore Ghaut of the Ganges, and thrown trenches round them to resist the landing of the English troops.

The rebels are well armed for close fighting. They are brave men, no doubt; but they won't stand the platoon-firing of the English soldiers: they are, moreover, afraid of the bursting of the fatal shells, the effects of which they have witnessed with horror in Lucknow. They have guns of various calibres, and muskets mostly matchlocks; a few only with flints. The powder they use is of very inferior sort; it is not readily ignited. They have no regular magazine for it, the article is expensive; they cannot afford to buy it in large quantities. They would have had no arms to handle in the present crisis, had the British Government held domiciliary searches for them after the annexation of the country, as in the Punjab, and wrenched every one of them from the owners.

In the present excited state of the country, I do not think a few regiments of Europeans can penetrate into Lucknow to afford relief to the besieged brave English soldiers and officers in the Residency, keeping up the communication with Cawnpore on the rear.

The passage via Gogra is beset with danger; besides the shallowness of the river after rains, the whole line of the bank on the Oude side is studded with mud forts of zemindars, mounted with guns, and a vigilant watch is kept up in them day and night.

MEERUT.—The operations of the "demonstration" column, had been successful on the evening of the 10th Sept., in repelling with loss the Malagurh insurgents on this side of Hauppur. The guns of the rebels were silenced, and one of them disabled; but, in consequence of the darkness, we were unable to follow up the defeat. It was subsequently discovered that they had sixteen killed, besides many wounded. They had abandoned their guns and fled for some distance; but, on hearing that we had retired, afterwards carried them off. We met with no less. The Jat population, almost without any support from us, seem sufficient to keep Wuleedad Khan in check.

MIRZAPORE.—The town of Mirzapore is barricaded, and all business is suspended. A large number of the railway boats have been plundered, and but very little grain is carried to Mirzapore, on account of the unsafe state of the river.

MOOLTAN.—By a letter from Mooltan dated 13th Sept., we learn that on that date, a movable column was ordered to be in readiness at a moment's warning, to proceed on service, composed as follows:—30 artillery with 2 guns; 100 fusiliers; 200 Sikhs; 150 Mooltan horse; the whole under the command of Lieut. Taylor, 1st fusiliers. The destination of the force was not known.

MURREE.—The hill sanitarium of Murree has been threatened. A number of men of some of the adjacent villages, allured by the hope of plunder, assembled to attack it. They had, however been repulsed, and assistance sent up from Rawulpindee.

Elsewhere all remains quiet in the Punjab.

A small force of Europeans, Sikhs, and police, is reported to have moved out from Murree, attacked and dispersed an assemblage of the villagers, and destroyed their villages. A few of the villagers were killed, and we had one European wounded.

The disturbance at Murree, which was confined to the inhabitants of a few villages in the vicinity, incited by the desire for plunder, has been put down. A few of the culprits were shot. Further reinforcements are not deemed necessary.

NAGPORE, August 31.—The Mohurram has passed off quietly. A Mahomedan Jemadar of the Rissalah, convicted by a court-martial, was hanged on the 27th instant, during the festival. Five other native officers have been hanged; and all the others (except five, who were absent on leave), together with 37 non-commissioned officers and troopers, have been expelled the regiment. The Havildar of the Irregular Cavalry and three city rebels, one of whom was a Moolkee Sowar, have also been hanged.

All right at Sumbulpore to the 27th inst. Seventy-two picked Sowars, under Lieut. Napier, of the 3rd Irregular N.I., have been sent from Raepore to join the 2nd Company of the 40th Madras N.I. marching from Cuttack to its aid.

NAGODE.—The following is from Nagode, dated September:—"As we received our Calcutta daks of the 1st and 3rd to-day, via Mirzapore, I presume that the rebels have left that ghaut at all events; and I therefore write a line to tell you what is going on in these parts, which will, I have no doubt, reach you sooner than the letter I sent you yesterday, via Nagode. The rebels who passed up in this direction some ten days ago are, we hear, still at Banda; they consist of the 7th, 8th, and 40th regiments (at least what Major Eyre's gallant little force left of them). They are supposed to be waiting for the party which ascended the Kutra Pass the other day, and which party, we are told, were so hard up for ammunition, that they kindly proposed taking Nagode en route to Delhi, in order to send to the 50th to bring their magazine and treasure, and all go together to Delhi; a very nice arrangement: but when the rebels had got within six miles of Rewah, and the Rajah of that place had told the political agent, and the other officers there to leave, as he could not protect them, and he himself had sent his zenana, and the townspeople and their women to a place of safety, they, i. e. the rebels, in the, to us, most mysterious manner, turned round and went back again.

"The party is supposed to consist of the Ramgurh battalion and Kooer Sing's rabble, and is reported to be about 4,000 strong. They still, I believe, have a hankering after the Nagode magazine and six-pounders, and talk of coming this way. The night before last, a native went up to a native officer of the 50th, and said that the Shahghur rajah would be much obliged if he would bring the regiment to help him to fight the Punnah rajah (who is our ally). The native officer put him into confinement, and the next morning he was told that he would be strung up if he did not tell all he knew. He then said that there were two other men with him, and that they had the paper for the regiment to sign; these two men are not to be found, they having run away directly they thought the place was getting too hot for them. I believe the Shahghur man offered fifteen rupees a month to the sepoys, and all sorts of chances to any one."

The 52nd Bengal light infantry companies left at Jubbulpore have decamped, and passing through where a detachment of the regiment were, under Lieutenant MacGregor of that corps, made that officer a prisoner. On this intelligence reaching Dumoh, the two companies of the 52nd Bengal light infantry with the Madras column were at once disarmed by Colonel Millar. The 50th Bengal light infantry, being told to prepare to proceed against Kooer Sing (supposed to be marching to attack Nagode), appeared delighted so to do, and assisted their officers in destroying all surplus ammunition and muskets. They marched out of cantonment with their officers for a mile or two, and then a voice from the ranks gave the order to "halt," and the officers were told to make themselves scarce, as their services were no longer required. The officers have arrived at Jubbulpore, and the 50th Bengallees have returned to Nagode and burnt down all the public buildings. Part of the Madras column have had a brush with the Boondelaha, killing fifty, and taking three guns and thirty-two prisoners, of whom twelve have been strung up on the nearest trees. The 4th Light Cavalry crossed the river here yesterday, en route to Jubbulpore and Delhi. The 6th Light Cavalry, which have arrived here from Jaulnah, hope soon to follow. We have not had a murmur of disaffection in any of the Madras troops here, notwithstanding the blundering Hurkaru states that the 50th Madras Native Infantry have partially mutinied at Nagpore, the 50th Madras Native Infantry being at Bangalore, only 700 miles from Nagpore, and never having shown the slightest bad feeling. To improve matters, too, that wiseacre of the Friend states that no doubt the 32nd and 26th Regiments will coalesce with the 50th.—Bombay Times.

PATNA.—The following is an extract from a letter dated Patna, 3rd September:—

"We are all quiet here thus far, I am thankful to say, and have passed peacefully through the dreaded Mohurram. Just now our fears are excited on account of the 5th Irregulars who are said to be close at hand; if so, may God protect us, for they are a cruel set. The Opium Godowns and the Magistrate's Cutcherry are being rapidly fortified, as well as boats in readiness for flight.

Patna and Dinapore are still safe and peaceable for the present; but the people are actually disgusted at the continuation of an alarming state of things. It is highly desirable to restore peace and tranquillity in this province as speedily as possible. One thing also most indispensably requisite is the immediate removal of Moonshie Ameer Ally. The Mahomedans are gaining courage every day.

RAJPOOTANA.—Our Neemuch correspondent writes as follows, under date the 7th instant:—

"A portion of the force from Nusseerabad has gone out to intercept the mutineers of the Joudpore legion, under the personal command of General Lawrence. They made thirty-six miles in the first march, which shows that the grass is not likely to grow under their feet, at all events."

CAMP BEAUR, 13TH SEPT., 1857.—We are still at this place. We tried to march three days ago, but, after being out some hours in a drenching rain, had to return, the road being impassable. The rest of the horse artillery and fifty more Europeans came out yesterday from Nusseerabad. The force now consists of a troop of horse artillery, three guns, two howitzers, two small mortars, two squadrons of lancers, 200 of the 83rd regiment, and 200 of the Mhairwarra battalion. We are to march again to-morrow, and ought to be before Sooh, where the mutineers are, in four or five marches. From spies, &c., we learn that the enemy are about 2,000, including 600 regulars, with eleven guns. The raja of Joudpore had a force of irregulars besieging them; but their camp was attacked, and they were totally dispersed, losing all their guns, some seven or eight. The mutineers are in great feather after this; and I should not wonder if they come out to give us battle when we get near.

A Deesa letter of the 28th August informs us that all was quiet at that station. A detachment of her Majesty's 83rd Foot from Nusseerabad and Ajmere, with two guns of the second troop H.A., and a party of the 2nd Light Cavalry, had a brush with the mutineers of the Joudpore Legion at Soojut. One man of the infantry was killed, and a number wounded. On escalating the walls of the fort, it was discovered that the rebels had evacuated it, and fled to the jungles.

Extract of letter dated Ajmere, 13th of Sept., 1857.—"The Thakoor of Awah, a place 34 miles S.E. of Pullee has shewn his teeth and taken command of the Joudhpore Legion mutineers, consisting of 350 infantry, 180 cavalry, and two 9-pounder guns. The general has been detained at Beawur by rains, but marches from there to-day with five guns, Petrie's Troop H.A., 200 of the 83rd Queen's, 250 Mhair, 240 Lancers, and three Companies of Bheels; so he ought to give the scoundrels a good thrashing. The Kotah Contingent officers reached Nusseerabad on the 11th inst., and have proceeded to Beawur to join the general.

SIMLAH, August 13.—"Our volunteer corps is composed of four companies, respectively commanded by Captains Mackenzie, Jenkins, Campbell, and Ross. The volunteers mustered in the first place upwards of 100, but have received several additional members lately, principally refugees from below: they have already made a tolerable proficiency in, to what is to most, their new vocation of arms, being drilled thrice a week. Our energetic Commissioner, Lord W. M. Hay, has called in contingents, amounting to nearly 300 men, from some of our faithful allies the hill chiefs; and to crown the whole, we have about 100 men of the Nusseeree battalion, principally Goorkhas, so that the numerical strength of our protective force may fairly be reckoned at upwards of 500—a force amply sufficient, aided by the difficulties of approach, and the natural strength of our mountain retreat, to repel four times, or even more, that number of Poorbeah marauders, should they think it worth their while to visit our mountain fastnesses: for the Goorkhas have regular muskets and their darling kookrees; the contingents have matchlocks and tulwars; the volunteers have fifty stand of regular arms, the remainder being fully supplied with double-barrelled guns and fowling-pieces, with a goodly sprinkling of pistols and swords. We have, besides two 6-pounders to defend the strong position of the Simlah bank, together with the residences of the Rev. Mr. Mayne, and Lady Campbell, two houses contiguously situated on the same hill, which have been chosen as places of refuge, affording, as they do, ample accommodation for all the European families in the station.

"Report says a Brahmin of great reputed sanctity, residing at Subathoo, not long since wrote to the rajah of Puttiallah, proposing to massacre all the Christians in Dugshaie, Kussoolee, Subathoo, and Simlah, if he would give him the assistance of a few thousands of his troops. The rajah sent him a written reply, to the effect that the proposition was acceptable, and that the bairagee would learn all particulars regarding his wishes if he would follow the sower who bore him the letter. The bairagee followed the emissary immediately, who conducted him at once to Mr. Barnes, the commissioner at Umballah, that being the destination intended for him by the rajah. So far is report; the following, however, is known to be perfectly true—that Mr. Barnes found the proofs of the Brahmin's intended cold-blooded treachery so strong, that, without going through the farcical form of a trial, he hung him up at once; and so perished one who, but for the friendship of the rajah of Puttiallah, would have attempted the massacre of those who had trusted him for years past, and under whose rule he had amassed riches, for he is said to have been a very wealthy man.

"The district round Shaharunpore, continues disturbed and settles down but slowly, though Mr. Spankie, the magistrate, still holds his own bravely.

"The common necessities of life, which I hear are scarce at some of the stations, we have here in abundance, and the prices are scarcely higher than at any other time, though we have to pay cash before the sellers will consent to part with their wares. European articles, however, are becoming exceedingly scarce.

"Sufficient praise cannot be bestowed on the untiring zeal of our Deputy-commissioner, Lord William Hay, whose judicious arrangements and energy have as yet preserved our station from any disturbances, except those which originated in the imaginations of the timid."

September 10.—The insurgents, or at least the infantry portion of them, with their guns and treasure, have left their head-quarters at Dorundah, and proceeded towards Palamo, near Korundah, but the cavalry are still at Dorundah, and appear to be faithful. Our Madras and Sikh troops have pursued them, and may very likely overtake them. Major Simpson, the Principal Assistant Commissioner of Hazareebagh, I hear, has resumed his office, and all the civil officers at Chota Nagpore have joined their respective posts. Everything is quiet at present.

A nawab residing at Nagpore, a man of considerable influence, and possessed, it is said, of twenty-four lakhs of rupees, has been hanged. He was implicated in the rising that was to have taken place on the 13th of June, and was executed on the 16th of August, for having offered a large sum of money to his caste-men if they would exterminate every European residing at Nagpore. The drill naique attached to the Nagpore irregular force was hanged on the 14th of August, for having offered to make over the guns of his battery to the insurgents. He was a man possessed of considerable influence amongst his comrades, and a thorough villain. On the drop he abused the officer in command of the Seetabuldee hill, and the hangman for not being more expeditious in sending him to paradise. We think that in such cases a flogging would not be inefficacious. The sepoys at Nagpore are thoroughly knocked up with hard work. They mount guard by day and picket the following evening. There are not above sixty-four European troops at Nagpore; twenty-four are stationed in the residency, and forty in the Seetabuldee hill. Two guns, under the escort of a lance tinda, have been sent to Hoshungabad, which is about 150 miles from Nagpore. There is some fear lest these guns fall into the hands of the rebels, since they will have to pass through a most turbulent district. A conspiracy has been discovered at Baitool. Baitool is 105 miles from Nagpore. The ringleader, a Moulvie, and ten of his followers have been apprehended. The officer in command at Baitool has sent to Nagpore for guns. They cannot be sent until the return of the escort from Hoshungabad. At Kamptee a regiment called the Sebundee corps has been raised. They are armed with the muskets that formerly belonged to the old rajah, and it is expected will do good service. The movable column started from Jubulpore on the 21st of August, which place they reached on the 2nd. Sergeant Bregan, late of the 17th N.I., an overseer of the road, blew his brains out. He was considered a sober steady man.—Friend of India.

UMBALLA.—The Englishman publishes the following extract from a letter, dated the 20th August:—

"Of the 5th N.I. of this station, there remain here but two or three companies; but they can do no harm, having been all disarmed. The 4th lancers, native cavalry, have been all disarmed and sent away; only twenty men have been kept to work as sowars to carry about letters, &c.

"There are a few hundred of the cavalry and infantry belonging to the Rajah of Puttealla; but our only dependence is on the three companies of the 8th Queen's regt. about 250 men. There are about ninety more Europeans of this and other regiments here, but most of them are sick and wounded men returned from Delhi. We have had fortifications erected round the new church, and four guns have been mounted on the towers of the new fortification. We have six guns now, and a few European artillerymen. The authorities have hanged a great number of the sepoys, and numbers of the native officers and sepoys have been blown from the mouths of our cannons. Eli Bux, a rich, noted merchant, a Vakeel, and some others, were publicly whipped by order of the authorities, for using seditious language, which had the good effect of quieting and frightening the natives in our bazaars, city, and neighbouring villages. The mutinous regiments that openly broke out in Jullundur and elsewhere, passed close to Umballa, and got into Delhi, but none dared to come into the station."

H.M.'s REGIMENTS IN INDIA.—The General commanding-in-chief has directed, with the approbation of Her Majesty, that the subaltern officers of regiments and battalions of infantry in India, including the rifle brigade and the light infantry regiment, are in future to consist of fourteen lieutenants and ten ensigns, exclusive of the adjutant; until the lieutenants at present serving in those regiments or battalions shall have been reduced to fourteen, every alternate clear vacancy among the lieutenants will be allowed to be filled up as usual, and one out of every two clear vacancies will be absorbed, in order that an ensign may be appointed in lieu of a lieutenant, to complete the establishment of the subalterns of the corps.

CAPTAIN R. J. EVANS, of H.M.'s 29th foot, has been appointed "disembarkation officer," with the rank of deputy assistant quarter-master general, on a staff salary of rupees three hundred (300) per mensem, with effect from the 4th September. His duties are to attend to the wants and comfort of the troops as they arrive from England.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL has sanctioned a monthly allowance of 300 instead of 200 rupees for Meer Abdool Hossein Khan, a son of the late Meer Abbas Ali Khan, and a like sum for the widow and her surviving infant son Ahmed Hossein Khan, making thereby a total disbursement of 600 rupees per month until the children respectively attain their majority when their allowances may be reconsidered. His lordship also permitted the family of the late Meer Abbas Ali Khan to return to Scinde, and draw their stipends there and sanctioned 2,000 rupees for their road expenses.

ALI NUCCKI KHAN, the ex-minister of Oude, now a state prisoner in the Fort, is now allowed to inhale the fresh air of the Strand, but the king is still in close confinement.

HOW TO DIE HAPPY.—The Englishman has received a letter from Raneegunge. The writer affirms, that seventeen years ago he heard an old Moulvie, who had been in the service of Government for twenty-two years, declare to "Nat. Smith, the judge of Rungpore," that he could not die happy. The Moulvie was asked the reason, and replied, "Every good Mussulman bates Europeans, and if I could see the throat of every European in India cut, I should die happy."

GOLD AND SILVER.—The Friend of India of Sept. 17 says: "The specie sent from England by the last nine Indian mail-packets amounted to 6,924,060*l.*, or upwards of 100 tons of gold and silver."

THE SONTHALS.—A private letter from Hazareebaugh, dated the 6th of September, affirms that a body of Sonthals had assembled at a place called Mandoo. A detachment of the Ramgurh cavalry were sent out against them. The Sonthals were found, some 300 strong, besieging a house, in which were from thirty to forty people. The Sonthals bolted on the appearance of the sowars, but a few prisoners were taken, and some three or four killed.

THE MHARWARRA BATTALION.—It would appear that there are many Poorbeas in the Mharwarra battalion; indeed, it is difficult to find where Poorbeas are not. A court-martial was recently held upon two Poorbeas of that corps for holding treasonable correspondence with the Delhi mutineers. In the trial it was proved beyond a doubt that the soubadar of the regiment had connived at the treason. The soubadar was sentenced to be dismissed the service, and the two Poorbeas were imprisoned. A few days after the imprisonment of these men, the prisoners rose, the guards were of course not at hand, and the prisoners got off. They were eventually pursued; two of the sowars were wounded, and some twenty of the prisoners killed; and thus 20 lives at the very least were lost for showing mistaken leniency in sparing two. On the whole about 26 prisoners are said to have escaped, and amongst them are the two Poorbeas. The Nusserabad and Ajmere outbreak occurred on the same day, and the soubadar had been dismissed before the émeute.

THE SHIP Jamroo, from Calcutta to Bushire with coal, was scuttled at Galle, on the 28th Aug. The coal had by some means or other ignited, and the captain, having batted down the hatches, managed to reach Galle. He had previously used every exertion to put out the fire and preserve the vessel. She was sunk in about four fathoms water.

CIVIL FURLONGS.—The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council has resolved that no furloughs shall be granted to the members of the civil service in the Presidencies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, during the season 1857-58, except to applicants on medical certificate.

DEATH OF CAPT. W. A. CROMMELIN.—We regret to announce the death of Capt. W. A. Crommelin, of the Bengal infantry, which melancholy event took place at sea, on the 26th Sept., on board the P. and O. Company's steamer Chusan, while on the passage from Kurrachee. Capt. Crommelin served in the Sutlej campaign (medal), and in the Punjab campaigns, being present at the actions of Sadoolapore, Chillianwallah, and Goojerat (medal).

A PERSON who styles himself the Rajah Ram Chunder Sing of Jointiah has forwarded a petition to Government offering his services and assistance to Government in raising the revenue of the province of Orissa.

NAUTES.—We (the Hurkaru) have heard from a creditable source that the Sobha Bazar Rajas have resolved to give no nautches at their residences during the ensuing Durga-puja. Our informant says:—

"The rajas, in common with the respectable portion of the native community, feel the most intense horror and disgust for the ruthless massacres and ravages committed by the rebels, and the distress and anarchy which they have brought on the country. It will be interesting to our readers to learn the origin of the nautches given by the rajas to their European guests during the Durga-puja, and which have been continued from year to year without interruption for a century. After the battle of Plassy, the late Maharaja Nubkrishna Bahadur, who was then moonshee or secretary to Lord Clive, and had taken some part in it, was desirous to give a bal and supper to his lordship and the chief members of the English community in honour of that glorious action, and he thought that there could not be a better opportunity to celebrate it than the great approaching festival of the goddess Durga, which is held in universal estimation by the Hindus of Bengal. We cannot, therefore, but feel gratified at the motives which induced the first raja to give the entertainment, and the present ones (his grandsons) to suspend it at this critical season."

LORD CANNING has forwarded a kharita to the Rajah of Rewah acknowledging his valuable co-operation, and accredited the Political agent to the court of the Rajah of Rewah temporarily on a salary of 800 rupees per month.

THE Government has sanctioned a reward of Rs. 100 for every European taken safely into Rewah.

THE native population, Hindu and Mahomedan, of the villages around Barrackpore, viz., Pulta, Nubabgunge, Muneerampore, Dhitara, Nona, Chununpooker, and others, were disarmed, probably by order of the magistrate of Baraset, on Sunday and Monday, the 13th and 14th of September. Similar measures have been taken in other parts of the Baraset district.

LETTERS have been received from Major Lumsden, at Candahar, of the 13th of August, which report that his party was all well, and was being well treated, and that Herat has been completely evacuated by the Persians.

HIGHWAY robberies, we are informed, are of frequent occurrence on the hilly portion of the grand trunk road. The deputy magistrates on that road have been made aware of the necessity of their being constantly on the alert, and giving their personal superintendence to the proper performance of the duties of the grand trunk road police.

THE 70TH.—We learn that the sepoys of the 70th N.I., on duty at Government House, made over a Mahomedan who was endeavouring to tamper with them, and this man is now under trial in Fort William. Strange to say, he states that since his arrival from the upper country he has been residing with the moonshee of the 70th N.I., who can speak to his character. The prisoner is also a moonshee by profession. Another fellow is under trial, having been found in the batteries, surveying the position of the guns in Fort William.

SUSPENSION ON THE HURKARU.—The Government having taken offence at certain articles which appeared in the Hurkaru, that paper was suspended for a week. At the earnest solicitation of the proprietors the licence was then restored.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

CIVIL ENGINEERING COLLEGE OF FORT WILLIAM.

Fort William, Aug. 11, 1857.—The Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to publish, for general information, the undermentioned rules for the admissions of officers to the Civil Engineering College of Fort William:—

1. European commissioned officers, of her Majesty's or the Hon. Company's armies, under the rank of a field officer, will be permitted to study at the Civil Engineering College of Fort William, on the following terms:—

2. Candidates must be qualified by acquaintance with their military duties, and by having passed the examination in the Hindoostanee language contemplated by G.O. G.G. of the 9th Jan., 1857.

3. Applications should be addressed through commanding officers of regiments to the Principal of the College, who, after satisfying himself that the candidates are likely to profit by the course of study, will forward their applications for the approval of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and this being obtained, the fitness of the candidates will be tested by written examinations in the following subjects—

Arithmetic.

Algebra to quadratic equations included.

Geometry, I. to IV. books of Euclid inclusive.

In the case of officers not at the Presidency, examination papers will be forwarded to the executive engineers of stations, or, in their absence, to officers commanding the corps to which the candidates belong, and they will be requested to have the answers written in their presence, and to transmit them to the Principal, with as little delay as possible.

4. Admissions to the College will take place on the 1st June of each year. Applications should be forwarded so as to permit of candidates joining not later than that date after leave formally granted in general orders.

5. The number of yearly admissions is limited to (5) five. In the event of more than five candidates reaching the standard prescribed, those who have passed the best examination will be recommended to be permitted to study at the College; the remainder will have the option of joining the College as vacancies occur.

6. The duration of the first permission to study at the College will be till the 31st October following admission; but, if the progress of the student be satisfactory, and his conduct exemplary, the Principal will forward his application to head-quarters for permission to remain at the College and complete the course, with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council.

7. The Principal of the College may, at any time, recommend to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief that an officer be remanded to his regiment.

8. Officers studying at the College under these rules will be required to pay Rs. (16) sixteen a month to the College library fund.

9. Officers who obtain permission to study at the College will be considered "absent on duty," and will be so reported in the regimental returns. They will obtain quarters in Fort William, if available, Co.'s Rs. (25) twenty-five per mensem being deducted from their pay on account of house-rent.

POLICE OF CAWNPORE.

Head-quarters, Calcutta, Sept. 11.—The order issued by Brigadier-General J. G. S. Neill, commanding at Cawnpore, dated the 9th ultimo, authorizing the superintendent of police to entertain sixty sowars, with a due proportion of native officers, for the police force there, is, with the sanction of Government, confirmed.

RATES OF INTEREST OF SAVINGS BANKS.

Fort William, Financial Department, Sept. 11, 1857.—The Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council is pleased to direct that, subject to the orders of the Hon. the Court of Directors, the present rates of interest allowed to depositors in the several Government savings banks, viz., 3 per cent. per annum to civil and 3½ per cent. to military depositors, be raised to 4 per cent. per annum on sums lodged by all classes of depositors. The alteration of rate to take effect retrospectively from the 1st instant.

STAFF TO THE ARMY IN THE EAST INDIES.

Fort William, September 18, 1857.—With reference to Government General Order No. 1,178, of the 15th instant, notifying the appointment of a chief of a staff to the army in the East Indies, the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council is pleased to place that officer on the same footing, as respects pay and allowances, as a major-general serving on the staff.

The chief of the staff is allowed the services of a deputy assistant adjutant-general, on the allowances of a deputy assistant adjutant-general of a division.

JOHN RUSSELL COLVIN.

Fort William, Home Department, Sept. 19, 1857.—Notification.—It is the melancholy duty of the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council to announce the death of the Hon. John Russell Colvin, the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-western Provinces.

Worn by the unceasing anxieties and labours of his charge, which placed him in the very front of the dangers by which, of late, India has been threatened, health and strength gave way; and the Governor-General in Council has to deplore with sincere grief the loss of one of the most distinguished amongst the servants of the East India Company.

The death of Mr. Colvin has occurred at a time when his ripe experience, his high ability, and his untiring energy, would have been more than usually valuable to the state.

But his career did not close before he had won for himself a high reputation in each of the various branches of administration to which he was at different times attached, nor until he had been worthily selected to fill the highest position in northern India; and he leaves a name which not friends alone, but all who have been associated with him in the duties of Government, and all who may follow in his path will delight to honour.

The Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council directs that the flag shall be lowered half-mast high, and that 17 minute guns shall be fired at the seats of Government in India upon the receipt of the present notification.

By order of the Governor-General of India in Council,

C. BEADON,

Sec. to the Government of India.

TRANSFER OF PERGUNNAHS.

September 22nd, 1857.—Under the provisions of act No. XXI. of 1836, the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council is pleased to sanction the transfer of so much of pergunnah Teleggherry, in the Sonthal pergunnahs, as lies on the left bank of the Ganges, from zillah Bhagulpore to zillah Purneah; and of so much of pergunnah Bahadoorpore as lies on the left bank of the Ganges, from Zillah Bhagulpore to the district of Malda; and of all the villages on the right bank of the Ganges to the south-east of the Sonthal pergunnahs, from Zillah Bhagulpore to Zillah Moorshedabad.

FREIGHTS.

Quotations to London and Liverpool, 3l. to 4l. 10s.

EXPORTS (Calcutta, Sept. 23, 1857).—The Produce Market has been since our last in a very inactive state; the great difficulty in placing bills, and the restrictions imposed by the Bank of Bengal in granting accommodations, coupled with the great scarcity of produce, and the ruling high prices, have withdrawn buyers from the market.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Sept. 23).—Sales of Piece Goods and Twist have been to a limited extent during the last fortnight, owing principally to the native holidays, which commenced on the 23rd. The reported transactions have been for some pressing demand from lower Bengal, and for local requirement. Mule Twist has slightly given way in price, excepting the fine quality, which maintains former rates; but we observe no particular change in prices of Piece Goods generally. We look for better business after the holidays, as dealers do not like to hold large stocks. Metals.—The market continues in the same inactive state as before, and there is no prospect of early improvement.

MADRAS.

THE RIFLE COMPANIES of the 1st, 5th, 16th, 24th, 36th, 49th, and two companies of the 34th Madras N.I. have been temporarily formed into a corps for service in Bengal. The corps is to be called the Madras rifles. Brevet Major Carr, of the 16th N.I., is appointed commandant of the Madras rifles, drawing the same pay and allowances as an officer commanding a regiment of the line. The staff allowances of the adjutant and quartermaster will be as in the line, and these officers will be nominated by the commandant of the corps. A jemadar adjutant, havildar major, and bugle major will also be nominated. The sergeant-major of 36th regiment N.I. and the quartermaster-sergeant of the 16th N.I. are attached to the Madras rifles. Companies ordered to join the Madras rifles will be completed to 100 privates, each with one additional havildar and one naïque. They are to proceed fully equipped for field service, carrying with them all the rifle ammunition in regimental charge. They will be provided with a uniform. Corps sending rifle companies will recruit ten privates in a company, in all ninety privates—the 34th L.I. will recruit double this number.

THE MOPLAHS AGAIN.—The Englishman states that two Moplahs had been apprehended at Jackatalla. They were spies, and had been sent to ascertain the number of Europeans at the station. They state that 400 Moplahs have assembled and are prepared to attack Jackatalla. The inhabitants of Cannanore have been much alarmed. It was reported that 5,000 Moplahs were coming from the interior armed with war knives to murder all the Europeans, and hoist Mahommed's green flag. At Jackatalla there were but fifty Europeans in charge of the head-quarters of H.M.'s 78th Highlanders now on field service with Brigadier Whillock's column.

The Mahomedan and Hindoo inhabitants of Masulipatam and Rajahmundry have presented two loyal addresses to the Governor in Council of Madras. They express the utmost detestation at the horrors which have been perpetrated in the North-west, and pray for the continuance of British rule in India.

THE Bangalore Herald of the 18th September states, that the head-quarters and right wing of H.M.'s 12th Royal Lancers, will shortly proceed to join the left wing at Secunderabad, and form part of the garrison at that station. It is also expected that the 7th Hussars will come to Bangalore, after being, on their arrival, detained at Arcot for some time.

BOMBAY.

THE LONDON MAIL of August 26th arrived at Bombay Sept. 19th (per Pekin).

EXTRAORDINARY MARCH.—The Telegraph and Courier mentions an extraordinary march made by a Company of the 3rd Bo. N.I. They left Sholapore on the 14th July at 9 p.m. under the command of Captain Neale, and arrived at Punderpore the following day at 3 p.m. They thus marched 40 miles in eighteen hours without a halt, and carrying 40 rounds of ammunition.

LAND TRANSPORT CORPS.—Colonel G. Pope, Deputy Commissary General at the Bombay Presidency has been directed to organize a Land Transport Corps for service in the Deccan. The commissariat is accordingly contracting for 8,000 hack bullocks, 3,000 carts, and 1,500 dooly bearers. A siege-train is to be got ready and sent on with the force from Ahmednuggur. Hundreds of camels are being purchased in the neighbourhood of Deesa. The Land Transport Corps will consist of some half-dozen Brigades, and it is estimated that it will be ready by the end of October.

PANIC AT BOMBAY.—There was an unusual panic at Bombay on the occasion of the ceremony of drowning the taboots in Black Bay. The procession is usually accompanied with a guard of sepoy fully armed. The appearance of these men as they approached the Marine Lines alarmed the crowds of natives who had assembled to witness the procession. The esplanade became a scene of confusion. The European mounted police prepared for action. The garrison band at the Sanatorium rushed to arms, and natives rushed about in all directions shrieking and thinking that the massacre was to commence. The panic lasted for about a quarter of an hour.

THE screw steamer England arrived at Kurrachee on the 25th September, with the wing of H.M.'s 4th (King's own) regiment, which had been despatched from Bombay, consisting of sixteen officers, 312 rank and file, seven drummers, and forty-seven followers. The regiment marched into cantonments the same evening.

A WINE of H.M.'s 95th regiment, under the command of Major J. R. Raines, arrived in Bombay from the Cape of Good Hope by the ship Palmetto, which left that place on the 18th August last.

THE news of the fall of Delhi, which arrived by the Ajdaha on the night of Thursday, the 1st Oct., reached the governor while a large dinner party was being entertained at Government House. Lord Elphinstone immediately announced the joyful tidings to the assembled company, and called upon them to fill their glasses, and drink to the health of "General Wilson and his brave army." This was done with much enthusiasm, the band striking up "The British Grenadiers."

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

PROTECTION OF AMMUNITION.

Head-Quarters, Bombay, Sept. 1, 1857.—The Commander-in-Chief having ascertained that at many of the stations there is no proper magazine for securing the ammunition in the regimental lines, directs that henceforth the service ammunition of all regiments, European and native, shall be lodged in the station arsenal or magazine, with the exception of what the soldiers may carry in their pouches.

By order, &c.

EXAMINATION IN HINDUSTANI.

Bombay Castle, Sept. 2, 1857.—With reference to the Government Notification of the 20th May, 1856,* General Department, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased, under instructions from the Hon. the Court of Directors, to direct that junior civil servants on the establishment of this presidency shall, in future, pass an examination in Hindustanee, as well as in one of the vernaculars, before formally entering on the duties of the public service, and that similar tests shall be fixed for Hindustanee as for the other languages of study.

The language to be acquired in addition to Hindustanee shall, in all cases, be either Murathee or Guzerathee; but, with reference to the importance of young civilians qualifying themselves for employment in other divisions of the presidency than that to which they may first be appointed, special rewards shall be granted, under rules to be hereafter promulgated, to those who may acquire a knowledge of any language in use within this presidency, in addition to the two prescribed for study.

By order of the Right Hon. the Governor in Council,
J. D. INVERARITY,
Acting Chief Secretary to Government.

EXPORTS (Bombay, Oct. 2).—Cotton Wool.—The market continues firm. The news of an advance in the rates of cotton, which we received by the English mail of the 26th August, has had the effect of creating animation in the market, and much business has been transacted at an advance of ten or twelve rupees per candy. We quote Surat and Broach at Rs. 156-54; Dhollera, Rs. 160-61; Omeravuttee, Rs. 149-151; Compta, Rs. 176-177; Mangalore, Rs. 147-48; and Khandeish, Rs. 141-42.

IMPORTS (Bombay, Oct. 2).—Cotton Piece Goods.—Our active season may now be considered to have fairly commenced. The accounts of the prospects of the harvest from the interior are very favourable. Our import market has exhibited considerable activity, and prices have advanced. Extensive business has been done, principally in Grey Shirtings; T. Cloths have been scarce; Dhooties are in demand. The prices of Grey goods have advanced generally.

CEYLON.

The steam transport Cleopatra, from England 17th June, arrived at Point de Galle on the 8th inst. with the head-quarters and a wing of the 23rd royal Welsh fusiliers on board, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Wells. The Cleopatra was to leave for Calcutta, after taking in 450 tons of coals. She reports that H.M.'s steamer Penelope, Sir W. Wiseman, was to leave the Cape on the 9th of August, with a company of royal artillery, for Calcutta. H.M.S. Megara was also at the Cape waiting for troops, and H.M.S. Belleisle arrived at Simon's Bay on the 9th of August, with a detachment of the 93rd Highlanders.

SINGAPORE.

THE Dutch mail steamer brings tidings of H.M.'s screw gunboat Algerine, Lieut. commanding Forbes, from England for China, having struck on the Karang Brom shoals, in the Straits of Banca, where she remained fast. It was thought she might get off at the next spring tides.

H.M.'s steam-ship Furious arrived at Batavia on the 6th Sept. last from Rio de Janeiro. The Furious left twelve screw gunboats at Anjer, so that we may expect to see this flotilla here in the course of a few days. Four of the gunboats which left England under the charge of the Furious had not yet made their appearance.

The British steamer Lightning, Capt. Durham, from Hong-Kong the 27th August, arrived here on the 3rd current, having on board six officers and sixty men, of the Madras artillery, for Pinang, and sailed for Pinang and Calcutta on the 4th. She took from this place five officers and fifty men of the Royal Engineers for Calcutta.

H.M.'s steam yacht Emperor, Capt. Ward, arrived here on the 3rd September, from England, and proceeded to Sarawak and Hong-Kong on the 13th, having on board Commodore the Hon. H. Keppel, as a passenger, for Sarawak, on a short visit. Commodore Keppel will return here in the steamer Sir James Brooke.—Free Press.

COFFEE CROP.—During the first half of 1857, the coffee produced on the west coast of Sumatra amounted to 416,858 piculs; during the same period of 1856 it was 74,741 piculs; and in 1855, 77,780 piculs.

The barque Pinang, belonging to Singapore, left this on the morning of the 13th September, having on board sixty-five persons, including the crew and passengers, and a full cargo, bound for Malacca and Pinang. About half-past eight on the same evening she was caught in a tremendous squall, which threw her on her beam-ends, and before she could right she came within the vortex of a waterspout, and sank altogether. A number of the persons on board, it is probable, went down with the ship; others, after swimming about for some hours, clinging to one of the boats, which was floating bottom upwards, and other objects, at last succeeded in reaching a schooner bound outwards, and which remained on the spot till daylight. Some more persons were then picked up, and H.M.'s ship Racehorse being observed approaching, bound for Singapore, the nakoda of the Pinang, and the rest of the people who had been taken on board the schooner, got into the boat, having one oar to manage it, and spoke the Racehorse, explaining what had occurred. The nakoda states that the man-of-war continued its course, and did not come to until near the Raffles light-house, when it lowered a boat and picked up two persons who were in the water. It is probable that the explanation was not well understood, or the destitute condition of the people in the boat observed, as the Racehorse would scarcely have passed on without giving assistance. As it was, the nakoda was obliged to hire a Malay sampan to bring himself and his companions to Singapore. Of the persons on board the Pinang at the time of her loss, thirty-eight are missing, including two women and two young children; twenty-seven persons, amongst them one woman, having reached Singapore.—Free Press.

THE Singapore Free Press records the rescue of the three sole survivors of the crew of the Hamburg steamer Posa, that was wrecked on the coast of New Guinea. They were rescued through the exertions of two missionaries, Ottow and Geisler, from the population of the island Wandessi, in Geelrink's Bay. The Dutch ship Ocean has been driven ashore at Menado; she had on board 4,000 piculs of coffee, of which about 3,000 piculs—but much damaged by the salt water—have been saved.

THERE has been a panic in Pinang. A drunken sepoy entered the house of one of his officers on the 9th of August, and grossly insulted him, stating that all the Europeans would in a short time be murdered by his comrades. The alarm spread, many went on board ship, and the Hokkien Chinese got ready their arms. The resident councillor ordered an additional European guard to be placed in the fort, and the greatest fear was for some time felt.

CHINA.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 10th arrived at Hong-Kong Aug. 20th (per Singapore st.). The subsequent Mail of July 26th arrived at Hong-Kong Sept. 7th (per Norma).

THE western rebels have gained several grand victories over the imperialists during the last month, and captured an uncounted number of fighting vessels. On account of these several victories the rebels determined to make merry by rejoicing in the city, and having a theatrical play in honour of their gods. This continued for several days in succession; the village people receiving free permission to come and look on. The imperialist officers and soldiers availed themselves of this opportunity to imitate the villagers in dress, and to come in stealthily and commence an attack inside, which was responded to from outside, from every quarter of land and water, with a speed outstripping thunder, and only comparable to lightning. The rebels were overcome by the imperialists, and the war junks retaken in uncounted numbers.

At present the rebels have retreated to Hugchow, and perhaps above and below.

The northern rebels, Chun and Lein, and their abettors, have again come forth of Sam-Kong, Keinghou, and Kongkouk, plundering, burning, and killing the villagers. In the middle country, China in every province is in disorder and rebellion; the people moving about to avoid the destruction which awaits them daily.

At present at Canton, as formerly, every gate is closely watched, and a strict scrutiny kept upon persons going out and in. The mandarins and gentry are secretly sending forth persons to falsely circulate the report that the Chinese and foreigners have made peace and again commenced traffic.

In the west the rebels having been greatly beaten, have retreated, and the people's minds have been quieted.

The Canton river is again filled with trading vessels, great and small, and presents an appearance as formerly when peace prevailed.

The mandarins at present are making ships and casting cannon, and raising those cannon formerly sunk by the English, and placing them in position on their junks, which, great and small, amount to from one to two hundred, anchored in the Canton and Fatsan creeks, prepared for another naval engagement.—Friend of China, Sept. 2.

TEA AND SILK.—From Shanghai, from 1846 to 1850 inclusive, the average annual export of tea was lbs. 21,118,753; and during the same time the average annual export of silk was bales 17,352. Between 1851 and 1856, the average annual export of tea reached lbs. 63,486,278; and of silk reached bales 43,735. Thus, in five years, the average annual export from Shanghai both of tea and silk has nearly trebled itself. In 1855-56, the amount of tea exported to Great Britain was lbs. 32,914,743, whilst that to the United States was lbs. 20,939,979; the silk exported to the former country was 42,164 bales, whilst that to the latter country was only 1,188 bales. It is singular that our North American colonies only receive green tea from Shanghai, whilst our South Australian colonies import both black and green. For the former colonies there was shipped at Shanghai, from 1st of July to January 5th, lbs. 275,826 of green tea, whilst to the latter colonies there was only shipped, from 1st July to March, 1856, lbs. 76,467, both of black and green.

A COSTLY FUNERAL.—The burial of the late major of the Chinese at Samarang took place on the 4th of August, and was performed with great solemnity. Many thousands of his countrymen attended from the surrounding districts. The ground on which the grave was constructed was bought for £222,000, and the cost of preparing the grave amounted to between seventy and eighty thousand rupees. The deceased was a native of China, and had resided long in Java, where he was very successful in trade, it being calculated that he has left between seven and eight millions of rupees. He lately visited China, where he purchased the rank of mandarin for a large sum, and it is said he found considerable difficulty in obtaining permission to return to Java. He has left a large family by his wives in Samarang and China; but the great bulk of his property is bequeathed to one of his sons, the Captain of the Chinese at Samarang, the rest receiving only very trifling legacies.

BURMAH.

At Rangoon we learn that everything went off quietly during the Mohurram, every precaution was taken quietly to put down the least attempt at a row; and as yet, in spite of the paucity of European troops in Burmah, the whole province is perfectly quiet. Reports are, however, current that Mya-toon and Muny Goung-gee, the famous dacoit leaders, are again in the field. A letter to the Englishman says:—"The Mussulman portion of the population have a saucy, jaunty air about them, that is neither very attractive nor pleasing. Our friend of the Golden Foot, has written to our commissioner, to condole with him upon the unfortunate state of British rule in India; and says that he, the commissioner, may rest assured that his Majesty of the Golden Foot will not take advantage of the present state of affairs to our disadvantage.

PERSIA.

The Bombay Times publishes the following letter from Karrack, dated 9th Sept. :—

"A report has come in that Murray has hauled down his flag, and returned to Bagdad. Colonel Jacob remains for the present at Bushire. Perhaps the Persians have repented, on hearing of our disasters in Bengal, and hope to take advantage of our troubles.

"We are rather warm still here; ninety-six degrees to-day, and it was ninety-eight yesterday, the highest."

The Bombay Gazette has received a letter from Bushire, dated September 10, to a similar effect.

"Captain Graves, with the head-quarters of the 3rd cavalry, embarks on the Arthur the Great the day after to-morrow, and Captain Moore, with Lieutenant Stephens, on board the Caduceus on the same day. Lieutenant Speus, with another detachment, will embark on board the Mirzapore on Monday or Tuesday next. Then there will be left here about two hundred troopers, with Captains Oldfield (commanding) and Wren, Lieutenant LeGeyt, Cornet Currie, and Dr. Bruce. Mr. Murray, our ambassador at Teheran, has written officially to Captain Jones, the resident, to say that our rear-guard here may be attacked by the Tangistanee tribe, which has created a great alarm among the Armenian merchants and others here. The Chikli Basha has come down from Shiraz, and is close here, ready to take possession on our evacuating the place. In consequence of the above-mentioned report, General Jacob has determined on staying till last of all. There is a report here, of which Mr. Malcolm, the Armenian merchant is the originator, that Mr. Murray and the shah have had a row, and that the former has struck his flag; but it is to be hoped that this will prove mere gup. The rear-guard here is to consist of two guns, two hundred sabres of the 3rd cavalry, and the whole of the 20th native infantry.

Lieut.-Col. J. G. Neill, of the Madras Army, to the Adjutant-General of the Bengal Army.

Benares, June 6.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, that I arrived here on the 3rd inst. with a detachment of the regiment under my command (1st Madras Fusiliers), and found 60 of my men and three officers, who had preceded me here. A company of men were about two days in rear, and three more were following up by bullock-train. I had arranged to start with a detachment of the regiment for Cawnpore on the afternoon of the 4th, but on that afternoon intelligence was received from Lieut. Palliser, in command of a detachment of 50 sows of the 13th Irregular Cavalry, sent out to escort treasure from Azinghur to this, that the 17th regiment had broken out into open mutiny, and, joined by the city people and gaoil prisoners, had left the station and attacked his party, and captured the treasure, his infantry escort acting with them. On this intelligence reaching Benares, Brigadier Ponsonby consulted with me about taking the muskets from the 37th, leaving them their side-arms. He proposed waiting until the following morning to do this. I urged its being done at once, to which he agreed, and left my quarters to make his arrangements, directing me to be present with the Europeans, as per margin,* at 5 p.m. The Sikh regiment, in which Lieut.-Col. Gordon placed much confidence, and a party of about 70 of the 13th Irregular Cavalry, who were despatched, were to join the Europeans in their demonstration. Brigadier Ponsonby came on parade at the hour appointed, but I observed that he appeared far from well, and perfectly unable to act with the energy or vigour required on the emergency. We moved up the Europeans and guns towards the 37th, the Sikhs advancing upon the other flank of that corps, followed by Irregular Cavalry. On approaching the bells of arms of the 37th the Sepoys of that corps seized their arms, loaded them, and opened fire upon us, which was immediately returned with considerable execution by the artillery and Europeans, the Sikh regiment not having yet come up. At this time several of our men fell wounded, and the Brigadier was on his back on the ground, seemingly struck by a stroke of the sun, and declared himself quite unfit for anything, and begged that, being the next senior officer, I would at once assume the command, which I accordingly did, and directed a dash on the lines with Europeans and Sikhs in line on each flank of the artillery. I was on the right of our men in the lines when an alarm was given, and I found the Sikhs had suddenly halted, wavered, and eventually gone about and dispersed, having first, however, fired at and tried to shoot their commanding officer and adjutant, and fired upon and wounded several other officers, and fired upon the squadron of Irregular Cavalry drawn up in rear of them.

2. I believe, from all I have observed and been told, that, with a few exceptions, the Sikhs were supposed to be quite stanch; they seemed in the greatest spirits, and anxious to be led against the 37th. The cause of their sudden panic and extraordinary conduct is supposed to have been the turmoil caused in their rear by a sowar of the 13th Irregular Cavalry having fired at and attempted to cut down the brigade-major, Capt. Dodgson, on his riding up to assume command of them by the Brigadier's order, their own commanding officer having been killed before reaching parade by the men of the 37th N.I. On hearing the shot and shouts the Sikhs turned round and fired on their officers and our men; one man who had fired at Col. Gordon was immediately shot by one of his havildars.

3. The artillery, on observing the disaffection of the Sikhs, opened upon them with considerable effect; they broke and ran, as did the Irregular Cavalry. After this I completed the expulsion of the 37th regiment from their lines, and burnt them, and withdrew my men and guns into position in the barrack, securing myself for the night.

4. Early next morning I sent out parties and brought in the arms, accoutrements, and colours of the 37th that had been left in their lines, as also some of the Sikhs. I also arranged with the civil authorities to remove the treasure from its most insecure and unilitary position in the civil lines, and detached a party, consisting of 100 men of H.M.'s 10th and Madras Fusiliers, and 25 sows, Irregular Cavalry, under Lieut.-Col. Gordon, and had it all brought up and secured in the barracks.

5. On my arriving here I had observed and expressed my opinion on the insecurity of this treasure, under charge only of a native guard of Sikhs, who, however, stood firm, and deserve the greatest credit for their loyal conduct. I consider the peril in which this treasure has been placed has been for some time imminent; and I feel assured that had the steps taken against the 37th been deferred until the following morning the outbreak would have taken place that night when unprepared, and no efficient assistance could have been rendered by the troops to the European families in cantonments, who would have been left to the mercy of the miscreants let loose on such an occasion. I had a party of Madras Fusiliers at a building called the Mint, and arranged with the Brigadier, before going on parade, that should any disturbance occur, all the families should go there for protection. This was carried out, the party of Europeans there giving confidence, and acting as a check to plunderers. The mutineers, who broke and fled, deserted cantonments rapidly, many of them throwing away their arms. I now hold the barracks and Mint-house between cantonments and city with my Europeans, and have some native guards of trustworthy men as pickets in different parts of cantonments, and feel the cantonments are all safe; and when a few more European troops come up I intend planting a picket at the church, when all the houses in cantonments may, I consider, with safety be again occupied. About 90 of the Irregular Cavalry remained faithful, and are now doing duty, patrolling and keeping off the "Budmashes" from the city from entering cantonments. About 190 of the Sikh regiment, who were on treasure and other guards, are still with us, and remain faithful. A few of them I have promoted for their good conduct when the regiment broke and fled. A further report will be made on this subject, as well as regarding some men of the Irregular Cavalry I have also promoted for loyalty and good conduct.

All ranks behaved as British soldiers; the hard work and exposure to the sun were most cheerfully borne. I beg to bring to notice particularly the assistance I have received from Lieut.-Col. Gordon, commanding the Sikhs; Lieut.-Col. Spottiswoode, 37th; the Brigade-Major, Capt. Dodgson; Capt. Olpherts, commanding the artillery; and Lieut. Gosling, Adjutant, Madras Fusiliers. I have, &c.

J. G. NEILL, Lieut.-Col.

P.S.—I have strengthened Chunar by a small detachment of H.M.'s 84th, with three officers of 37th, and despatched to Allahabad, by Garce horse-drawk this evening, 50 men of Madras Fusiliers, the same number following to-morrow, and as quick as I can spare them to that post and Cawnpore.

No. 5.

Major-General Sir H. Barnard to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Delhi Cantonments, June 8.

SIR,—The forces under my command marched from Allipore at 1 a.m. this morning, and on reaching Badulee Ke-Serai found the enemy strongly posted in an entrenched position, which I have the satisfaction to inform you was carried after an engagement of about three-quarters of an hour, and proceeded to take up our present position, which we found to be over disputed ground the whole way, and finally, in a well-defended line of defence, from the signal-tower to Hindoo Rao's house. Our troops behaved with the greatest gallantry and persevering endurance, and after facing a very determined resistance, drove the enemy within the walls of Delhi: all this was accomplished by nine o'clock in the morning. Our loss has been comparatively trifling, only one officer being killed; but I regret to say, that officer is Col. Chester, Adjutant-General of the Army, who was esteemed by all for every qualification that can adorn the soldier. I have not been able to ascertain the particulars of our loss, or our capture of guns, but I fear I cannot estimate the former under 10 to 50 killed, the number of guns taken to be about 15 or 18. I do not in this hurried despatch attempt to recommend any one, but I cannot pass over the assistance I received from Brigadier-General Wilson, whose cool judgment entitles him to an equal share of any merit that may be given to the officer in command. From the Brigadier-General and staff of the army attached to me from the divisional staff I received every support, and from my personal staff, Capt. Barnard and Lieut. Turnbull, the most daring devotion. The conduct of the Ghoorka battalion, the sappers, and other native troops employed was most praiseworthy; they vied with their European comrades in forward daring. The troops of the native contingents did equally good service, including those of the Jheend Rajah; and I cannot close this without especial mention of many gentlemen attached to the army in civil capacities, who not only accompanied us into the field, but did every service the extended nature of our position rendered prominent in keeping up mutual communication.

I hope to send you a fuller detail to-morrow. Our siege train is up, and I hope to open on the town without a moment's delay.

P.S.—I find the captured guns amount to 26, and I desire to add to this, in justice to myself, special notice of the assistance I received from Col. Congreve, C.B., Acting Adjutant-General of H.M.'s Forces in India; Col. Becher, Quartermaster-General of the Army; and Col. the Hon. R. Curzon, Military Secretary to the late Commander-in-Chief, who never left me; Capt. Norman, Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army, and on whom the important duties of Adjutant-General devolved on the death of Col. Chester, and Col. Young, Judge-Advocate-General of the Army, who accompanied me during the whole of the action.

No. 6.

Major-General Sir H. Barnard to the Adjutant-General of the Army,

Delhi Cantonment, June 11.

SIR,—I have the honour to report, for the information of General Reed, commanding the forces, that the enemy attacked the position occupied by the troops under my command this morning in force. The troops acted throughout with gallantry and coolness, and the affair ended in the total repulse of the enemy, who have retreated to the city. At about a quarter to 5 a.m. the attack first began. On my ascertaining that both flanks were being attacked, the usual supports were not only sent up to the position on the heights, but the whole of the troops under my command were speedily under arms, and marched up to reinforce the pickets and to drive back the enemy. This was first accomplished on the left, the enemy falling back under the fire of the troops, and, after being beaten back from the right, they came on again for a second attack, under cover of the thickly-wooded gardens near the Subjee Munde. The 1st Bengal European Fusiliers were sent against them, under the command of Major Jacob, and succeeded most gallantly in not only driving the enemy back, but pursued them, skirmishing all through the thickly-wooded gardens of the Subjee Munde. It was about half-past 7 a.m. when the troops began to be recalled, and the assembly first sounded for the skirmishers.

In comparison with the strength of the attack, our loss was small; and I trust to be able to send in without delay the official returns of the killed and wounded. I have heard as yet of only one casualty among the officers, Capt. Knox, 75th regiment, who was killed when reinforcing the picket at the Flagstaff Tower, and while driving back the enemy. The loss on the other side to the enemy must have been considerable, and although difficult to estimate, could not have been less than 250.

Major-General Sir H. Barnard to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Delhi, June 12.

SIR,—With reference to my hurried despatch of the 8th inst., I have now the honour, for the information of the General Commanding the Forces, to submit a more detailed account of the action of Badulee Ke-Serai, and seizure of the position on the ridge above the cantonments of Delhi, necessary to hold with regard to ultimate operations against that city.

Having been joined by the force under Brigadier-Gen. Wilson, I broke up the camp at Allipore without delay, and on ascertaining that the enemy had made preparations to oppose our advance, and had occupied a fortified position at Badulee Ke-Serai, made the following disposition of the forces:—"Brigadier-General Grant, C.B., with the force as per margin,* was to gain the opposite side of the canal, and recross it below and in rear of the enemy's position, so soon as he heard the action commence, with a view of taking the enemy in flank. The 1st brigade, under Brigadier-General Showers, was to act on the right side of the main trunk road, along which the column was to advance, and the 2nd brigade, under Brigadier-General Graves, was to take the left; the heavy guns were to remain in position on the road, the rest of the artillery to act on either side. As soon as our advanced picket met the enemy these brigades deployed, leaving the main road clear. The enemy soon opened a very heavy fire upon us, and, finding that our light field-pieces did not silence their battery, and that we were losing men fast, I called upon the 75th regiment to make a dashing charge, and take the place at the point of the bayonet; this service was done with the most heroic gallantry, and to Lieut.-Col. Herbert, and every officer, non-commissioned officer, and man of the 75th regiment my thanks are most especially due; the 1st Europeans supported the attack, and on the 2nd brigade coming up and threatening their right, and Brigadier-General Grant showing the head of his column and guns on their left rear, the enemy abandoned the position entirely, leaving his guns on the ground. The action lasted nearly one hour, and, I regret to say, cost many valuable lives.

* Six guns, 3rd troop, 3rd battalion, Horse Artillery; four guns, 2nd troop, 1st battalion, Horse Artillery; three squadrons 9th Lancers.

Although the men were much exhausted, I determined to push on, under the impression that if I halted a similar difficulty might be opposed to me the following day in gaining the requisite position; and on the road separating, it became desirable to act in two columns, sending one along the main trunk road, and taking the other to the left through the cantonments. To Brigadier-General Wilson, supported by Brigadier-General Showers' brigade, I confided the conduct of this column, which had to fight its way through gardens with high walls and other obstacles the whole way; and, taking the 2nd brigade, with Brigadier-General Graves, with myself, I proceeded to the left. I soon found that the enemy had posted himself strongly on the ridge over the cantonments, with guns in position, and under the range of which we soon found ourselves; upon which I determined on a rapid flank movement to the left, in the hope of gaining the ridge under cover of the cantonments, and taking the position in flank.

This was happily successful; the enemy got their guns hastily into a position to meet me, and Brigadier-General Graves's brigade, consisting of the 60th Rifles, under Lieut.-Col. Jones, supported by the 2nd Europeans, under Capt. Boyd, advanced gallantly, supported by Capt. Money's troop of Horse Artillery, carried the position, and the enemy, finding himself taken in flank and rear, abandoned his guns, and we swept the whole ridge from the flag-staff to Hindoo Rao's house, where I had the satisfaction of meeting Brigadier-General Wilson; and the object of the day having been thus effected, the force was at once placed in position before Delhi.

I have already mentioned to the Commander-in-Chief the names of officers to whom I am indebted, and whom I desire in justice to call to his notice, and to whose names I beg to add those of Major Ewart, Deputy Assistant-Adjutant-General, Capt. Shute, Assistant Quartermaster-General, and Capt. Maisey, Deputy Judge-Advocate-General, and beg to state that I fully concur in the merit of those recommended by my brigadiers.

Nominal Roll of Officers Killed and Wounded.—Col. C. Chester, Adjutant-General of the Army, killed; Capt. J. W. Delamain, 56th N.I., killed; Capt. C. W. Russell, 54th N.I., killed; Lieut. A. Harrison, H.M.'s 75th regt., killed.

Artillery Division.—First-Lieut. A. Light, slightly wounded; Second-Lieut. C. Hunter, slightly wounded; Second-Lieut. A. H. Davidson, severely, blown up by explosion of a gun limber; Second-Lieut. R. Hare, slight contusion.

H.M.'s 75th Regt.—Brev. Lieut.-Col. Herbert, commanding, wounded; Capt. Dawson, wounded; Lieut. J. R. S. Fitzgerald, wounded; Lieut. and Adj. R. Barter, wounded; Lieut. C. R. Rivers, wounded; Ens. C. M. Pym, wounded; Assist. Surg. S. A. Lithgow, wounded.

1st European Bengal Fusiliers.—Capt. S. Greville, wounded; Second-Lieut. N. Ellis, wounded.

The Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army to the Secretary to the Government of India.

Calcutta, June 26.

SIR,—I have the honour, by desire of the Commander-in-Chief, to annex, for submission to the Governor-General of India in Council, letters in original, of the 17th and 19th inst., from the officer commanding at Allahabad, reporting his own operations at that station since his assumption of the command, and those of Capt. Fraser, of the 1st Madras Fusiliers, while employed in opening the communication between Benares and Allahabad, all of which have met with the warm approbation of the Commander-in-Chief, who has desired that his best thanks shall be expressed to both officers for the excellent and useful service they have rendered with the troops under their command.

2. The return of the original inclosures is solicited when no longer required.

I have, &c.,

No. 9.

Lieutenant-Colonel Neill to the Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army.

Allahabad, June 17.

SIR,—I have the honour to report my arrival here on the afternoon of the 11th inst., with a party of forty men, the fusiliers having had more difficulty in getting on from Benares, consequent on the disturbed state of the country, the road being partly deserted, and all the dawk horses taken away by the insurgents. I found Allahabad closely invested, except on the river side, it being only approachable from the rivers; the bridge of boats on the Ganges partly destroyed; it and the village of Deeragunge in possession of the insurgents. On arriving at the end of the Benares road, at the village of Jansee, I was obliged to move down to my left; was fortunate to bribe some natives to bring a boat over to the left bank of the Ganges, in which I embarked part of my men. The people in the fort having by this time seen us, sent over boats some way down. By these means we all got into the fort, almost completely exhausted from our long night's march and the intense heat. On assuming command, I at once determined to drive the enemy away, and open up some communication with the country. On the following morning I opened fire with several round shots on those parts of Deeragunge occupied by the worst description of natives, attacked the place with detachments of fusiliers and Sikhs, drove the enemy out with considerable loss, burnt part of the village, and took possession of a repaired bridge, placing a company of Sikhs at its head for its protection. The next day Major Stephenson's detachment of 100 men, which had left Benares by bullock-train the same evening I had, crossed the bridge into the front. On the morning of the 13th I attacked the insurgents in the village of Kydunge, on the left bank of the Jumna, and drove them out with loss. On the 14th I could do little or nothing. Ever since I arrived here I have observed great drinking among the Sikhs and the Europeans, of all classes; and it was not long before I learned that large godowns belonging to merchants and river steam companies had been broken into and plundered, and the contents were distributed all over the place. Quantities of all kinds of spirits and wine were brought into the fort by the Sikhs, sold to our soldiers at the lowest prices,* and the consequence was drunkenness to a disgraceful extent in the garrison. The Sikhs showed anything but a subordinate spirit, and, being in the same range of barracks with our men, caused me no small anxiety. I endeavoured to get hold of or destroy all the liquor and rum, and succeeded in both, by directing the commissariat to purchase all the liquor the Sikhs had to sell. I sent out the only two carts I had, to empty what remained in the godowns into the commissariat stores, and destroyed all that I could otherwise lay hold of. It appeared to me most desirable to get the Sikhs out of the fort. They were very loth to go, and their officers did not appear to me to have that authority over them to oblige them. It required some tact and management, and was happily effected by Captain Brasyer, who deserves the greatest credit. They are now outside in some houses, the old native hospital, and others on the bank of the Jumna, under the guns of the fort, and, although attacked and obliged to retire on the night of the 14th inst., some, including the adjutant, wounded, yet they soon regained their position. I felt that Allahabad was really safe when every native soldier and sentry was out of it, and as long as I command I shall not allow one to be on duty in it. On the evening of the 14th I threw a shell from a howitzer on the brutes into Kydunge, and the morning of the 15th early opened the same fire with round shot also upon it at daylight. I sent a steamer up the Jumna with a howitzer, under command of Captain Harwood, of the artillery, and a party of twenty picked shots of the fusiliers, under Lieutenant Arnold of that corps, who went up the river, some distance above the city, and did much execution. The Sikhs were directed to attack and clear Kydunge and Mootingunge on the Jumna, and were supported on the right by fifty of the fusiliers, under Lieutenant Bailey, and the small party of irregular cavalry. The troops behaved with great gallantry and spirit in the heat of the sun; the Sikhs had the legs of the Europeans, and the country they had to go over was less difficult; the opposition they met with was not so great; they, however, punished the enemy severely, although they fire badly, and are very wild. The fusiliers met with some resistance, did good execution among the enemy, but had two men killed and six wounded, all severely, one dangerously, including Lieutenant Bailey, shot through the thigh. The insurgents were so thoroughly beaten at all points, and our men had followed them up so close to the city, that we have since been informed the greatest terror seized them all, and they all fled from the city during the night. They had also lost several of their chiefs, and the Moulavie, the chief of the insurrection, is now, I understand, with a few followers, about fourteen miles off. There are still some villages inhabited by Mahomedan tawntics, who took a prominent and active part in the night of the mutiny, I will make an example of; but I cannot march out until I get sufficient cattle for my artillery, and also to draw carriages to convey wounded, or men knocked over by the sun. Many sepoys, supposed to be from Delhi, fought against us. We have had intelligence from the city of the dispersion and flight of most of the ringleaders. The Moulavie has fled, and two of his men of rank were slain on the 15th. Our two guns, taken away from the bridge of boats by the 6th, were sent in to our outposts yesterday morning; also Mr. Cheek, of the 6th, since dead, and Mr. Conductor Coleman and his family, who escaped the night of the mutiny, although severely wounded and badly treated. The troops are in high spirits and as good health as can be expected this fearful weather. The fusiliers have endured more exposure and fatigue than most soldiers; their conduct has been admirable. I cannot speak too highly of Captain Brasyer, of the Sikhs; he alone has kept that regiment together, and all right here. He deserves the greatest credit. He assisted me very greatly indeed in getting the Sikhs out of the fort. I almost feared at one time that force would have to be employed. It was a very near thing indeed. Fortunately, I was able to employ the Sikhs in the constant attacks, which assisted. The fusiliers now here consist of eleven officers and 360 men.

I have, &c.,

J. G. NEILL, Lieut.-Col. Commanding Allahabad.

No. 10.

Lieut.-Colonel Neill to the Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army.
(Extract.)

Allahabad, June 19.

I last did myself the honour of addressing you on the 17th inst. On the following morning I moved out with all my force, having the previous day obtained bullocks for my two guns. I sent one party of eighty fusiliers and 100 Sikhs in the steamer, with a howitzer, up the river, to attack and destroy the Pathan village of Derryabad and the Mewattie villages of Sydadab and Russelpore, and to co-operate with me. I marched from the cantonments with 200 fusiliers, two guns, all the Sikhs and irregular cavalry, and proceeded as far as the gaol, thus getting between the city and the villages belonging to and said to be occupied by the insurgents. I met with no opposition, the enemy, I regret to say, having disappeared during the night. I swept and destroyed these villages, and collected all my force on the parade-ground of the 6th Bengal N.I. It was my intention to have occupied the church and other buildings during the heat of the day; but, as symptoms of cholera among the fusiliers had occurred during the night, one man having been taken ill en route, I determined to return to the fort with all the Europeans, and leave Captain Brasyer and his Sikhs, with the irregular cavalry, accompanied by Mr. Court, collector and magistrate, to destroy several villages beyond the church, which work was properly done. I got back to the fort about 7 A.M., and regret to say that several of the men came into hospital with cholera in its worst form. Eight men were buried last evening and twenty this evening. There are still many cases in hospital, but of a milder nature, and I hope, with God's blessing, for the best.

I had before this, fearing disease from the crowded state in which I found the fort, sent off two steamer-loads of women and children; and, as the cantonment is now safe, I directed all the non-combatants out of the fort: this order has been attended to. I have also established a European hospital in a Masonic building a short distance from the fort, to which I have removed all cholera patients. I have also occupied the dawb bungalow near it with a subaltern's party for its protection; 100 Europeans are in tents on the glacis, and I move out 200 to-morrow to a top of tree near the dawb bungalow. No rain has yet fallen, the heat is intense, and the soldiers, after their hard work and exposure, are much prostrated. The barracks here are in bad order, followers of any description being also unprocurable. There are but few punkahs and no tatties; the men have therefore not the proper advantages of barrack accommodation for this hot season. I regret to add that the supply of medicines here has failed; there appears to have been little or none kept in Allahabad, and our detachments only brought up sufficient for the march.

I am now in expectation of the arrival of the Mirzapore, which was also detained by the same authorities, which I hope has some little medicine on board. At the same time, I have also to complain of the civil authorities at Ghazepore presuming to keep back and not delivering to the officer commanding troops on board the Mirzapore, in Calcutta, written orders I sent through them for the removal of the treasure at that station on board the steamer, to be brought by the Europeans to Benares.

Two hundred bullocks with drivers were brought in here yesterday; this is all our public carriage at present; our commissariat officer is away, and that department is in consequence inefficient. I am prevented, therefore, from pushing on, as I wish, troops to Cawnpore; his Excellency may feel assured that I will do so as soon as I possibly can. I, however, apprehend that nothing can be done until we have had a shower of rain. A detachment of the 8th Queen's may be in to-morrow; I shall place them in the church, and the other European troops, as they arrive, in other buildings in the cantonment. I beg to enclose Captain Fraser's report of his march from Benares to this place. Much good service has been done by so thoroughly opening the road. The men of the detachment acquitted themselves in their usual soldierlike and enduring manner; and I beg to bring to the notice of his Excellency Captain Fraser, an intelligent and energetic officer, in whom I have the utmost confidence, in any emergency. I am organizing a body of irregular cavalry, by joining Captain Palliser's detachment of the 13th irregular cavalry, with the few men of Captain Alexander's corps still remaining faithful to us, and expect to entertain some sowars. I have established a system of patrolling in the neighbourhood with the troopers, to encourage the people to bring in supplies.

The Moulavie has left this with about 3,000 followers; his destination is unknown, but supposed to be Lucknow, or in this neighbourhood. I have arranged to beat up his camp if it is.

No. 11.

Captain Fraser to the Officer commanding at Allahabad.

Allahabad, June 19.

SIR,—I have the honour to inform you that, agreeably to instructions received from the officer commanding at Benares, a detachment of Madras fusiliers, strength as per margin,* under my command, marched, on June 13, 1857, from Benares, for the purpose of acting against the marauders and disturbers of the peace, and with the view of opening the communication along the road to Allahabad, which for some time had been interrupted.

* 1 captain, 4 lieutenants, 1 second lieutenant, 1 assistant-surgeon, and 150 native infantry, rank-and-file.

2. Mr. Chapman, a gentleman well acquainted with the country, accompanied the party.

3. At Gopaegunj, a detachment of the 13th irregular cavalry, of eighty men, under the command of Lieutenant Palliser, joined the expedition.

4. On the 14th inst., information having been received on oath that the inhabitants of two villages within a mile of the Grand Trunk Road, near Gopaegunj, had been plundering the grain and stopping the communication, I proceeded with a party of the fusiliers to the said villages, and called upon the principals to appear, but they had made their escape, and I ordered their houses to be burnt.

5. On the 15th inst., intelligence having been received that three zemindars who had proclaimed themselves rajahs, and had been plundering, were then in a village about three miles from Gopaegunj, fifty men of the 13th irregular cavalry, under Lieut. Palliser, proceeded to the village, accompanied by Mr. Chapman and Mr. Moore, of the civil service, who joined our party from Mirzapore. They succeeded in capturing the zemindars, and bringing them into camp, where they were tried immediately by court-martial, and hanged by eight o'clock the same evening.

6. At midnight the detachment marched for Baroad, where we arrived at daybreak on the 16th, when I immediately proceeded, with a party of 100 men of the Madras fusiliers, and the whole of the irregular cavalry, to apprehend, if possible, a man named Belour Sing, who, with 1,200 followers, was reported to be in a village about five miles from the Grand Trunk Road, and had been plundering the neighbouring villages. On arriving at the village, named Dubaar, I found it deserted, and everything carried off, with the exception of some grain and a small quantity of gunpowder. I ordered Belour Sing's house and village to be burned; and a reward of 200 rupees was offered by Mr. Chapman for his capture.

7. On the evening of the 16th inst. a zemindar came to the camp, accompanied by a duffadar, who was in command of twelve sepoys, who formed a guard over some Government treasure, in a village about a mile off the road, half-way between Baroad and Sydadab. Mr. Chapman and myself arranged that the detachment should be halted at the nearest point on the road on our march to Sydadab, and a party proceeded to the village to recover the treasure. About 1 A.M. on the 17th Mr. Chapman and myself, with twenty-five men of the fusiliers, went to this village and carried off the treasure, which was said to amount to 12,000 rupees, and had been defended by the sepoy guard in charge of it, although the village had been attacked by dacoits and burnt. The treasure was brought into Allahabad, escorted by half the sepoy guard, the remainder of the guard having been left to protect the village. The treasure was handed over on arrival here to Mr. Court, and I think that the sepoys are fairly entitled to some remuneration from Government for having protected the treasure.

8. The punishment inflicted on the three zemindars of Gopaegunj, and the fact of its being known that the detachment was able to march against and punish marauders at considerable distances from the high road, had the effect of intimidating those who had been plundering; and when the detachment was at Baroad twenty-three Government bullocks made their appearance, evidently brought to the neighbourhood of the camp by the people who had carried them off, but had become afraid to retain them. When the detachment was at Sydadab some more bullocks and horses were brought back in the same way.

9. On arriving at Sydadab on the morning of the 17th inst. a party of the irregular cavalry, under Lieut. Palliser, proceeded to a village about three miles off, in which it was reported certain people resided who had plundered the dawb bungalow and carried off the Government bullocks from Sydadab. Lieut. Palliser's party secured several prisoners, who were brought into camp and tried by court-martial. A party of the fusiliers proceeded to another village belonging to the same people, but it was found deserted, and I ordered it to be burnt. A few Government bullocks were recovered. Two villages were burnt by the irregular cavalry.

10. On the morning of the 18th of June the detachment arrived at Allahabad. I found the road clear the whole way, and am of opinion that any party of European troops, however small, may now travel the road with safety; but to keep the dawb open I believe it is necessary in the meantime to establish a post of Europeans at Gopaegunj, and another half way between that place and Allahabad, and Col. Gordon, commanding Benares, has, I understand, ordered this to be done.

11. It is impossible to speak too highly of Mr. Chapman's services, and I am convinced that the measures adopted by him as a magistrate at the different places we passed through, if carried out by the police authorities, will have the effect of keeping the road perfectly quiet in future.

12. The conduct of the fusiliers on the march was most praiseworthy in every respect.

13. The irregular cavalry gave me every satisfaction, and I requested Lieut. Palliser to convey my thanks to his men for their services.

14. Dawk letters, I understand, arrived last night from Benares for the first time, and I trust that there will be no further interruption on this line.

I am, &c.

J. G. FRASER, Captain, Commanding
Detachment Madras Fusiliers.

The Acting Adjutant-General of the Army to the Secretary to the Government of India.

July 2.

Sir,—I have the honour, by desire of the Commander-in-Chief, to enclose, for submission to the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council, copy of a despatch from Major-General Sir H. Barnard, K.C.B., commanding the field force before Delhi, enclosing copy of a report from Brigadier H. Grant, C.B., of an action fought with the mutineers in rear of our camp on the 19th ultimo, in which the troops engaged behaved with great gallantry, and the brigadier who conducted the affair displayed much coolness and judgment.

2. Major General Reed desires to support Major-General Sir H. Barnard's recommendation in favour of the officers and men who distinguished themselves on this occasion.

I have, &c.

N. CHAMBERLAIN,
Brigadier-General, Acting Adjutant-General of the Army.

No. 13.

Major-General Sir H. Barnard, K.C.B., Commanding Field Force, to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Camp before Delhi, June 23.

Sir,—I have the honour to submit, for the information of the Commander-in-Chief, the report of Brigadier Grant, C.B. of the affair of the 19th inst.

These repeated attacks upon our position, with the small force we have to repel them, are rendered most harassing by the uncertainty of the point on which it is to be threatened, it being always doubtful whether it is to be confined to one, and can only be successfully repulsed by the untiring and unflinching gallantry of the small bodies who can alone be directed against the enemy, and I can assure you that under no circumstances did officers and men merit greater praise.

I have to deplore the loss of Lieutenant-Colonel Yule, 9th Lancers, an officer of great merit, and Lieutenant Alexander, of the 3rd Native Infantry, a young officer of much promise; also, that Colonel Belcher, Quartermaster-General, and Captain Daly, of the Guides, were wounded, and that I shall be deprived for some time of the services of these officers, an irreparable loss at this moment.

The native irregular cavalry man mentioned by Brigadier Grant, C.B. has been rewarded by the Order of merit, which carries the highest pension; and I would venture to recommend Privates Hancock and Purcell, 9th Lancers, for the Victoria Cross.

My thanks are due to Brigadier Grant, C.B. who on this, as on all occasions, evinces the highest qualifications for a cavalry officer.

Our loss, I regret to say, was severe; but, taking the great superiority of the enemy in number into consideration, I am only thankful it should not have been greater.

I inclose a return of casualties.

I have, &c.

H. BARNARD.

No. 14.

Brigadier J. H. Grant, C.B. Commanding Cavalry Brigade of the Field Force, to the Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General of Division.

Camp, Delhi, June 22.

Sir,—On the afternoon of the 19th instant, information was brought in that the camp was to be attacked in the rear.

The safety of the camp being under my direction, I immediately proceeded with a squadron of Her Majesty's 9th Lancers, two guns of Major Scott's, two of Captain Money's, and two of Major Turner's, under command of Lieutenant Bishop, to prevent the near approach of the enemy to our camp. When this force got to the right of the Ochterlony-gardens, a heavy fire of artillery was opened upon it, to which our guns replied. The troops from camp now began to arrive, and the action became general.

The enemy had taken up a position about half a mile in rear of the Ochterlony-gardens, and thence opened a very severe fire of round shot, grape, and canister. I advanced our guns right up to them, and our artillery replied to their fire with the greatest spirit.

As long as it was light, we succeeded in driving the rebels back, but in the dusk of the evening, the enemy, who were in great numbers, very nearly succeeded in turning our flank, and for some time two guns were in great jeopardy.

It now became very dark, but I succeeded, with Lieutenant Martin, of the 9th Lancers, in getting a few men together, and we charged into the enemy.

The guns, I am happy to say, were saved, but a waggon of Major Scott's battery was blown up. I must not fail to mention the excellent conduct of a sowar of the 4th irregular cavalry and two men of the 9th Lancers, Privates Thomas Hancock and John Purcell, who, when my horse was shot down, remained by me throughout. One of these men and the sowar offered me their horses, and I was dragged out by the sowar's horse. Private Hancock was severely wounded, and Private Purcell's horse was killed under him. The sowar's name is Roopur Khan.

Our fire re-opened, and the enemy were driven back to the own.

On the left flank two squadrons of the 9th Lancers, under Colonel Yule; one troop of the Carabineers, under Lieutenant Ellis; and the Guide corps, under Captain Daly, proceeded in support of Major Tombs's and Major Turner's guns. The former proceeded with the Guide corps, the latter with the 9th Lancers, in support to the left of the Ochterlony-gardens, and both opened fire.

A squadron of the 9th Lancers, under Captain Anson, then charged down the road; and the third squadron, under Lieutenant Jones, with Colonel Yule, followed in support. Colonel Yule, I regret to say, fell at this time, having received a shot in his leg, and was killed by the enemy. He is a severe loss to the 9th Lancers.

The Guide corps, under Captain Daly, gallantly charged twice, and I regret to say this excellent officer was severely wounded in the shoulder, but the enemy were beaten, and retired to the town.

The following morning I was ordered by the Major-General commanding to take a force out on the same ground, and drive the enemy away, if any were still left. I proceeded, but found only a strong picket of the enemy, which was easily driven back, and we captured a gun and two waggons, which they had left the night previous.

I beg to bring to the immediate notice of Major-General Sir H. Barnard, the names of the officers who had command of guns and squadrons. Major Scott, Captain Money, and Lieutenant Bishop, commanded the guns on the right, and nothing could be better than the way in which they brought their guns forward, and opened them on the enemy, fearless of danger; also Captain Head, who was on the right, and Captain Anson and Lieutenant Jones, who commanded squadrons on the left; the conduct of all has been most favourably reported to me. Major Turner's and Major Tombs's names, I presume, will be mentioned by Brigadier Wilson, and it would be needless my saying anything in their favour.

I beg also to bring the name of Captain Daly before Sir Henry, a most gallant and excellent officer.

I regret to say that the loss in the 9th Lancers was severe—five men killed, and eight wounded, and thirty-one horses killed, wounded, and missing.

I have, &c.,

J. H. GRANT.

Calcutta, July 16.

Sir,—I have the honour, by desire of the Commander-in-Chief, to forward, for the information of the Governor-General in Council, a letter, in the original, from the officer commanding at Benares, of the 8th inst., with its enclosures, reporting an attack made on the insurgents assembled in the neighbourhood on the 6th idem by Brevet-major J. F. Haliburton, of the 78th Highlanders, for the conduct of which his Excellency has expressed to that officer his acknowledgments.

2. I am to request that you will be good enough to draw the attention of Government to the favourable mention made of the conduct of the detachments of the 47th and 65th N.I., and to express the pleasure it gave Sir P. Grant to see them so creditably reported of.

3. The promotion of Sowar Hyat Khan to duffadar, for his gallant conduct in rescuing Lieut. G. H. Hale, under a heavy fire, has Sir P. Grant's warm approval.

4. The return of the enclosure is requested.

I have, &c.

Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon to the Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army.

Benares, July 8.

Sir,—I have the honour to transmit for the information of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, the report of Major Haliburton, her Majesty's 78th Highlanders, who commanded the detachment employed against the insurgents assembled in this neighbourhood on the 6th instant.

2. I am sorry to observe that Major Haliburton was not quite satisfied with the conduct of the party of the 12th irregular cavalry, and, as his Excellency would doubtless require more detailed particulars, I enclose with this the explanation furnished by Captain Boileau, on my requisition.

3. The sowar named by Captain Boileau as having specially distinguished himself by gallantly rescuing a dismounted officer, whose horse had been killed, was yesterday named in brigade orders, and promoted to the rank of duffadar. The sowar, I am informed, is a Punjabee.

4. His Excellency will be pleased to hear that the sepoys of the 47th and 65th appear disposed to act with energy and good faith against marauders, as shown from the reports from Azimghur and Mirzapore annexed.

I have, &c.,

P. GORDON, Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding
Benares District.

THE BREAKING UP OF THE PERSIAN FIELD FORCE.

FIELD FORCE ORDERS.

By Brigadier-General J. Jacob, C.B., Commanding Persian Expeditionary Field Force.

Head-Quarter, Camp Bushire, Aug. 18, 1857.

1. The Persian Expeditionary Field Force having been broken up, and the Europeans and departments composing it having departed, or being about severally to depart on their return to India, Brigadier-General J. Jacob begs to express to the officers and men who have composed the Field Force, his deep sense of their excellent behaviour and high merit displayed while serving under his command in Persia.

2. Previously to the departure of Lieut.-General Sir James Outram, K.C.B., &c., from Persia, Sir James called on the Brigadier-General for a list of the officers then with the force at Bushire, whose services he might think most deserving of notice.

3. On the occasion, the Brigadier-General reported as follows:—List of officers whose meritorious services while under the command of Brigadier-General J. Jacob, C.B., at Bushire, have been most conspicuous, and who are especially recommended to the favourable notice of Government. Brigadier Wilson, K.H.—To this officer, who entered the service before I was born, I am greatly indebted for the most generous and hearty support and assistance throughout the period during which he served under my command. Col. Trevelyan, Commandant of Artillery—The duties of this most able officer have been most important, and of a very varied and often most laborious nature. Nothing could have exceeded the ability and cheerful alacrity with which these duties have at all times been performed. Col. Younghusband, Deputy Adjutant-General—I have found the ardour, method, indefatigable zeal, departmental experience, and readiness of this officer most valuable to me. Indeed his conduct, both before and while under my command, has been beyond praise. Major Hill, Commanding Engineers—This officer has had the most important and laborious duties to perform throughout the whole of this expedition. He has executed the whole of the military works of the camp and town of Bushire, and in addition to these, has now, in spite of every disadvantage of weather and local circumstances, nearly completed the gigantic task of erecting hospitals, barracks, and other covers for the whole force, native and European. Major Hill has also frequently accompanied me on reconnoitring parties, when we have occasionally fallen in with strong outposts of the enemy, and has afforded me the most valuable assistance in every manner and on every occasion wherein his aid could be useful. Major Green, Assistant Adjutant-General—To this highly-distinguished officer, I am most deeply indebted for all possible assistance in every possible manner during the whole period of the service in which we were engaged. He accompanied me on every reconnoitring party. Major Ballard, C.B., Intelligence Department—The services of this officer, who served with such distinction in the Russian war, have been most valuable to me at the head of the Intelligence Department. Capt. Graves, commanding 3rd Cavalry—This officer always accompanied me on reconnoitring parties, and sometimes in presence of and close to the enemy. A large portion of the cavalry duties of the force of Bushire have fallen to him; these duties were at one time very harassing and arduous, and were performed by Capt. Graves, his officers and men, in the most admirable manner. Indeed, I can recommend Capt. Graves to notice as one of the best cavalry officers I am acquainted with. He has been nobly supported by Capt. Moore and Oldfield, his Adjutant, Lieut. Moore, and the other officers of this most excellent corps, which is as good a regiment of cavalry as I could ever wish to lead into action. Capt. Shewell, Assistant-Quartermaster-General—The services of this officer, while under my command at Bushire, appear to be deserving of commendation in the highest degree; of all, the most constantly laborious duties have fallen to his lot. In addition to the continual departmental work of a Quartermaster-General of a large force in the field, with perpetual embarking and disembarking of troops, and all the numerous harassing duties to such work, which Capt. Shewell has performed most admirably, he has also accompanied me on reconnoitring parties, and has always been ready to afford me the most valuable assistance whenever and however required. Capt. Pelly, Aide-de-Camp—To this highly accomplished officer, I am indebted for the most hearty and valuable aid on all possible occasions. He has of course accompanied me everywhere. Capt. Dunsterville, Superintendent of Camp Police and Bazaars—The services of this excellent officer have been most conspicuous and valuable; and he has been most indefatigable in the performance of his duties, which have been both delicate and laborious. Much of the comfort of the troops has depended on them. Lieut. Whish, H.M.'s 14th Dragoons, Assistant Quartermaster-General—This officer is one of the most able, active, and deserving staff officers I have ever met with. His exertions during the whole period of his service under me, particularly in embarking and disembarking cavalry, have been very great, skilful, and most praiseworthy, and have only been the more conspicuous from the difficulties, caused by bad weather and his failing health. Lieut. Whish also accompanied me on reconnoitring parties. Lieut. Briggs, commanding 1st Regiment Southern Irregular Horse—This officer is well worthy of commendatory notice, for the excellent manner in which, in spite of all adverse circumstances, he has conducted every duty intrusted to him. Major Pottinger, Major of Brigade, Artillery, and temporarily Deputy Assist. Adjutant-General—The services of this old and excellent officer during the expedition have already been brought to notice by the Commandant of Artillery, Col. Trevelyan; but it becomes my duty also to mention them, as they have been most valuable to me also personally, during the period this officer acted as Deputy Adjutant-General of the Force. Capt. Rigby, Superintendent of Police and Magistrate in the town—The services of this officer have been most valuable. He has very greatly improved the town of Bushire, and has maintained justice, peace, quiet, and excellent order among the inhabitants. His duties have been of a most delicate and important nature; he has been most zealous and industrious in their performance, and is well worthy of favourable notice. Lieut. Mellersh, Commissary of Ordnance—The work of the department under the control of this officer has been very heavy and most important. The mass of ordnance stores belonging to the force to be dealt with, has been immense; and besides these, all those captured from the enemy had to be arranged and disposed of by Lieut. Mellersh. The pieces of ordnance captured and forwarded to Bombay amounted to seventy-four, and the quantity of ammunition and other stores belonging to them was fully proportionate to the number of guns. All were reduced to order, arranged and disposed of in the best possible manner, by Lieut. Mellersh, and the department under his control.

(Signed) JOHN JACOB, Brigadier-General, Commanding at Bushire.

(True copy.)

(Signed) L. PELLY, Captain,
Political Secretary.

Since that time, Brigadier-General J. Jacob has himself held the chief command in Persia; and it now becomes his duty publicly to record that the highest possible praise is justly due to the manly and soldierlike bearing, the strict discipline and habitual excellence of conduct, which all ranks of this Field Force have evinced while serving in Persia.

The only Europeans of our whole strength of six thousand men of all arms retained at Bushire, consist of two companies of artillery. The conduct of these European soldiers has been in the highest degree praiseworthy. No men could possibly have behaved better; they have been exactly what English soldiers should always be in the Indian army—excellent patterns and examples of good conduct for their Arabic brethren-in-arms, the sepoys.

The main body of the Field Force, since the departure of Sir James Outram, has consisted of eight native regiments, horse and foot, of the Bombay army. The conduct of these regiments has been such as to do honour to the army to which they belong. Their discipline is perfect, and is of that high order which rests, not on external pressure only—such as the fear of punishment, &c.—but on the influence of good feeling, self-respect, honesty of purpose, and an honourable determination to do their duty to the State.

The cheerful alacrity and manly power with which every sort of work has been performed by the men of this Field Force, whether the task fell within the scope of ordinary military duty, or consisted in working at trenches and erecting buildings, has been most commendable, while their just, kind, and conciliatory bearing towards the inhabitants of the country in which they are serving, and their habitually steady and orderly conduct at all times, have been worthy of the faithful soldier of a just and benign government.

The impression left in the minds of the peaceful inhabitants of Persia by the conduct of the British troops during their occupation of Bushire and its neighbourhood, must prove deep and lasting.

The soldiers, irresistible in war, and before whom the best troops of the Shah had fallen or fled in terror, have been felt, throughout the protracted period of their residence in this country, to be the greatest benefactors of the inhabitants; and the people of Persia now feel, on our departure, as if their best friends were quitting them. In the minds of all those who have come in contact with our troops during the Persian expedition, the idea of the British army will remain impressed as the combination of the highest power with the highest benevolence and justice. To leave such reputation behind us may be as valuable to our country as the most brilliant success in war. All belonging to this Field

Force have co-operated in their various degrees to the achievement of this reputation, and to all, accordingly, the Brigadier-General, as their commanding officer, offers his warm acknowledgments. His deep acknowledgments and warm thanks are most worthy due to Capt. Jones, of the Indian Navy, Political Resident at Bushire, to his assistant, Capt. Dibrow, and to Capt. Rigby, superintendent of police, &c. Under Capt. Jones, in the town of Bushire, in their respective degrees, their services and ready and effective aid and support have been, from first to last, of the greatest value, while the value of their services, however high in itself, has been enhanced by the cordial and obliging manner in which they have at all times been given. To Commodore Rennie, the head of the naval force, has fallen a most important, varied, and most laborious task in connection with the Persian Field Force, and the duties to it have been performed in a manner worthy of the high reputation of this distinguished officer. The Brigadier-General begs to offer to Commodore Rennie his warmest thanks and acknowledgments, and to express how highly he appreciates his services and those of his lieutenants, who, in their respective capacities, are worthy of the like commendation. Among those officers, the Brigadier-General may particularly mention those whose exertions have especially come under his general notice:—Lieut. Mason and Lieut. Brazier; the duties of Lieut. Mason, as harbour-master at Bushire, have been of the most laborious and troublesome nature. They have been admirably performed, and the services of this officer have been most valuable to all departments of the army. The thanks of the Brigadier-General are also due to Acting-Master French, commanding the steamer Lady Falkland, for much zealous exertion and valuable service with the Persian Field Force. The services of many of the masters of the transports employed with the Field Force and their kind and obliging attention to the troops, men as well as officers, are entitled to thankful acknowledgments; and the Brigadier-General begs to note, as among the most conspicuous in these respects, Capt. Morris, of the Eastern Monarch, on board which ship the floating hospital was established. The Brigadier-General cannot adequately express in words his obligations to the officers of his own staff, viz., Major Green, assistant adjutant-general; Capt. M. Green, military secretary; and Capt. Pelly, political secretary. He will not, therefore, attempt to do so; but he begs these officers now to accept his public assurance that he considers their services to be above all praise from him. The duties of the quartermaster-general's department of this force have necessarily been very laborious and important, and they have been admirably performed by Capt. Wray, deputy quartermaster-general; and the Brigadier-General begs this able and excellent officer to accept his grateful thanks for the very efficient and successful manner in which the difficult and wearisome duties of his department have been performed. Capt. Wray has been ably assisted in his labours by Lieut. Whish, deputy assistant-quartermaster-general; and to this active and zealous officer the thanks of the Brigadier-General are also justly due. To Lieut.-Col. Ballard, c.b., assistant quartermaster-general at the head of the intelligence department, and to Lieut. King, deputy assistant-adjutant-general, the Brigadier-General offers his acknowledgment of their services. Capt. Dunsterville, superintendent of bazars and police in the camp, is worthy of the highest commendation for the admirable manner in which he has continued to conduct the delicate and important duties intrusted to him. To Brigadier Trevelyan, commanding the artillery, and to Capts. Hatch, Gibbard, and Lightfoot, commanding batteries, the Brigadier-General offers his thanks and high praise for the perfect efficiency in which the artillery of the force has been maintained, and for the very excellent manner in which every duty relating to that arm has invariably been performed. The services of Col. Trevelyan in Persia have not been confined to his more legitimate duties as commandant of artillery only; but the Brigadier-General, availing himself of the long experience of the colonel in the political service of India, has employed him in diplomatic duties of importance, which Col. Trevelyan has performed to admiration. The duties of the ordnance department of this force have been important and very laborious; they have been performed by Capt. Mellersh in the most efficient manner, to the entire satisfaction of the Brigadier-General, who begs Capt. Mellersh to accept for himself and the subordinates of his department the thanks and commendation so justly due to their steady and successful exertions. The duties of the commanding engineer, Major Hill, and of the departments under his command, have been in the highest degree important and laborious; and they have been performed with the greatest skill and diligence, while the excellent conduct of the engineer corps generally with the force is most creditable to all the officers belonging to it. To Major John Hill the thanks and grateful acknowledgments of the Brigadier-General are also due for much valuable support and assistance, readily and cordially afforded, in a variety of ways, whenever and wheresoever his services could be useful. The duties of the commissariat department have been very extensive, laborious, continuous, and important; and the Brigadier-General offers his acknowledgments to Capt. Gordon, assistant commissary-general, the head of the department with the force, for the manner in which these duties have been conducted. To Brigadier Stewart, who commanded for some time the cavalry at Bushire, to Brigadier Honner, commanding the 2nd infantry brigade, to Brigadier Macan, commanding the 1st infantry brigade, and to Capt. Graves, now commanding the cavalry of the force, the best thanks of the Brigadier-General are due for the admirable discipline and good order which they have preserved in their respective brigades, and for the excellent manner in which they caused every duty entrusted to them to be performed. The like praise is also justly due to Capt. Moore, commanding 3rd light cavalry; Lieut. Briggs, commanding 1st regt. Southern Irregular Horse; Major Baynes, commanding 20th N.I.; Major Travers, commanding 23rd N.I.I.; Major Manson, commanding 4th Rifles; and Capt. Hough, Belooch battalion. The duty of forming and organizing the Land Transport Corps has been most difficult and laborious, requiring great patience, diligence and zeal. It has been most ably performed by Major Curtis, whose exertions have been highly successful, and most praiseworthy. The services of Capt. Taylor, commanding the division of the Land Transport Corps at Bushire, have also been commendable. Major Christie, deputy judge-advocate-general, has most ably conducted the duties of his department with the Field Force. The extensive arrangements of the medical department of the Persian Field Force, both afloat and ashore, have been admirably conducted by Superintending Surgeon Stovell, whose untiring zeal and diligence in carrying out the duties of his department have been conspicuous and very commendable. The general health of the troops at Bushire has been astonishingly good; and this great blessing may, in some degree, be attributable to the great experience and consummate professional ability which the head of the medical department of the Force has brought to bear on the work of his department. The thanks and gratitude of the whole Force, as well as the acknowledgment of the Brigadier-General, are therefore justly due to Superintending Surgeon Stovell, and the medical officers subordinate to him. Although the Persian expeditionary force will so speedily cease to exist, the Brigadier-General earnestly hopes that there is no need for him to bid the troops composing this force farewell, for he confidently hopes immediately to have them under his command again in India as a field force on service in the Deccan. In that expectation he will now add no more.

BLOCKADE OF CANTON.

(From the Gazette of Tuesday, Oct. 13.)

Foreign Office, Oct. 13.—It is hereby notified that the Right Hon. the Earl of Clarendon, her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty a despatch from Rear-Admiral Sir Michael Seymour, K.C.B., Commanding her Majesty's Naval Forces in China, dated from on board her Majesty's ship the Calcutta, August 8, 1857, stating that he had on that day established a blockade of the port and river of Canton by a competent force under his command. And it is hereby further notified that all the measures authorized by the laws of nations and treaties will be adopted and executed with respect to all vessels which may attempt to violate the said blockade.

DIRECT MILITARY APPOINTMENTS.—The following gentlemen, having obtained nominations to the Indian army, passed their required examination on the 20th inst:—G. H. W. Fagan, E. Kitson, C. J. S. Cahill, F. H. Carleton, G. R. Grylls, C. W. Lys, H. C. Stevens, R. Wickham.

NEW MUSEUM AT THE INDIA HOUSE.—Some considerable alterations, to give increased space for the collection of models and works of Indian art, having been going on at the India House for some time past under the direction of Mr. Digby Wyatt, the present architect of the Company; and, though the Directors have now something else to think about, the works are being completed and the collection arranged for public inspection. What was the tea sale-room has been transformed into an Indian Court, with columns and arches of Indian fashion, and appropriated mainly to sculptured antiquities, slabs, and figures. Some elaborately cut stone panels of Indian work have been set up to form a screen. The carving of some of the groups displays wonderful finish. The secretary's residence and other parts have been thrown into the museum, and the whole now occupies a considerable space. The amount of the contract is about 2,500*l.*; with the fittings the sum will probably amount to 3,600*l.* Messrs. Hack and Son, of Poplar, are the contractors. The collection at the India House is one of great interest. Those who would study Indian architecture must go there to do it. Of minute carving and metal-work there are some beautiful specimens.—Builder.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

THURSDAY, October 29, 1857.

TROJAN OR TYRIAN.

THE recent selection of two Mahommedan gentlemen to act as assistants to the newly-appointed Governor of the Central Provinces opens up afresh the long-mooted question as to the expediency of employing natives in the administration of public affairs. According to one party of disputants, neither Mahommedan nor Hindoo is worthy of trust: both are corrupt, false, fraudulent, and grossly prejudiced. According to others, the native gentry of Hindostan are as honourable, conscientious, and high-minded, as those of the most civilized country in Europe. It is not easy to reconcile statements so utterly at variance, but the truth will, probably, be found to lie somewhere midway between the two. There is every likelihood that, so long as native officials are underpaid and treated as an inferior class, those who will accept employment on such conditions are not men of fine feelings or high moral tone. It is unreasonable to expect that gentlemen, in the true sense of the word, will subject themselves to indignities, or the chance of being looked down upon, and that for the sake of a mere clerk's salary. But the Hindoo, we are told, is naturally venal,—the Mahommedan, by his religion, is intolerant, insolent, and unjust. Undoubtedly these are the vices of the lower classes of those religious denominations; but in all countries the gentleman is essentially one and homogeneous. That there are many natives, both Hindoo and Mahommedan, whose opinions, habits, and manners are thoroughly "gentle," no one can deny, without accusing the best and ablest of our Anglo-Indian statesmen of being indifferent as to the moral and intellectual character of their friends and associates. Every one of those great men, whose names are quoted as authorities on Indian matters, was proud to enumerate among their intimates many natives of splendid qualities and attainments. Surely it is the mark of a narrow and illiberal mind to suppose that men who were esteemed worthy of the familiar acquaintance of a Malcolm, a Munro, a Metcalfe, or an Elphinstone, would not be capable of discharging the very highest offices of the State with honour to themselves and advantage to the public. But then they must not be humiliated, and their self-respect trampled upon, by tendering them one-third of the salary to which a European would be entitled in a similar position. It is a great mistake to imagine that a native can live upon so very much less an income than a Feringhee. He may pay less for house-rent or the education of his children; his cellar may not be so well filled, or his tailor's bill quite so alarming; but his economy on those points is fully counterbalanced by his expenditure in other ways. It is necessary for the maintenance of his social position that he keep a large retinue of servants, and that he dispense liberally to all who are dependent on him. At particular festivals he is bound to give munificent largesses, and his entertainments must be conducted on a princely scale. In short, he must be enabled to hold his status as a gentleman after the fashion of his own country. The result of the short-sighted economy or jealousy that has regulated our employment of natives, has been the estrangement of the aristocracy, and their supersession by a class of needy, rapacious, impertinent, low-minded, ill-educated clerks, who eke out the scantiness of their nominal pay by all kinds of perquisites—to use a mild term—and render in return the smallest possible amount of public service. If we would really ingratiate the people of India, if we would have them to take a lively interest in the permanence of our sway, we must associate their aristocracy with the machinery of government. We have seen the unshaken loyalty of the princes, nobles, and gentlemen of the Upper Provinces during the present mutiny, even where they had little reason to owe any gratitude to the British authorities. How much more cordial would have been their co-operation, had they participated in the administration of the country! Is it not even probable that in that case the disaffection of the army, had it existed at all, would have been timely intimated to the head of the Government? When order and tranquillity shall be restored, the native element, we trust, will be more fully introduced and developed in the future arrangements that will then be rendered necessary—but not as a measure of economy. Good salaries must be given to obtain the services of the higher order of natives. In all countries, it is the landed gentry and their families who form the mainstay of the commonwealth; but their hearty goodwill can only be secured, like that of any other class, by making them a fair return for their services. We do not, therefore, object to Lord Canning's selection of two Mahommedan gentlemen to fill posts of some credit and responsibility, except on the ground of its inopportuneness at the present moment. At any other time, we should rejoice to learn that the best men had been chosen, without reference to creed or colour, and that Trojan and Tyrian were treated without distinction, save on the ground of personal merits.

THE CITY OF RANGOON.

WHEN the British army under Major-General Godwin entered the city of Rangoon, on the 11th April, 1852, they found nothing but black shapeless ruins to attest that a populous town had once flourished on that site. The substantial house of the merchant, the bamboo hut of the artisan, and even the sacred monasteries, had been levelled with the ground or delivered to the flames. The inhabitants themselves had been forced to remove inland, and a scene of perfect desolation saddened the hearts of the conquerors. Within a few days, however, the country people took courage to approach the camp with supplies of provisions. Adventurers also flocked thither from Moulmein, Madras, and Bengal, and plied a busy and profitable trade with the thoughtless soldiery and their still more reckless naval comrades. "Every one," says Capt. Keighly, "squatted where his fancy dictated, without regard to regularity or order, and a squalid mass of huts, regardless of streets, and without drainage, rose like an exhalation from the ruins of the old town." But this confusion was of brief duration. Towards the close of that same year the civil government issued a proclamation claiming the whole of the town-lands by right of conquest, as, under the Burmese rule, they had belonged to the state, and not to individuals. The object of the government was by no means the indulgence of mere arbitrary power or rapacity. It had been resolved to make Rangoon stand alone among the cities of the East as a model of cleanliness, regularity of construction, and security against the ravages of fire. The site of the old city was retained, with its river frontage of 3,900 yards, and depth of 700. This ample space was divided into twenty-five squares, each designated by a letter of the alphabet, and measuring 860 feet by 800. These squares are formed by streets 100 feet wide, intersecting each other at right angles, and are subdivided into five blocks of buildings by one road 50 feet in width, and two on each side 30 feet wide. The 100-foot streets are alone honoured with names; the others being merely numbered from west to east. A series of rectangular reservoirs surround the city, for the purpose of watering the streets, in addition to a tank 70 feet long by 15 wide and 10 deep, to be used to extinguish fires, the great curse of Eastern cities. Another large tank is likewise being constructed to supply water for the shipping.

The chief obstacle to the execution of this apparently simple plan was the low level of the site. A large portion of it was below high-water mark, and in the rains was frequently inundated to a depth of four or five feet. An embankment was, therefore, run along the river face, which now constitutes the fashionable drive and promenade; sluice-drains being constructed at certain intervals to allow the escape of rain-water at low tide, without permitting the influx of the river at high water. The swamps at the back of the town were then filled up, a work of vast labour and expense; but absolutely necessary in a sanitary point of view. Nor were the suburbs neglected. About two miles to the eastward a circuitous road, across a dismal swamp, led to a collection of miserable hovels, known as Puzoondoung. A causeway, 6 feet high and 50 wide, has now been run right across the marsh, and the village marked out into small lots at low prices for the accommodation of the poor. Again, at about an equal distance to the north-west, the charming village of Kemendine lies peacefully nestled amid the luxuriant vegetation for which Burmah is celebrated. An excellent carriage-road now connects this pretty suburban spot with the capital, and on each side of the road may be seen the villas and gardens of the Government officials and the merchants of Rangoon. To the north-east of the city is an ornamental piece of water, about five miles in circumference, called the Great Lake, but which was formerly unapproachable during the monsoon. It is now accessible at all seasons of the year, and its banks are being laid out as park and pleasure-grounds for the recreation of the inhabitants of Rangoon.

Along the north side of the river, beyond the actual limits of the city, steam saw-mills, timber-yards, and granaries are already superseding the rank herbage that fringed the water's edge. And on the south, or opposite side of the river, dockyards, coal-sheds, patent slips, boiler-sheds, and other industrial works, are in different stages of construction. It is almost superfluous to remark, that a spacious gaol stands forth as the outpost of civilization; but there are also a school-house, an electric telegraph-office, and a court of justice. "Brick pathways," exclaims Capt. Keighly, with pardonable enthusiasm, "have been changed into metalled roads, narrow and noisome alleys into broad and airy streets, bamboo huts into teak houses. A few irregular pukka godowns are replaced by rows of handsome brick shops and warehouses. The river frontage no longer presents a back view of squalid hovels, tottering on a foundation of fetid mud; but a clear strand, wholly open on the river side, and on the land side lined by pukka houses. * * Hack carriages are running in scores through the city, which, two years ago, could not be traversed by a bullock-cart. Elegant carriages may now be seen of an evening slowly gliding along, where a few months ago it was dangerous to attempt to ride a pony. The triumph of civilization over barbarism is complete."

THE STRAITS' SETTLEMENTS.

THE British settlements in the Straits of Malacca consist of Pulu Penang, or Prince of Wales' Island, Malacca, and Singapore. During the early part of the present century, Penang was a place of great importance as a naval station, but it has since been eclipsed by the superior local position of Singapore. The population of these settlements is for the most part migratory, and derived from the lowest classes of various Asiatic races. Emigrants from China, Arabia, continental India, Burmah, Siam, Sumatra, Java, and other places to the eastward of the Bay of Bengal, are said to congregate here as on neutral ground. Singapore contains about 70,000 inhabitants, of whom the European residents form so small a portion as scarcely to be recognizable. Exclusive of women and children, they are estimated at under 250, though more numerous than the European community at Penang, with its mixed native population of 120,000 souls. At Malacca there are not above a dozen Europeans, including women and children; but on the other hand, there are many coloured descendants of the ancient Portuguese and Dutch, now reduced to the most menial occupations. That place is also thickly peopled with Chinese families, who have resided there for several generations, but without losing their peculiar characteristics as a distinct race. There are, besides the native Chinese, some 5,000 emigrants of that people, located in gangs at the tin-mines. "As they are all males," writes Mr. Kerr, "they herd together in large sheds made of timber, the bark of trees, and such-like materials, obtained from the surrounding jungle. Lawless and unfettered, they are only harmless so long as they are successful; for then the effect of their vicious propensities is confined to their own isolated circle." The paucity of women is remarked also at Penang; but at Singapore the disproportion between the sexes is said to be incredible. In all the settlements the Chinese are by far the most numerous, and likewise the most persevering and industrious. But their secret associations render them dangerous members of society, and neutralize the good arising from their ingenuity and aptitude for labour.

"On his arrival,"—we again quote Mr. Kerr's unpublished pamphlet,—"the Chinese emigrant is sold, or sells himself, no matter to whom. In other words, his first year's labour is bartered for the cost of his passage from his fatherland, the coarsest food, a scanty supply of clothing, a cover of some sort to cook and sleep under, and the occasional services of a barber,—equivalent in all to about three dollars a month. As every individual belongs to some particular clan or tribe indicated by the prefix to his name, it is not long before the stranger finds himself a member of a secret association, which exacts from him implicit obedience to its rules, however repugnant they may be to the law of the land, and however dangerous in their operation to the well-being of society at large. * * * *

His term of service expired, he either renews it, or makes an effort to be the master of his own time, and with this view begs, borrows, or steals, to enable him to commence operations on his own account. Turning everything to advantage, he is sooner or later in a position to pursue the occupation of a merchant, a shopkeeper, an agriculturist, or mechanic. He now aspires to become a respectable man, and takes to himself either a mistress or a wife. If the former, she is brought out of the family of some indigent neighbour (not Chinese); if the latter, she is of Chinese descent, and obtained from the head of some family that may happen to have a marriageable daughter at the time amongst its members. But in neither case is the connection allowed to interfere with his original design of returning to his native land, whenever it may suit his purpose to do so; nevertheless, there is much kindly feeling evinced towards the woman and their mutual offspring as long as he continues to reside in the country."

The Straits Settlements are the great convict stations for India and China. On the 30th April, 1856, there were 1,358 convicts at Penang, 648 at Malacca, and 1,839 at Singapore, making a total of 3,845, maintained and guarded at an annual expense of 17,648*l.*, or 7*s.* 7½*d.* each man per mensem. But this outlay is not altogether unproductive, where free labour is not obtainable for the desired purposes, except at a prohibitory rate. Thus, the sea-wall protecting the shore fronting the harbour of Singapore was constructed by convict labour, as also were three batteries for heavy guns, which were erected in 1854. The Government buildings generally are the work of convicts, as well as the materials used in their construction. It is to be regretted, however, that there is not some means taken to keep the convicts from the Presidency towns apart from those who come from the interior of Hindostan. The former are transported for short periods, and are described as a set of worthless vagabonds, whereas the latter, who are mostly sentenced for life, have been convicted for being engaged in a dacoitee, or for having committed manslaughter in some village affray. These usually become steady well-conducted men, and settle down, good-humouredly, to their compulsory labour. Reasonable objections have also been urged against the introduction of Chinese convicts into the Straits, where they are almost certain to effect their escape. This could hardly happen, it is suggested, if they were sent into the interior of Ceylon, which is, moreover, a Queen's colony, and therefore more justly liable to receive the refuse of another Queen's colony.

The question of piracy is reported as extremely difficult of solution. In the first place, it is almost impossible to bring home the charge against any particular junk. Many of these junks, while quietly lying in the harbour, make no attempt to conceal the heavy armament they carry, which they plead to be absolutely necessary for their own protection against pirates. Perhaps the evil may be gradually abated by the constant presence of gunboats in these waters. The rapidly-increasing trade of Singapore imperatively demands the adoption of efficient measures for its protection. Since 1850-51 it has risen nearly 75 per cent., and in the year 1855 was represented by the value of 9½ millions sterling. Its chief produce is pepper and gambier; it possesses a harbour accessible from all quarters, and through which every ship must pass between India and China; and being a free port, it is becoming more and more the emporium for the produce of the Malayan peninsula and archipelago, of Borneo, Siam, Cambodia, and Cochin-China. A place of such importance, and occupying such a commanding position, well deserves the presence of a considerable naval force; nor would it be amiss if it were converted into a first-rate fortification, held by English troops and artillery. Great Britain is not the only Power that has ships of war in those seas.

THE INDIAN POST-OFFICE.

THE low uniform rate of postage—½ anna, or three farthings for all letters under ¼ tola weight—was introduced into our Indian possessions on the 1st October, 1854, and the post-office establishment entirely reorganized on the 1st December of the following year. With a few exceptions, as in Pegu, the Straits Settlements, Peshawur, and Aden, where there are ex officio postmasters, every office is placed in charge of a deputy-postmaster. The different officers in the four Presidencies are divided into convenient groups or circuits, to each of which an inspector is appointed, whose duty it is to travel from office to office, carefully superintending the harmonious working of the department. Every week they submit a diary of their proceedings to the Postmasters-General, who in their turn are called upon once a fortnight to lay a narrative of their correspondence before the Director-General. Most of the deputy-postmasters are natives, and still under probation; but the inspectors have been selected from the former European postmasters for their experience and intelligence. The principle of promotion according to merit is fully recognized, and from the 1st January, 1857, no one previously unconnected with the department will be appointed to any but the lowest grade, provided there be any one already in the Post-office worthy of advancement and capable of discharging the duties of the vacant office.

The Presidency of Bengal is divided into 9 circuits; that of Madras into 10; and those of Bombay and the North-West Provinces respectively into 9 and 12. In Bengal there are 239 post-offices and 13 receiving-houses; in Madras, 134 of the former and 20 of the latter; in Bombay, 115 of the one and 12 of the other; and in the North-West Provinces 265 and 16. Letter-boxes have also been fixed up wherever required, and the natives are beginning to appreciate the convenience of having them, though in the Nizam's dominions, and in a few other places, they positively prohibit any boxes being put up at, or near, their own houses. In the year 1855-56, the mail was conveyed over nearly 6,000 miles more than in the preceding year; or, in all, over 36,313 miles. Of this great distance, 146 miles were performed by railway, 26,611 by runners, 2,240 by horses, 3,457 by carts, and 3,859 by boats. On horseback, the average rate of speed varies, according to the nature of the road, from 4 to 9½ miles in the hour, and in the rainy season from 3½ to 8 miles. The mail-carts attain an average speed of 7 miles in the hour, the contractors—mostly natives—being at liberty also to convey passengers. Where the stage does not exceed six miles, or the weight 18 lb., the rate of 6 miles in the hour is attained by runners in the dry season; during the rains the maximum rate is about 5½ miles. Sometimes considerable detention takes place at the unbridged rivers, where there are ferries. The boatmen are frequently fast asleep on the opposite side, and the runners have to wait an indefinite time before they can get across. It has been proposed to pull the mail-bags across by means of a galvanized wire rope, supported by a pillar at each bank. This would answer for rivers nearly a quarter of a mile in breadth, but the expense would be very great; hempen ropes have been used, with indifferent success, over streams of small width.

Wherever it is practicable, the banghy, or parcel-mail, is conveyed together with the letter-bags. Where this cannot be done, special runners are employed, who cover from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles in the hour. On certain roads, however, light vans, fitted with hoods and awnings for the comfort of passengers, are provided for the conveyance of parcels, and average a speed of 7 miles. Each van is capable of accommodating six passengers, who are charged $1\frac{1}{2}$ d. a mile. This cheap mode of conveyance is very popular with the natives, who speak of "going parcel" to such a place. "Who are you? what do you want?" asked a postmaster one day of a native who was loitering about a van that was being loaded. "I am parcel, sahib," was the matter-of-course reply. The expense of travelling by the mail-carts is naturally somewhat higher, on account of the accelerated speed, but on the Agra and Indore line it does not exceed $3\frac{1}{2}$ d. a mile, or on any other road $5\frac{1}{2}$ d. One or two travellers may engage a cart, and, as it were, post, for one shilling each, or for eighteen pence for two, per mile. These carts are furnished with a light shifting hood, so that travellers can proceed by them at all seasons of the year. In the year 1854-55, the receipts from passengers by the mail-carts, in the North-Western Provinces, amounted to 2,641*l.*, but in the following year they rose to 4,659*l.*

Since the reduction of the rates of postage, there has been an enormous increase of correspondence. In thirty days of August, 1854, under the old system, 1,590,223 letters passed through the post-offices of the different Presidencies. In April, 1855, when the new system had been seven months in operation, their number had risen to 2,517,566; and by April of the following year, to 2,813,173; showing an increase in the gross number of covers amounting to 76·9 per cent. within nineteen months after the reduction. The chargeable letters, in August, 1854, were 378,989 prepaid, and 635,417 "bearing" (that is, bearing postage, or unpaid); in April, 1856, the former were 1,329,561, and the latter 659,358. The Postal Commissioners had previously calculated that the correspondence must increase 147 per cent. before the postage under the new system would equal that under the old. As compared with 1849-50, the chargeable letters have already increased 142·9 per cent.; so that there is every reason to anticipate the avoidance of any pecuniary loss by the new arrangement, so soon as tranquillity shall be once more restored. The circulation of newspapers has been likewise greatly augmented; but this has not been an unalloyed benefit, seeing that the seditious lithographs of the native presses have been widely distributed through the same channel. In August, 1854, 126,387 paid and "bearing" newspapers passed through the Post-office, against 260,831 in April, 1856. The actual increase in the chargeable correspondence which took place in nineteen months after the reduction of rates, was 101·9 per cent.; and it is worthy of note, that very nearly one-half of the chargeable correspondence under the old rates has not been in any way affected by the alteration, as letters under $\frac{1}{4}$ tola weight were even then conveyed for $\frac{1}{2}$ anna. In England, the introduction of the uniform penny postage affected nearly 90 per cent. of the chargeable correspondence of the country. The postage on newspapers was reduced from 3 annas to 1 anna, which increased the circulation in nineteen months by 106·3 per cent. The increase is 123·2 per cent. in Bengal, 120·8 in Madras, 35·05 in Bombay, and 156·3 in the North-West Provinces. In the official correspondence, the increase has been 14·4 per cent., which is remarkable, "as the privilege of franking has been withdrawn from upwards of a million of people connected with the State." In August, 1854, there were 16,841 chargeable, and 7,854 Service parcels transmitted through the Post-office, and in April, 1856, 24,953 of the former and 14,856 of the latter; and this notwithstanding the large numbers of parcels conveyed to the Upper Provinces by the private transit companies. Of Indian books, there were conveyed, under the new Book-Post Rules, 8,738 in April, 1856, against 6,234 in April, 1855; and of imported books, 5,604 against 4,893. Under the old system, the entire number of Indian and imported books, pamphlets, &c., did not amount to 2,500 per mensem. In March, 1851, there were 120 registered letters despatched from Calcutta and 138 received; in April, 1856, there were 4,138 despatched and 5,453 received. Throughout the different Presidencies, the number of registered letters in that month was 27,909 against 18,671 in April of the preceding year. The fee has been reduced from one shilling to sixpence, and a prepaid registered letter, which formerly would have cost two shillings, may now be sent for $6\frac{1}{2}$ d. to any part of India.

The Unclaimed Letter and Newspaper Departments exhibit some curious details. In April, 1855, the unclaimed chargeable letters amounted to 28,110, which had increased in twelve months to 48,283. The unclaimed chargeable newspapers also rose from 3,196 to 6,631. The total number of unclaimed and refused letters lying in the Post-office in India is estimated at 333,898. In the North-West Provinces the Postmaster-General states that two-thirds of the letters sent to his office are either incorrectly or incompletely addressed. Letters are frequently posted with only the name of the addressee; others have in addition the name of some obscure village or hamlet,—the same designation applying to a dozen different places;—others, again, are illegible, and not a few have no address at all. Letters, too, are often refused by natives, when unpaid, simply because the gist of the communication is written outside on the envelope; the sender taking care not to give his own name or address; so that no application can be made to him for the postage after the refusal of the addressee. The proportion of unpaid to paid letters, notwithstanding the double postage, is very considerable, owing to a belief in the greater security and promptness of their delivery. Robbery of stamps by the native servants sent with letters to be posted is likewise very frequent. In the month of May, 1856, there were found in the Calcutta box alone 15 covers with the stamps taken off, 35 marked paid, but without any traces of stamps having been affixed, 5 with defaced stamps, 16 with stamps from which the obliterating marks had been attempted to be washed, 1 with wafer destroyed and letter open, and 3 superscribed registered, but which had not been registered. In the year 1855-56, there were four cases of highway robbery of the mails and parcels in Bengal, two in Madras, six in Bombay, and seventeen in the North-Western Provinces. In one instance the driver of a mail-cart was shot in the lower jaw, and at other times two runners were murdered. Twenty-eight robberies of parcels were committed by servants of the Post-office. The annual loss, however, is very small, although "some hundred thousand pounds' worth of Cashmere shawls, gold, silver, jewellery, and precious stones of all kinds, besides the judicial and postage-stamps, averaging many lakhs of rupees annually, are transmitted."

The numerical strength of the Post-office in India is as follows:—1 director-general, 4 postmasters-general, 40 inspecting postmasters, 663 postmasters and deputy-postmasters, 662 English clerks, 226 vernacular clerks, 1,663 postmen and servants in the Post-office, and 19,385 superintendents of the road establishment, overseers, coachmen, horse-keepers, runners, boatmen, bearers, &c. &c.; making a grand total of 22,644 persons. Independently of the regular postal department, there is the Bullock Train Establishment, for the conveyance of heavy goods, which employs 4,215 individuals. And there is also the Dāk Travelling Department, with its network of staging bungalows, in which for a small fixed sum the traveller can obtain lodging, food, water, cooking, and attendance,—it must be confessed, of very indifferent quality. The aggregate distance served by the Bullock Train Establishment in Bengal and the North-West Provinces exceeds 1,500 miles.

The actual receipts as postage in 1853-54 amounted to 199,287.; in 1855-56 they had fallen to 162,548.; the difference being 36,739., or 18 per cent. This comparatively trifling diminution would, no doubt, have been made good by the end of the present, or, at the latest, of the ensuing year, had it not been for the anarchy created by the Bengal mutineers. The destruction of all Government establishments, and the interruption of correspondence, must naturally cause a heavy loss to the postal department, from which it will take some years to recover.

CENSUS OF THE PUNJAB TERRITORIES, 1854-55.

On the night of the 31st December, 1854, a careful and minutely-detailed census was taken of all persons who slept in any house of every city, town, village, hamlet, and detached tenement throughout the Punjab territories, between sunset on that day and sunrise on the following 1st January, 1855. The natives themselves are described as entering warmly into the spirit of the thing, without the slightest indication of alarm or suspicion; and at Umritsur they even "stood waiting with a light at their doors for the arrival of the enumerators, and the streets and alleys were half illuminated." It appears, from the result of that night's operations, that the Punjab territories contain 81,625 square miles, 28,879 villages, and a population of 12,717,821 souls, in a proportion of 155 to the square mile, though varying from 62 to 334; and that they yield a land revenue of 1,701,021., exclusive of excise and miscellaneous receipts, which raise the total amount to something over two millions sterling.

But in addition to actual British possessions, there are numerous quasi-independent native principalities, subject to the political superintendence of the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab. These are the Cis-Sutlej Principalities, the Simla Hill States, the Trans-Sutlej Principalities, Bhawalpoor, and the kingdom of Cashmeer, with the Jummoo raj. These various states comprise an area of 102,884 square miles, with a population of 6,750,606 souls, in the proportion of 65 to the square mile, though varying from 36 to 257; and yield a revenue of 1,405,653. to their own rulers. With regard to the density of the population in the Punjab territories, tables have been furnished, contrasting the most thickly and the most thinly-peopled districts with corresponding districts in other parts of India.

There are 26,210 villages, with an average population of 440; 2,124 small towns, containing from 1,000 to 5,000 inhabitants; 76 from 5,000 to 10,000; 32 from 10,000 to 50,000; and three cities with more than that number. The most populous city is Umritsir, with its 122,184 inhabitants; next, Lahore, with 94,143; and third in order, Peshawur, with 53,294. Loodianah contains a population of 47,191 souls; Jullundur, 28,422; Buttila, 26,208; Mooltan, 2,493; Dehra Ghazee Khan, 21,097; Sealkote, 19,249; Wuzerabad, 16,846; Dehra Ismael Khan, 15,899; Rawul Pindee, 15,813; Ferozepoor, 12,032; and Jhelum, 6,060.

It is a singular fact, that there is an immense preponderance of Mahommedans in the Punjab. Of that persuasion there are not fewer than 7,364,974 individuals, to 5,352,874 Hindoos. This is partly owing, however, to the thousands of Jâts and Rajpoots who were compulsorily converted under the Mogul emperors. Of Sikhs proper, the number has not been precisely ascertained, but they are under 200,000 in the Lahore division, which comprises their religious capital, Umritsur, and their original territory, Manjha. Sikhism, in fact, is dying out. It is no longer a political organization. Initiations are of comparatively rare occurrence, and even the children of Sikhs are brought up simply as Hindoos.

The male population is to the female as 55 to 45, and in some Hindoo cities the excess of the former is very remarkable. In the Umballa district there are 147,236 males to 117,998 females; in Ferozepoor, 41,844 to 25,626; in Lahore, 67,531 to 41,680; in Sealkote, 96,765 to 66,068; and in Peshawur, 34,446 to 11,545. This difference is in some measure attributable to the numbers of soldiers and camp-followers from the lower provinces, who are generally unaccompanied by their wives. But it is also partly to be traced to the unnatural practice of female infanticide, which formerly prevailed to a great extent. At least one generation must pass away before the balance of the sexes can be even partially restored.

REPORTED MUTINY OF THE 50TH M.N.I.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—I am induced to address you, in consequence of a statement I find in p. 686 of your last Indian Mail, published on Friday, the 16th instant, to the following effect:—

“NAGPORE.—We have received intelligence about the 50th Madras Native Infantry at Nagpore having mutinied and resolved to massacre their officers. The adjutant happened fortunately to find out the plot, which was, to murder all whilst at mess. The light company began the row; but a good many men remained stanch, and attacked the others. We have received no further particulars.”

I have gone through the columns of the Madras Overland Athenaeum, which would certainly have mentioned the circumstance, if any such report had reached the Presidency before the 14th September. I am in hopes your correspondent has been misinformed, and that there is no truth in the story, for the following reasons:—On reference to the Army List of 1856, I find the 50th regiment quartered at Secunderabad (Hydrabad), and probably was one of the native regiments that suppressed the incipient rising of the Mahomedans in the vicinity of the Residency at that place in July last. By the latest account of the distribution of the Madras army, corrected up to 16th August, the 50th regiment forms part of the movable column under command of Brigadier Whitlock in the Deccan, and which arrived on the Nerbudda in the end of August. Part of that force was sent on in advance: two corps, viz., the 50th and 52nd Madras Native Infantry, had been some time previously at Hooshungabad and Jubbulpore, on the Nerbudda; and it appears, from the correspondent of the Homeward Mail, dated Jubbulpore, August 20, that portions of each of the above-mentioned corps had been distributed, under NATIVE OFFICERS, to several small civil stations, to protect them; that both corps had been moreover acting in co-operation against some rebels, mutineers who had obtained possession of the civil station of Belharie, in Bundelcund; that they had succeeded in expelling that enemy, and that part of the 50th Madras Native Infantry was then in possession of the place. Now, the Madras army has not only been free from the guilt, either of mutiny, sedition, or conspiracy against its officers or the State, up to the latest accounts from India, but it has been actively employed against rebels at Hydrabad, at Hooshungabad, Jubbulpore, and other places situated within the Bengal territory; part has been sent for from Bengal, and is actually fighting in the ranks with the European regiments operating against the mutineers in the interior of that Presidency; it would therefore be matter of serious import, to learn that any regiment of the Madras army had at the eleventh hour turned its arms against its own officers. I trust the foregoing history of the proceedings and the whereabouts of the 50th regiment of Madras Native Infantry, will satisfy your readers that there is no truth in the report to which you have given currency, and which I think I have shown must be a mistake. It would indeed be a climax to our misfortunes, to find that the Madras army, at the eleventh hour, was beginning to follow the example of that of Bengal.

How fearful would be the consequences, when we know that this army consists of fifty-two native infantry regiments and eight cavalry regiments, besides horse and foot artillery, giving protection to an area (including the Nagpore territory) of 235,619 square miles, and a population which, according to the census of last year, amounts to 42,966,968 inhabitants. Fortunately, however, this army has been hitherto true to its colours, and I anticipate will yet prove that it has no sympathy with those monsters who have not only disgraced their characters as soldiers, but have shown that they are only worthy of bearing the name of brutes.

JOHN BRIGGS,

Bridge Lodge,
Hurstpierpoint, Sussex.

Lieut.-General Madras Army.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—An announcement in your last number, p. 686, of the meditated mutiny of the 50th M.N.I., is totally without foundation, that regiment being, like all the Madras army, faithful, and forming a part of the movable column from the Bangalore force, under Maj.-General Whitlock, when last heard of at or near Kur-nool. In these troublous times, everyone at home is looking out for what is happening, or likely to befall those dear to them in India; and those who have relatives in the 50th regiment may be distressed at this report. There is no account from Madras of such disaffection having been contemplated by any Madras corps at Nagpore.

MADRASSEE.

SCIENTIFIC MISSION TO INDIA.

An important paper has just been read to the Academy of Sciences on a mission sent to India and Upper Asia, in 1854, by the King of Prussia and the East-India Company. The members of the mission consisted of three brothers, MM. Herrmann, Adolphus, and Robert Schlagentweit, two of whom, MM. Herrmann and Robert, returned in June last; the third, M. Adolphus, is still among the Himalaya mountains, and is expected soon to return, via the Punjab and Bombay. During the winter of 1854-55, these enterprising travellers visited the region lying between Bombay and Madras; in the following summer M. Herrmann explored the eastern parts of the Himalaya, the Sikkim, Bhootan, and Kossia mountains, where he measured the altitudes of several peaks. The highest of all the summits known throughout the world appears, by his measurements, to be the Gahoorishanka, situated in the eastern portion of Nepaul,—the same announced as such by Col. Waugh, but called by him Mount Everest, because he had been unable to ascertain its real name in the plains of Hindostan, where he effected his measurement. This peak is somewhat more than 29,000 English feet in height, and bears another name in Thibet, where it is called Chingopamari. The other two brothers, MM. Adolphus and Robert, penetrated by different roads into the central parts of the Himalaya, Kumaon, and Gur-wahl; they then visited Thibet in disguise, entered the great commercial station of Gartok, explored the environs of Lake Mansarowr, and that remarkable crest which separates the waters of the Indus from those of the Dihong, often erroneously called the Barrampooter. They ascended the Ibi-Gamine, 22,260 feet in height, that being an altitude never before attained in any part of the world. After having been separated from each other for a space of fourteen months, during which M. Robert ascertained that the tableland of Amarkantak, in Central India, which is generally stated to be 8,000 feet above the level of the sea, is not more than 3,300 feet in height, the three brothers again met at Simla, previous to commencing the operations intended for the summer of 1856. M. Adolphus, on leaving that place, crossed the Himalaya, went over Thibet, Baltistan, and visited the interesting spot where several mountain crests meet, and the Hindoo Koosh joins the range lying to the north of India. He then returned to the Punjab through the valley of Cashmere. MM. Herrmann and Robert proceeded to Ladak by different routes. Under good disguises, they were enabled to penetrate into Turkistan proper by crossing the Karakorum and the Kuenlueu mountains and descending into the great valley of Yarkand, a region never visited before, not even by Marco Polo. It is a vast depression of between 3,000 and 4,000 feet, separating the Kuenlueu, on the northern frontier of India, from the Syan-Chane, or mountains of Central Asia, on the southern border of Russia. They then returned to Ladak, and entered the Punjab by different routes through Cashmere. After a two years' negotiation M. Herrmann was, at the commencement of 1857, admitted into Nepaul, where he determined the altitudes of the Machipoora and Mount Yassa, which have hitherto been vaguely called the Dhawalagery, which means nothing else but “snowy crests,” and is applicable to all snow-capped mountains. M. Robert proceeded to Bombay through Scinde, Kutch, and Guzerat, where he surveyed the chain called the Salt Range, and determined the changes effected in the course of centuries in the course of several rivers. Before returning to Europe he stayed three months in Ceylon. M. Adolphus visited various parts of the Punjab and Cabul, previous to returning to the Himalaya, where he still is. The chief results obtained from this careful exploration of Asia are the following:—The Himalaya mountains everywhere exercise a decided influence over all the elements of the magnetic force; the declination everywhere presents a slight deviation, causing the needle to converge towards the central parts of that enormous mass, and the magnetic intensity is greater than it would be anywhere else under an equal latitude. In the south of India, the increase of the magnetic intensity from south to north is extremely rapid. The lines of equal magnetic intensity have a remarkable form, similar and perhaps parallel to those of certain groups of isothermal lines. The three travellers have collected all the materials necessary to ascertain this important fact. Irregular local variations in terrestrial magnetism are rare in those regions. In the Deccan and Behar the rocks are magnetic. On the Himalaya, at altitudes of 17,000, and even 20,000 feet, the daily maximum and minimum variations of the barometer occurred nearly about the same hours as in the plains below. Again, at the above altitudes, the inversion of the curves of daily variation which is met with on the Alps does not take place. At the altitude of 17,000 feet the diminution of transparency produced by a stratum of air of the thickness of 3,000 feet is no longer distinguishable by the eye. During the dust storms which frequently occur in India the disk of the sun is seen of a blue colour; if small bodies are made to project their shadows on a white surface under such circumstances the shadow is of an orange colour—that is, complementary to blue. The transparency of the waters of the Ganges, the Burampooter, and the Indus was tested by letting down a stone into them, which generally became invisible at a depth of from 12 to 15 centimetres (5 to 6 inches), showing that they are overcharged with earthy particles, for in the sea near Corfu a stone is visible to the depth of 50 feet, and in the seas under the tropics it remains visible at a depth of 30 feet.

RED SEA TELEGRAPH LINE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—In reference to the letter of your correspondent in Turkey which appeared in the Times of the 20th inst., on the subject of the proposed telegraph to India through Asia Minor, it may be satisfactory to the public to learn that whatever difficulties may prevent or retard the construction of that line, it is not probable that the establishment of telegraphic communication with our Indian empire will be much longer delayed.

The directors of the Red Sea Telegraph Company are, and have been for some time, prepared to proceed at once with the important work they have undertaken, and await only a favourable reply to the proposals they have made to the East-India Company and her Majesty's Government, upon whose decision the solution of this great question depends.

All the preliminary arrangements have been completed.

Firman from the Ottoman and Egyptian Governments, granting exclusive privileges during construction through their respective dominions, have been secured to the company.

These firmans apply not only to the line from Alexandria to India, but include a connexion with the European system of telegraphs in the Mediterranean.

Estimates have been obtained for the manufacture and laying of the cable, which will be undertaken by responsible contractors at their own risk.

The Admiralty, at the solicitation of the company, have ordered her Majesty's ship Cyclops to proceed without delay to the Red Sea for the purpose of taking the necessary soundings.

Every objection which has been raised as to the practicability of laying a submarine cable in the Red Sea has been thoroughly sifted, and the difficulties suggested from the existence of coral rocks and the supposed depth of the water have been completely set at rest by the opinions of Sir Francis Beaufort, Capt. Becher, R.N., Capt. Harris, Mr. Knight, and other unexceptionable naval and scientific authorities.

It may appear at first sight that in the terms they propose—viz., an unconditional guarantee on the whole capital as paid up—the directors are calling upon the East-India Company and the Government to assume an unwarrantable degree of responsibility; but upon further consideration it will be found that the risk actually to be incurred is infinitely small when compared with the vast importance of the object to be achieved. No section of the line will exceed 500 miles in length, and the loss arising from any unforeseen accident will therefore be limited to that extent of cable.

This risk the contractors, as before stated, are prepared to undertake; and, as an additional security, there can be no question that, after the first section (of 260 miles) is finished, the remainder can be successively insured by underwriting in the usual way.

There is no reason to doubt that the Government is prepared to extend a cordial support to this company, with whom its negotiations have been hitherto conducted, by the concession of such terms as may appear to the best commercial authorities to be indispensable for raising the required capital, and thus insure the establishment of telegraphic communication between this country and India within the shortest possible period.

I remain, Sir, your obedient Servant,

C. L. PEEL, Secretary Red Sea Telegraph Company.
Red Sea Telegraph Company (Limited),

THE LATE SIR HENRY LAWRENCE.

(From the London Gazette of Tuesday, October 27.)

India Board, Oct. 24.

The following despatch has been received at the East India-house:—

"THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL TO THE COURT OF DIRECTORS OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY.

(Extract.)

"Fort William, Sept. 9.

"We have the honour to forward for your information the accompanying copy of a minute recorded by the Governor-General relative to the death of Sir Henry Lawrence, the appointment of General Sir James Outram to the united command of all the troops in the Dinapore and Cawnpore divisions, and his reappointment as Chief Commissioner in Oude.

"MINUTE BY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA, SEPT. 8.

"Recently the Government availed itself of Major-General Outram's presence in Calcutta to appoint him to the united command of all the troops in the Dinapore and Cawnpore divisions.

"Major-General Outram is now approaching Cawnpore. He will accompany the reinforced column of Brigadier-General Havelock in its advance upon Lucknow, and, as circumstances may arise calling for the exercise of civil and political authority on Major-General Outram's part within the province of Oude, it becomes necessary for me to place on record the determination which was formed by the Government some time ago of reappointing Major-General Outram for the present to the post of Chief Commissioner in Oude, vacated by the lamented death of Sir Henry Lawrence, K.C.B.

"I beg to submit this proposal for the concurrence of my colleagues.

"Although intelligence of Sir H. Lawrence's death reached the Government long ago, no official announcement of this sad event and none of the particulars connected with it, were received until some time after the first reports; and the details are not even now very fully known.

"A wound received while leading an attack on the 2nd of July against the insurgents, and believed to have been slight in itself, but acting doubtless on a constitution impaired by protracted labours in an exhausting climate, and on a frame weakened by the unusual fatigues, anxieties, and responsibilities of the preceding month, sufficed to close the career of one of the most valued and best-loved men whom India has counted among her servants and benefactors.

"In the course of his service, extending over 35 years, in Burmah, in Afghanistan, in Nepal, in the Punjab, and in Rajpootana, Sir Henry Lawrence was distinguished for eminent ability, devoted zeal, and generous and self-denying exertions for the welfare of the people among whom he was placed. As a soldier, an administrator, and a statesman he has deservedly earned an exalted reputation among the foremost, and has been an honour to the Government he served.

"Impressed with a sense of his great qualifications, I selected him to be Chief Commissioner in the province of Oude. In that position, from the first appearance of disaffection among the troops quartered in the province, his conduct of affairs was marked by foresight, calm judgment, and courage. If anything could have averted the calamitous outbreak which has been followed by the temporary subversion of our authority in Oude, I believe that the measures which were taken by Sir Henry Lawrence, and the confidence which all men, high and low, native and European, felt in his energy, his wisdom, and his spirit of justice and kindness would have accomplished that end. As long as there was any hope of restraining the wavering soldiery by appeals to their sense of duty and honour he left no becoming means untried to conciliate them. When violent and open mutiny called for stern retribution he did not shrink from the (to him) uncongenial task of inflicting severe punishment. When general disorder and armed rebellion threatened he was undaunted, and completed rapidly and effectively the precautionary preparations which from the beginning he had had in view: and, though he has been prematurely removed from the scene, it is due mainly to his exertions, judgment, and professional skill that the Lucknow garrison has been able to defy the assaults of its assailants, and still maintains its ground.

"There is not, I am sure, an Englishman in India who does not regard the loss of Sir Henry Lawrence in the present circumstances of the country as one of the heaviest of public calamities.

"There is not, I believe, a native of the provinces where he has held authority who will not remember his name as that of a friend and generous benefactor to the races of India.

"For myself, short as has been my personal intercourse with that distinguished man, it is a grateful, though a mournful duty to record my appreciation of his eminent services to this Government, my admiration of his high character, and my affectionate respect for his memory.

"CANNING."

GENERAL HAVELOCK.—"Old Philos" (says the Athenæum) is a name which, we are sure, must be now making the hearts of old Carthusians dance with pride and delight. The Charter-house has boasted of many scholars who have sprung into eminent men; among others, Crashaw, the poet; Addison and Steele, the essayists; John Wesley, the religious reformer; and Lord Ellenborough, the Lord Chief Justice. To the list will surely be added "Old Philos." The pet name will be remembered by Carthusians whose memories can go back some forty years or more. They will not have forgotten the gentle and thoughtful lad who used to stand looking on while others played, and whose general meditative manner procured for him the name of "Philosopher," subsequently diminished to "Philos," and occasionally applied as "Old Philos." That young and popular philosopher is the soldier at whose name the hearts of Englishmen beat with honest pride. "Old Philos" of the Charter-house is Havelock, the hero of Cawnpore.

THE SIAMESE AMBASSADORS.—We learn from our Malta correspondent (says the Times) that among the passengers on board her Majesty's despatch steamer Caradoc, which arrived at Malta on the 8th ult., were the three Siamese ambassadors—Phgor Montri Suriyongsi, Chamun Sulbedh Chaiti, and Chamun Mix Dir Bidacks—accompanied by a numerous suite. Upon their arrival, they were saluted by H.M.'s ship Hibernia and afterwards by Fort St. Angelo. They were received at the palace by his Exc. the Governor, Sir William Reid, and Rear-Admiral Sir Montagu Stopford, with their respective staffs. Their Excellencies took up their abode at the Imperial Hotel, much, it is said, to their dissatisfaction, as they expected they would have been the guests, according to the custom of their country, of the Governor. In the evening, attended by Commander Clavering, R.N., of the Caradoc, they were present in the Governor's box at the Opera, where the richness and novelty of their costume attracted much attention, and on the following morning Lieutenant-General Sir John Pennefather had the troops out in review order on the Floriana parade-ground, in honour of their arrival. Their Excellencies were to leave Malta by the Caradoc for England direct on the 10th or 11th. They eat freely of game, poultry, pork, and curry of the very hottest at every meal. They drink moderately of brandy, wine, champagne, and pale ale. They are very fond of tea, which they drink at every meal, and all day long, without milk. They eat no pastry or sweets. Eight of the principal members of the embassy dine together; the others, excepting servants, have a separate table, and pay great respect and homage whenever they address one of the superior eight. They are very cleanly, and all make a point of bathing every day. Their teeth are black from the use of the betel-nut. They have all sorts of European articles for ordinary purposes. They have splendid presents on board for her Majesty, among them two crowns and a lady's saddle enriched with diamonds, rubies, and other precious stones, spears with gold heads, &c. They have also 50,000*l.* in dollars on board, besides bars of gold, so they are tolerably well provided. Their dress is very splendid—a rich tunic with a belt of gold clasped in front with a buckle ornamented with diamonds and rubies; loose trousers, and small richly-ornamented skull-cap, with a spire running from the top.

INDIAN PAMPHLETS.

India and its Army. By the Rev. G. R. GLEIG, M.A., Chaplain-General to H.M.'s Forces. Longman and Co.

THIS essay is a reprint from the Edinburgh Review, No. xcvi., and is not unworthy of being a second time presented to the notice of the public. It would be almost impossible for a writer of Mr. Gleig's varied church militant experience to publish anything that would not command the attention of thoughtful readers, even though they might not be prepared to coincide with all his views. In the pamphlet now lying before us several suggestions occur well deserving a passing notice, though it cannot be said that they evince any extraordinary degree of originality or depth. The first point on which we would join issue with the reverend reviewer, is the assertion that under the Mahomedan rulers the Hindoos enjoyed a more genuine tolerance than under the British sway. Has Mr. Gleig never read how Aurungzebe compelled thousands of Hindoos to lose caste and submit to the outward and visible sign of Islam? Has he never heard that the descendants of these involuntary converts continue at the present day to inhabit certain villages near Delhi, in which their ancestors were located? Tolerance of this kind is certainly unknown under the British Government. We agree with him, however, in regretting the degradation to which the native aristocracy have been reduced. If it be true that the natives are unfit to hold office, it can only be owing to the treatment to which the gentry have been subjected. In the words of Sir C. Metcalfe, quoted by the Reviewer:—

"The main evil of our system is the degraded state in which we hold the natives. We suppose them to be superstitious, ignorant, prone to falsehood, and corrupt. In our well-meaning zeal for their welfare, we shudder at the idea of committing to men so depraved any share in the administration of their own country. We exclude them from every situation of trust and emolument; we confine them to the lowest offices, with scarcely a bare subsistence; and even these are left in their hands from necessity, because Europeans are utterly incapable of filling them. We treat them as an inferior race of beings. Men, who under a native government might have held the first dignities of the state, who, but for us, might have been governors of provinces, are regarded as little better than menial servants, are often no better paid, and scarcely permitted to sit in our presence. We reduce them to this abject state, and then look upon them with disdain as men unworthy of high station."

The Saxons in our own country never ceased to plot and rebel until they were recognised as eligible to office.

We are painfully surprised, however, that a writer of Mr. Gleig's abilities and knowledge should condescend to repeat the silly and vulgar sarcasm that 120 millions of men are governed by a few thousands of pale-paces, "whom we appoint to plunder while they profess to govern and protect." Does he mean seriously to utter this insult against the honourable and true-hearted English gentlemen who constitute the civil and military services of the East-India Company, and allege that they are mere plunderers and extortioners? And he calls this, "a fact!" It is, in truth, as much a fact as another of his assertions, that "our frontiers now touch, wherever they touch any neighbours at all, upon tribes fiercer, more warlike, and more jealous of our encroachments than any with whom we have as yet had to deal." Are the Khyberees and the Momunds really more formidable than the Sikhs and the Scindians? Another assertion, made in 1853, is, that if the native regiments were "merely to disband themselves and return to their homes, our hold upon the country would not continue three months. And this once lost, not all the available resources of England, were they turned exclusively to that one object, would suffice to recover it." Tolerably conclusive evidence to the contrary will, we believe, be shortly obtainable.

Mr. Gleig is more at home when he treats of the discipline and uniform of the sepoys. He justly condemns the seniority system of promotion, and the absurdity of arming a native soldier with weapons which a stalwart British grenadier is scarcely able to wield. Equally sensible is his advice to fall back, in some respects, on the early usages of the Anglo-Indian army. For instance, in former times the young cadet learned the rudiments of his profession with an English corps, and was posted to a native regiment only when his awkwardness could no longer excite the derision of those who were supposed to look up to and revere him. The native officers, too, are no longer what they were. In the olden times they were landed proprietors, who brought with them their own retainers, men of all castes or no caste. "Off duty, the Brahman or Rajpoot could not come in contact with the Sudra, far less touch the Pariah, or eat of food which he had dressed; on duty, they rubbed shoulders freely, and were honestly attached to one another. In fact, to use the words of General Briggs, the native army 'consisted then of two classes, of which all armies, to be effective, must be and have been composed—one class derived from the better order of society, accustomed to command the services of domestics and underlings; and the other class drawn from the lowest grades, who are from infancy habituated to obedience, and taught to respect the upper class on whom they are dependent.'" Unhappily, all this has been "improved upon," and the consequence is, an army in a high state of—mutiny.

A Few Words about India and the Indian Mutinies. By the Rev. A. C. AINSLIE, M.A. Longman and Co.

A FEW words, but to the purpose. Mr. Ainslie has briefly and succinctly drawn up a sketch of the Indian question, for the benefit of his parishioners in the first instance. He has rightly judged, however, in supposing that a lucid exposition of the case might be useful to others also. Unlike the majority of English writers on India, he has been guilty of but one error, and that simply in placing Meerut some eight miles nearer to Delhi than appears by the mile-stones.

The Indus Flotilla. By W. P. ANDREW, F.R.G.S. Second Edition. Wm. H. Allen and Co.

MR. ANDREW has made out a strong case in favour of his two-fold scheme for supplying the Punjab with river and rail transport. The natural productions of that province are already increasing every year, and need only the means of conveyance to be augmented to an immense amount. In the year 1843 the exports from Kurrachee were estimated at 1,010,000, the imports at 121,000. In 1854 the former had reached the considerable sum of 604,000, the latter of 629,000. But even this marvellous increase only feebly indicates the extent of the trade of which that port is susceptible, as the outlet of the Punjab and Scinde. The harbour is accessible at all times and tides for vessels of 800 tons burden, and sufficiently capacious to afford ample mooring room for at least twenty ships of that size, besides smaller craft in any number. It is proposed to construct a railway from this point to Hydrabad, a distance of little more than 100 miles, over a level country; and 30 miles from Hydrabad an extensive coal-field has been discovered. At that terminus the goods will be placed on board the flotilla, and in less than five days will reach Mooltan, after a voyage of 570 miles. This flotilla will consist of fifteen steamers fitted up for passengers and a certain quantity of cargo, and each towing two flat-bottomed barges. From Mooltan a railway will eventually be constructed to Lahore and Umritsur, over a singularly level tract of country, and another to Peshawur; though this, it is admitted, will encounter some engineering difficulties. In the mean time, Mr. Andrew has obtained the sanction of the Court of Directors for the construction of the line from Kurrachee to Hydrabad, and the organization of a steam flotilla on the Indus. The latter scheme, it appears, can be carried out with a capital of 250,000, the profits on which cannot fail to be enormous. The highest local authorities, Sir John Lawrence, Mr. Frere, Mr. Edgeworth, Colonels Turner, Napier, and Glasford, and Major Hamilton, all agree in declaring railroads and steamers to be the one thing needful for the development of the vast resources of the Punjab. That which has so long and so earnestly been desiderated, will now speedily be supplied through the initiative of the truly patriotic "Old Indian Postmaster."

A Glance at the Past and the Future, in connection with the Indian Revolt. By Maj.-Gen. H. T. TUCKER, C.B. Effingham Wilson.

A FEW hasty words exchanged by Agamemnon, king of men, and the swift-footed Achilles, furnished materials for an "Iliad," and the loss of eyesight developed the father of poetry. In like manner have the jealousies of a late Adjutant-General and a Military Secretary caused unnumbered woes to mankind, and produced a pamphlet. The patient Arab of olden times, as he sat scraping himself with a potsherd, contented himself with expressing a wish that his enemy would write a book. A splenetic Major-General of the present day does as the other would be done by, and writes a pamphlet for the satisfaction of his foe. His friends, at least, will certainly experience no more than that subdued delight which is afforded by the follies and misfortunes of our neighbours. After all, it is possible that Major-General H. T. Tucker, C.B., only intended to inform the world that he had been suffering from a derangement of the spleen, but unfortunately took for his model the popular advertisements of Professor Holloway. What better style could he adopt than that of a learned Professor, whose works are so justly esteemed in India? A few Latin quotations, apparently borrowed from Anglo-Indian journalists, have been judiciously interwoven; such as, usque ad nauseam, ex uno disce omnes, in extenso, sic volo, sic jubeo, ad captandum, &c.: there are yet other two, which will, no doubt, appear in good time,—experto crede, and fas est (et) ab hoste doceri. General Tucker commences his pamphlet by quoting from a circular drawn up by himself a few years ago, when he proposed to stand for the Direction, and which is now adduced to prove that there is an avatar of King Solomon existing in the midst of us at the present moment. A friendly offer of assistance from Lord Dalhousie is mentioned, apparently with a view to excuse the disparaging remarks that are subsequently made upon that able statesman. And a brief note from Sir Charles Napier is brought forward in evidence that the late Adjutant-General of the Army in Bengal obtained that appointment solely on the ground of merit. Under all these circumstances, we are imperatively called upon to do something more than merely turn over the pages illumined by the experience of so great a man. In the first place, we learn that the civil service has greatly deteriorated, that it is puffed up with self-complacency, and that it is a clique; but that nevertheless it is “composed generally of a most zealous and admirable body of men.” The General would therefore remodel it, and approves of its being thrown open to competition. The theory is excellent; but how has it worked hitherto? Under the old system, young men were regularly educated for the service; they inherited the traditions of their forefathers, and thus formed a sort of aristocracy, of the duties of which they were more proud than of the privileges. They also acquired an esprit de corps, and made private friendships which afterwards materially aided them in the discharge of their professional functions. There were not many brilliant scholars among them, not many poets, not many novelists, but there were very many upright, high-minded, brave, manly English gentlemen, who were equally ready to plod through the ravelled web of Indian cunning, or to spring into the saddle and chase the armed marauder from his lair. One comparison of the fruits of the two systems has already been furnished. The most distinguished of all who have entered the service by the competitive system fled from his post, lamenting the loss of his purring cat and cooing doves; while an ordinary member of the old service rallied a handful of men, and safely conveyed a valuable treasure to the Presidency. The Bengal army has likewise been very defective for many years—during some of which General Tucker was nominally Adjutant-General, but virtually Commander-in-Chief. He informs us that he sent in for Lord Dalhousie's consideration “various elaborate memoranda,” suggesting “changes and amendments in the system.” Now, though we may accept the General's testimony as to the suggestion of changes, it does not follow that these changes were amendments; indeed, he himself says “changes and amendments.” It is not therefore quite certain that the Governor-General was much to blame for not acting upon these elaborate memoranda.

General Tucker appears to be of opinion that the annexation of Oude was the chief cause of the mutiny in Bengal, and somehow omits to mention his own notorious General Service Order as having exercised any effect in alienating the native troops. By a similar oversight—after parenthetically remarking that his friend and well-wisher, Lord Dalhousie, was not a man of genius—he allows his reader to suppose that his lordship was answerable for the denuded state of the province of Oude at the commencement of the present year. It is strange that he nowhere has a word to say against Sir William Gomm's habitual residence in the hills, though he sneers at General Anson for “betaking himself to Simlah.” Sir William remained up there throughout the second Burmese war, and we presume it was at that pleasant sanatorium that the “elaborate memoranda” were concocted. But there is one man far worse, far more culpable, than all the others put together. That monster is the present military Secretary to Government, who, only the other day, presumed to set the late Adjutant-General right upon a matter of fact. The present Governor-General, however, is not much better, for he declined to be guided and controlled by an irresponsible and terrified body of merchants, and preferred to consult his constitutional advisers. Things would never have come to such a pass had there been a Bengal military officer—General Tucker, for instance—in the Court of Directors. That, indeed, was a fatal omission. But what shall we say of “an officer and a gentleman” who can lower himself so far as to pen the following insinuation against a nobleman of unblemished character, his own kind friend to boot? After recommending the “discontinuance of the practice (and it is not a practice) of bestowing upon Governors-General pensions of 5,000*l.* per annum,” he thus proceeds:—

“That system is of the ‘springes to catch woodcock’ order; and but for the desire it has generated to conciliate the Court of Directors, a more just, equitable, and generous policy would often have been pursued, while the community, native and European, might possibly not have been outraged by the recent five per cent.

‘swindle.’” There is one passage, however, still more revolting. This lofty-minded gentleman sneers at the Military Secretary because, although he receives 5,000*l.* per annum of the public money, he provided for the safety of his wife by placing her in Fort William on the night of the panic. Ought he, then, to have armed her with a cutlass and a brace of pistols, and bid her defend herself, or would he have been better prepared to discharge his own duties while conscious that the partner of his life was left without protection in the midst of a rebellious and blood-thirsty population? It is an unmanly, an unfeeling, but fortunately a pointless sarcasm, and injures only him who could stoop to employ it.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST NEWSPAPER PUBLISHED IN LONDON FOR DESPATCH TO INDIA AND THE EAST.

Thirty-two pages folio, with Supplements when necessary,
PRICE SIXPENCE.

THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS,
FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES;

A fortnightly Summary of British and Foreign Intelligence, published on the 10th and 26th of each month, in time for despatch to India via Marseilles.

One uniform system is preserved throughout the Paper, and the information is so epitomized and arranged as to present a perfect and comprehensive view of the history of the fortnight, with special reference to those subjects most interesting to Anglo-Indians.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE CALCUTTA "ENGLISHMAN."

"Pains have been taken with the arrangement. It is evidently got up with a knowledge of what information Indian readers require, and will therefore, we expect, soon attain a considerable circulation."

THE CALCUTTA "DAILY NEWS."

"Fully bears out the assurance given in the prospectus that it should 'be all that the Overland Papers are, and something more.' We do not think that a single item of news or fact of interest which had transpired during the fortnight can possibly have been omitted, and the power of condensation displayed in this Paper is much beyond what we had expected."

"THE MOFUSSILITE."

"It is well written, and carefully compiled. It is not so diffuse in its information as the 'Home News,' and does not reprint long articles from the London journals; but it will probably not be the less acceptable on this account to a large portion of the public."

"BENGAL HURKARU."

"We gladly pronounce this first number an extremely good one, and we think the periodical is full of promise of something still better. The Editor has contrived to condense into a comparatively small space a vast quantity of miscellaneous information, of a character interesting to his readers here. This superior condensation of his materials is perhaps the leading character of the Newspaper,—and a very important one it is, especially for those Indian readers who may receive this one London Paper only."

Orders to be addressed to Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., 87, Newgate Street, London; Messrs. THACKER, SPINK, and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Calcutta; Messrs. THACKER and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Bombay; and Mr. JAMES HILL, Lucknow.

ADVICE TO OFFICERS IN INDIA.

By JOHN McCOSH,

Late Bengal Medical Establishment.

London: WM. H. ALLEN and Co., 7, Leadenhall Street.

Allen's Maps of India & China.

MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorate, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP OF INDIA;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

MAP OF INDIA:

From the most recent Authorities. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

MAP OF THE

ROUTES IN INDIA;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A MAP OF THE

WESTERN PROVINCES OF HINDOOSTAN;

THE PUNJAB, CABOOL, SINDE, BHAWULPORE, &c.

INCLUDING ALL THE STATES BETWEEN CANDAHAR AND ALLAHABAD.

CHAPPELL, 333, STRAND, LONDON, BOOT-MAKER, and Professor of Fitting; begs to call attention to his method of measuring, by which he guarantees to produce a PERFECT FIT AT FIRST TRIAL, combining comfort with the most gentlemanly form. J. C. particularly solicits those gentlemen on whom other Bootmakers have practiced unsuccessfully, being assured of their becoming regular customers. The leather used is particularly adapted for Warm Climates. Ladies' Boots and Shoes are kept in stock in every variety for the convenience of immediate wants. Established 1825.

TO LATE RESIDENTS IN INDIA.—TRUE

MAURAS CURRY, and MULLIGATAWNEY PASTE and CHUTNIES.—Messrs. BARRIE and Co., Vepery, Madras, to enable their old correspondents returning from India to continue the use of the celebrated Condiments, have made arrangements to forward regular supplies of the above, packed in glass jars for family use, at 1s. 9d. and upwards, which may be had of CROSSE and BLACKWELL, Purveyors to Her Majesty, 21, St. John's Square; FORTNUM, MASON, and Co., Piccadilly; and of the principal Sauce Vendors throughout the kingdom. Each bottle is labelled, and BARRIE and Co., Madras, stamped on the glass.

PAYNE'S INDIAN CURRY POWDER, unequalled for its delicious flavour and stimulating qualities, 1 lb. bottles, 3s. 6d.; 7 for 21s. Curry and Mulligatawney Paste—1 lb. jars, 3s. 6d.; 7 for 21s. The following Condiments and Preserves are imported direct, and strongly recommended:—Indian Curry Sauce and Tapanian Sauce, Fine Pickled Mangoes, Tamarind Fish, Nepal Chilly, Green Mango Chutney, Bengal Club, Cashmere, Delhi, and Oselle. Preserved Mango, Golden Apple, Limes, Green Sweetmeats.—PAYNE and SONS, Foreign Warehouse, 348, Regent Street, and 46, Mortimer Street, London.

“INDIAN BAE,” for Diarrhoea, Dysentery, whether acute or chronic.

J. G. GOULD begs to inform Livers and others suffering from the above complaints, that he has just received a large importation of the above article. It is now being recommended by many of the first medical practitioners in town and country, and the benefit derived from it has been truly astonishing. Pamphlets descriptive of its use, post-free, on application to the Importer.—J. G. GOULD, 195, Oxford Street, corner of Orchard Street, Portman Square, London.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AN INDISPUTABLE REMEDY for the cure of Coughs, Colds, &c., so prevalent at this season. The cause of half the disease to which suffering humanity is liable is the incorrect mode of treating the human system when attacked with the above complaints, which lead ultimately to the most direful results; by persevering in the use of Holloway's Pills all these symptoms are quickly eradicated, the tone of the stomach is strengthened, and the whole of the morbid matter which nature finds injurious is very quickly thrown out.

Sold by all Medicine Vendors throughout the World; at Professor Holloway's Establishments, 244, Strand, London, and 89, Maiden Lane, New York; by A. Stempa, Constantinople; A. Guidici, Smyrna; E. Muir, Malta; and by all European and Native Vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

SIR JAMES MURRAY'S FLUID MAGNESIA.

Prepared under the immediate care of the Inventor, and established for upwards of thirty years by the PROFESSION, for removing BILE, ACIDITIES, and INDIGESTION, restoring APPETITE, preserving an moderate state of the bowels, and dissolving uric acid in GRAVEL and GOUT; also as an easy remedy for SEA SICKNESS, and for the febrile affection incident to childhood, it is invaluable.—On the value of Magnesia as a remedial agent it is unnecessary to enlarge; but the Fluid Preparation of Sir James Murray is now the most valued by the Profession, as it entirely avoids the possibility of those dangerous concretions usually resulting from the use of the article in powder.

Sold by the sole consignors, Messrs. BAILEY and WILLS, of Horsley Fields Chemical Works, Wolverhampton, and by all wholesale and retail Druggists and Medicine Agents throughout the British Empire, in bottles, 1s., 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 11s., and 21s. each.

67 The Acidulated Syrup in bottles 2s. each.

N.B.—Be sure to ask for “Sir James Murray's Preparation,” and to see that his name is stamped on each label, IN GREEN INK, as follows:—“James Murray, Physician to the Lord Lieutenant.”

ELEGANT PERSONAL REQUISITES.

Under the Patronage of Royalty and the Aristocracy throughout Europe, and universally preferred and esteemed.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.—The successful

results of the last HALF CENTURY have proved beyond question that this unique discovery possesses peculiarly nourishing powers in the growth, restoration, and improvement of the human hair. In the growth of the beard, whiskers, eyebrows, and moustachios, it is unfailing in its stimulative operation. Price 3s. 6d., 7s., or family bottles (equal to four small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR—An Oriental botanical preparation of unfailing efficacy in thoroughly purifying the skin from all pimples, spots, redness, freckles, tan, and discoloration, in producing a healthy freshness and transparency of complexion, and a softness and delicacy of the skin. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE.—A white powder, prepared from Oriental herbs, and of inestimable value in preserving and beautifying the teeth, strengthening the gums, and in giving sweetness and perfume to the breath. Price 2s. 9d. per box.

CAUTION.—The name “Rowlands” precedes that of the article on the Wrapper or Label of each.

Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

IMPORTANT WORKS ON INDIA.

In One large Volume, with Map, price £1. 1s.,

MR. THORNTON'S GAZETTEER OF INDIA.

A GAZETTEER OF THE TERRITORIES UNDER THE GOVERNMENT OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY, AND OF THE NATIVE STATES ON THE CONTINENT OF INDIA.

By EDWARD THORNTON, Esq., Author of the "History of the British Empire in India."

The work has been compiled by the authority of the Court of Directors, and though comprised within a single volume, it will be found to contain the great mass of information comprehended in the four volumes of the "Gazetteer of India," published by the same author in 1854. This result has been obtained by retrenching some few redundancies, and by adopting an enlarged page and distributing the matter into two separate columns. By these means space has been also acquired for the insertion of much new matter, rendered necessary by the political and territorial changes which have more recently taken place within our Eastern Possessions.

On the character of the work a few remarks will be sufficient. Its chief objects are,—

1st. To fix the relative position of the various cities, towns, and villages with as much precision as possible, and to exhibit with the greatest practicable brevity all that is known respecting them; and 2ndly. To note the various countries, provinces, or territorial divisions, and to describe the physical characteristics of each, together with their statistical, social, and political circumstances.

To these are added minute descriptions of the principal rivers and chains of mountains; thus presenting to the reader, within a brief compass, a mass of information which can not otherwise be obtained, except from a multiplicity of volumes and manuscript records. The volume, in short, may be regarded as an epitome of all that has yet been written and published respecting the territories under the government or political superintendence of the British power in India. Its merits have been frequently discussed in the General Courts of the East-India Company, where successive Chairmen have borne ample testimony to the utility of the publication, and where it has been characterized by the best-informed among the Proprietors as "a complete history of India, untainted in any degree by political bias."

THE MOST COMPLETE HISTORY OF INDIA.

HISTORY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA TO 1844.

Illustrated by Maps, showing the Possessions of the East-India Company at various periods. By EDWARD THORNTON, Esq. 6 vols. 8vo. cloth, £2s. 8s.

"Mr. Thornton is master of a style of great perspicuity and vigour, always interesting, and frequently rising into eloquence. His power of painting character, and of bringing before the eye of the reader the events which he relates, is remarkable; and if the knowledge of India can be made popular, we should say his is the pen to effect it."—Times.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE capture of Delhi and the relief of Lucknow constitute the burden of the intelligence received by the present Mail. In our last issue, indeed, we were able to announce that the British troops were in the heart of the imperial city, that the last representative of the dynasty of Timour had taken refuge in the tomb of the son of the mighty Baber, and that the mutineers were fleeing in hot haste from the blood-red hand of the avenger. It is now our gratifying task to confirm those agreeable tidings, and to add to their interest, though we are still left without any very detailed particulars of the two great feats of arms which have shed fresh lustre on our national renown. The assault was made on the 14th Sept. by three columns and a reserve, consisting of 2,000 Europeans and the same number of natives. As the breach was not accessible without scaling-ladders, it was determined also to blow open the Cashmere gate. That perilous duty devolved on Lieut. Salkeld, of the Engineers, and three sergeants carrying the powder-bags. The approach to the gate being commanded by many coils of musketry, one of the sergeants was quickly shot dead; but his comrades only pushed on the more rapidly. The officer was next hit in the arm; but the bags were made fast to the iron spikes on the gate. Lieut. Salkeld was then struck by a ball in the leg, and fell, and another sergeant was killed; the third, however, ignited the train, and the gate was blown open with a tremendous crash. The storming party then rushed in with a ringing cheer, that must have sounded as a death-knell to the mutineers, who defended themselves, however, with the courage of despair. The whole line of works from the Water bastion to the Cabul gate was won after a fierce struggle, and the setting sun that evening shone upon the British flag as it waved over the Cashmere gate. Head-quarters were established in Skinner's House, while the church, the college, and the premises of the Delhi Gazette, were occupied by the victorious troops. This success, however, had been dearly purchased. Eight officers and 60 European soldiers were killed; 34 officers and 200 men wounded; and nearly 400 native soldiers put hors de combat, though only 40 of these were killed.

On the 16th a breach was made in the wall of the magazine, through which our brave fellows dashed with such impetuosity that the enemy's artillerymen dropped their port-fires and fled without discharging a single gun : six heavy guns loaded with grape commanded the breach. On the following day the Bank, formerly the residence of the Begum Sumroo and her eccentric heir Mr. Dyce Sombre, fell into our hands, and the artillery was brought to bear on the bridge of boats and the palace. The next prize of arms was the Jumma Musjid, or principal mosque. The tide of victory now flowed on continuously, and on the evening of the 20th the entire city and its suburbs were in the undisputed possession of the British army. A frightful scene of carnage and desolation presented itself. Whole streets were little more than an unsightly mass of ruins. Shot and shell had done their work only too well. Dead bodies in every stage of corruption were lying about in all directions. No man with arms in his hands was now spared ; but no child was injured, no woman insulted. With rare forbearance the soldiers kept to their ranks, as if conscious of the gravity of their mission, as the ministers of justice and the vindicators of outraged humanity. The royal family endeavoured to escape by flight from the consequences of their treachery and black ingratitude, and sought an asylum in the tomb of Hoomayoon. Here they were discovered and made prisoners by Captain Hodson, who caused the king's sons, Mirza Moghul and Mirza Kheysur Sultan, and his grandson Aboo Bukker, to be shot upon the spot ; and their dead bodies were exposed at the Kotwalee, or Mayor's Court, to the public gaze. The nonagenarian king and his chief wife, the Begum Zenat Mehal, were spared, on account of their age and their impotence to work further evil. His palace had passed away for ever from his degraded family, and in his Hall of Audience—the Dewan Khas, famous throughout the world as “a paradise on earth”—the Feringhee conqueror drank to the health of the Queen of Great Britain, amid loud and prolonged cheering, which was taken up again and again by the brave little Ghoorkas outside the building. The victory was complete, but our losses were very heavy. Before Delhi had reverted to its former masters, upwards of eleven hundred gallant fellows were killed or wounded ; and of these more than sixty were officers. Indeed, the shout of triumph too quickly subsided into wailing ; for one of the best and bravest of our heroes had perished. General John Nicholson sunk under his wounds on the 23rd, and closed his noble career at the early age of thirty-four. Though he died too soon for his country and his friends, his name will live forever in the annals of Indian warfare, a beacon-light to future generations.

But notwithstanding the fall of the rebels' stronghold, there was still much to be done. Two movable columns were therefore organized without delay to follow up the retreating enemy. One of these, consisting of 1,600 infantry, 500 cavalry, three troops of horse-artillery, and eighteen guns, under Colonel Greathed, of H.M.'s 84th, came up with the Jhansi rebels at Bolundshulur. A severe action ensued, which resulted in the total rout of the enemy, with the loss of two guns, two ammunition-waggons, a vast number of bullock-carts loaded with small-arm ammunition, and a hundred men killed. Our own casualties amounted to sixty, including Captain Best, 8th cavalry, Lieut. Sarel and Cornet Blair, 9th lancers, and Lieut. Edgeworth, severely wounded. On the following day, Colonel Greathed took possession of the abandoned fort of Malaghur, whilom the seat of the rebel chief Walee Dood Khan. Nor had the other column been idle. On that same day, September 28th, it overtook the mutineers at Muttra, and inflicted severe chastisement. It is sad to state that General Wilson has been compelled by ill health to pause in his brilliant career, and to hand over the command to Brigadier Penny, an approved and gallant veteran.

In the mean time a great achievement had been accomplished elsewhere. On the 16th of September, a bridge of boats was begun to be thrown across the Ganges at Cawnpore, and on the 19th, General Havelock's whole force, consisting of 2,700 men and seventeen guns, once more entered the Oude territory. In a skirmish which ensued, the enemy lost two guns, and retreated in haste. Two days afterwards, the British force captured five field-pieces and two battery-guns, at a village called Mungarwar. Two of the light pieces were taken by a brilliant charge of the Volunteer cavalry, led on by Sir James Outram in person. On neither side was there much loss of life, but upwards of a hundred of the enemy were sabred in their flight from the field. On that and the following day our troops pushed on by forced marches ; and on the morning of the 25th the relieving army hewed their way through the opposing masses of the insurgents, and that same evening entered the Residency. A delay of only a few hours would have rendered all their labours barren, and torn the prize from their grasp. Two mines had been driven beneath the defences, and so soon as the powder had been placed, the fate of the long-beleaguered garrison would have been sealed. But although the Residency had been reached, it was still necessary to dislodge the enemy from various positions, from which he continued to fire upon the relieved and the relievers. A series of intrenched batteries had therefore to be stormed in succession, which was only effected by the loss of seven officers killed, and upwards of 400 men and officers disabled. In fact, Sir James Outram, who has now assumed the command of the Oude division, is himself surrounded by many thousands of armed rebels under the nominal command of Nana Sahib, who is said to have been wounded. Encumbered by a thousand women and children, and sick or wounded men, Sir James is in no condition to cut his way back to Cawnpore. Fortunately, reinforcements were arriving at that station at the rate of 100 men a day ; so that we may hope by the next mail to learn that a second brigade was ready to march to the relief of the relieving army. Movable columns from Delhi would also be advancing in that direction. Sir James Outram is said to have been slightly wounded, while the death of General Neill will be lamented as a national calamity.

The news from Saugor is by no means favourable. The fort contained above 600 souls, of whom more than one-half were women and children ; of the last, twelve had died during the three months of close confinement to which they had been subjected. A Madras column, which left Jubbulpore in July to relieve them, was forced to return without effecting their purpose. Being reinforced, however, they were again marching upon Saugor, and their advanced guard fell in with the mutineers of the 52nd N.I. near Jubbulpore, and killed 150 of them. In Rajpootana,

Brigadier Geo. Lawrence was still waiting for reinforcements. In Scinde the aspect of affairs was more tranquil, but in the Punjab the predatory tribes on the Gogaira had interrupted the communication between Mooltan and Lahore. They have since, however, been attacked by the mounted and foot police, and routed with considerable slaughter, their leader being among the slain. Scindiah's contingent was sullenly quiescent, being overawed by the Maharajah's new levies. In Oude, a Ghoorka force under Captain Boileau had killed 200 mutineers near Azimghur, which has been mainly held by the firmness of Mr. Venables, of the uncovenanted service. In the Bombay presidency an outbreak had taken place among the Bheels of Candeish, in the suppression of which, Lieutenant Henry, superintendent of police, had lost his life through his own rashness. In Bombay itself, some sepoy of the 10th N.I. have been convicted of conspiring against the state, and two of them blown away from guns, as a warning to the disaffected. Neither from Calcutta nor Madras is there any news of general interest,—not even a fresh attack upon Lord Canning.

Lord Elgin has arrived at Hong-Kong, to await his time. A Russian plenipotentiary has also made his appearance on the stage, and notified his mission to the court of Peking.

The troops sent out from England to India were beginning to arrive in the Indian waters; the Golden Fleece and others are reported as having reached Ceylon.

Letters from Myanong in Pegu mention that everything is going on in that quarter as favourably as possible; although emissaries from Bengal had gone to Ava there is a belief that there exists a much greater chance of the Golden Foot disclosing their intrigues than of his being misguided. Throughout Pegu crime is diminishing and cultivation increasing, and the attachment of the people to our rule fortifies us against any chance of rebellion or aggression in that quarter.

THE MUTINY.

AGRA.—The following interesting letter is dated Fort of Agra, Thursday, Sept. 17, 1857:—

"I last wrote you on the 13th, as I was about starting for Hattrass, from which place I have now returned, though I am going there again in all probability to-morrow. The country between this and Hattrass, twenty-eight miles, is perfectly quiet, and seems to be in a high state of cultivation, and the agricultural population are working in the fields as in ordinary times. Indigo was flourishing everywhere, and I saw it manufacturing in several places, besides the Hattrass factory, which is in full work. The inhabitants of the town of Hattrass are carrying on their business in peace and security, as are also, I understand, those of Allyghur. They are decidedly well disposed towards our raj, and the presence of Major Montgomery's force is considered the greatest of blessings.

"Mr. Cocks is administering the civil government of the district, and by all accounts does it thoroughly and to the extreme content of the innocent and the terror of evil-doers. He is a first-rate public officer. He and Major Montgomery work in unison, and both of them do their duty as it ought to be done in these times. The major is a plucky, energetic and active officer, not much troubled with fear of responsibility, and ready to go ahead whenever prudence does not imperatively forbid it. The officers and men like him exceedingly, and he certainly deserves their regard and confidence. I was very much pleased to see the perfect cordiality which existed in the little army, and if it goes again into action under Montgomery, as I expect it will do, the men will do even better than they did on the 24th ultimo, when poor Tandy was killed; for wherever Montgomery leads, they will follow as pleasantly as if he were inviting them to join him in turtle soup. He has three excellent subordinate officers in Strover and Blake, who each command a company of the 3rd Europeans, and Griffin, who commands the guns.

A small force of 50 of the 3rd Europeans, 50 militia infantry, 20 militia cavalry, and two guns, the whole under command of Capt. Ross, 3rd European regiment, with Girdlestone, Cosserat, Clark (Longueville's son), Walker, of artillery, and several other officers attached, went against an insurgent village ten miles off, yesterday, burnt it down, and the cavalry having captured a number of the inhabitants, Philipps, of the C.S., the magistrate of Agra, who was with the force, hanged two of the principal men with his own hands, and then, as the force was in a hurry to be off, he shot them both through the heart with his revolver; so that if they were cut down after his departure, it might not tend to their advantage. In these times no one is very particular about trifles of this description. Two young officers lately shot a Mahomedan apiece for scowling at them, and a court of inquiry justified them. We are making active preparations for defending ourselves from the Mhow and Gwalior mutineers should they venture this way, as many believe they really will do. Many of them with some guns have crossed the Chumbul, and are resting at Dholpore and Muttra, and unless Delhi falls in the mean time, I consider it extremely probable we shall be besieged after the Dusserah. However, no one needs fear for our safety. We can hold our own against 20,000 men, if they don't bring anything bigger than 18-pounders, and not more than half a dozen mortars. We are not strong enough, however, to make sullices, so an enemy will be able to take up any position he likes, and there are some very secure spots behind ravines on the road to cantonments, which no gun of ours could touch.

The fort is not healthy, and who can wonder, seeing that nearly 6,000 people are crowded together behind lofty walls and in a confined place. Numerous children have been carried off, and no less than 112 men of the 3rd European regiment (the total strength of which is not 650) are in hospital. The Rev. W. Glen, a Missionary, who was also Government translator, died yesterday evening of dysentery, which is the prevalent complaint.

AHMEDNUGGUR.—A large party of Bheels (about 300) assembled in the Hunmunt Ghaut hills, talooka Sinnur, zillah Ahmednuggur, for marauding purposes. They were attacked by a party of the Ahmednuggur police, under their superintendent, Captain Henry. The Bheels were defeated, but unfortunately Captain Henry was killed by a musket-ball through the head from the gang. Captain Henry was a most dashing officer, and the service has sustained a great loss by his untimely death. The Bheels have been dispersed, and active operations are in progress for their apprehension. The head-quarter wing of 26th regiment N.I. left Bombay by rail for Nassick and Sinnur, and a detachment of the Poona horse from Seroor has also been ordered into the disturbed district; but Lieutenant Carr, the assistant commissioner of police, with a strong party of the police, has already reached the scene of action and reports that the Bheels have been dispersed.

The following is the statement of Alexander Law Taylor, Esq., inspecting postmaster in the Deccan, regarding the fight with the Bheels, in front of the village of Nandoor Singoleh, on the 4th inst. :—

"On Friday, the 2nd, whilst at Sangamnair, on a tour of inspection, I heard that the Bheels had risen. The same evening I heard that Lieutenant Thatcher was in the neighbourhood, and went and joined him. I was present yesterday when Captain Henry arrived. I overheard their conversation, and, from the tenor, am of opinion that Captain Henry viewed the matter lightly. Lieutenant Thatcher, on the other hand, remonstrated, and said, he thought it not safe to attack with so few men. Captain Henry said the force was quite sufficient to take double the number of the enemy; that it was a pity they had not been attacked before; and that he would lay anything not a shot would be exchanged. I, too, asked Captain Henry whether he thought it judicious to attack with so few men such a difficult and strong position. He said, 'Yes, they will run like dogs.' Just before the assault, Lieutenant Thatcher again remonstrated, and proposed to attack by an easier ascent, and from one that afforded a more commanding position.

"When the assault took place, I was to the rear of the men, about their centre. I was about twenty yards from Captain Henry when he received his second wound. I ran up to him, and found him insensible. I gave him some water, which revived him. He opened his eyes, and said, 'I'm all right now. Forward!' I left him to follow up the attack, which was being led by Lieut. Thatcher, who was about fifty yards in front of me, with about twelve men.

"I perceived a flank movement of the enemy to cut off Lieut. Thatcher from where I was; I immediately despatched the russeldar, who was on foot, to warn him of his danger and beg of him to retreat, which he did, disputing every foot of ground, and exchanging shot for shot.

"After despatching the russeldar, I returned to Henry, and ordered him to be removed, which was done. As soon as he was moved, he put his hand to his chest, said he felt pain, and asked for water, which I gave him. I knew he was dying, put my ear to his mouth, and tried to catch the words he uttered, but could not. I fancied I heard him utter the name of some female, but could not catch it distinctly.

"About one-half of the armed police behaved right well, the remainder were below. When the order to charge was given, Henry and Thatcher raced with each other up the hill, cheering on the men. When the former was hit, the latter was almost touching him. There were in all four of our men wounded, two of whom fell by my side, severely wounded. There appeared to me between 450 and 500 of the enemy. The first volley fired was of a good fifty muskets. I counted only one of the enemy severely wounded; he had been hit by Thatcher. I can form no idea as to how many of the enemy were hit, as the wounded were dragged away. The enemy's position was completely carried. I have read Lieutenant Thatcher's statement, and most fully concur in the version he has given.

(Signed) "A. L. TAYLOR,

"Officiating inspecting postmaster, Deccan."

RESOLUTION OF GOVERNMENT.—"The Right Hon. the Governor in Council has received with the deepest regret the melancholy intelligence of the death of Lieut. Henry, the superintendent of police at Ahmednuggur.

This most able and gallant officer died in the zealous discharge of his duty. Undeterred by a severe wound which he received in leading on his men, he still advanced, and when prostrated by a second and mortal wound, his word to those who tendered to him their aid, was "Forward!" The fate of one so young, so gallant, so energetic, will be mourned by all the services, and it will especially be deplored by the Government, which Lieut. Henry served faithfully and devotedly.

The Right Hon. the Governor in Council directs that the thanks of Government be communicated to Lieut. Thatcher for the gallantry so conspicuously exhibited by him on this melancholy occasion.

The Right Hon. the Governor in Council also considers that Mr. Taylor, the inspecting postmaster in the Deccan, and Amut Buksh, russeldar of the Poona horse, are deserving of the high commendation of Government for their gallant conduct on the 4th inst."

A correspondent writes from Nassick on the 11th Oct. :—"The report here current in the bazaar, and amongst the most influential natives of the city, is, that Sinnur is surrounded by about 1,500 Bheels with matchlocks and swords, and their women armed with bows and arrows, and quite naked. Another body of them have taken up a position on the top of a higher hill than that at first occupied when Capt. Henry charged them, and about eight miles further on towards Bombay, or N.E. of the town of Sunnurnur. The few sowars and police that are at present in Sunnurnur are living inside the Mamlutdar's catcherry, and are, I believe, commanded by Captain Thatcher. It appears he deems it expedient to await the reinforcements from Bombay, which are expected daily, before making any attack. The neighbourhood there is far from being settled, as all the Buneas and other people of property have removed into Nassick; and even this is at present considered unsafe, as it is denuded of the force of police we had in it, except a few to guard the treasury. The Bheels of the town of Sinnur, before joining their comrades, set fire to their houses, and removed all their property. The villain heading these miscreants was, I hear, a naik in the Company's service, and was dismissed and imprisoned for two years, by the late Capt. Henry, for misconduct; and it is said that this is the very man who shot him. The bankers of Nassick have to a great degree suspended all money transactions.

AHMEDABAD, Oct. 10.—All quiet here. We have thirty-four mutineers in jail, and will, I fancy, polish them off in a few days. As yet only seventy-five men of H.M.'s 89th have arrived here. The roads are in an awful state betwixt this and Gogo. The detachment of the 83rd, which had been stationed here for some time past, has returned to Deesa, their services being much needed in Rajpootana.

AJMERE.—Letters of the 7th October, from Ajmere, report everything quiet and orderly in that neighbourhood. The conduct of the troops, native and European, both there and at Nusseerabad, continued most exemplary. The Bombay mail of the 26th Sept. had just arrived; and as it had taken eleven days outwards, and only a week to return, the rate of communication is improving.

We are indebted to a friend at Ajmere for the following news despatched thence on the 19th September:—"We are rather in a curious position here at present. We still keep on strengthening the magazine. All the carriages are run out of the gun-sheds, the powder removed from the magazines, and stored in the inner quadrangle, with the doors and windows all built up. The armoury windows and doors are also built up and loopholed, and the treasury we are busy making a complete solid of, for the purpose of mounting a 68-pounder upon it; so you see we are not going to give in, should the rascals favour us with a visit. We have also got ready for use at a moment's notice, with ammunition, &c., five 8-inch mortars, and two 5½ brass mortars, also one 12-pounder iron gun on one of the bastions at the treasury, and two 6-pounder brass guns on the bastion behind the well at the artificers' yard. In addition to these, we have in other places four two-fifth brass howitzers and three 3-pounder brass guns; these small pieces are ready to be moved to any point that may be required; so I am sure you will say we are ready to give them a hearty welcome. I suppose you have heard ere this that the Joudhpore legion has also joined the mutineers. Part of our force marched to meet them on the 1st instant under General G. Lawrence, but the rascals keep well out of his way; however, if he can only prevent them from coming any farther in this direction for a few days more, they will fall into our hands, as a party, or rather headquarters of H.M.'s 83rd regiment, is expected to have left Deesa ere this for Ajmeer. So a hint to them to put a foot on the ground might be the means of paying the scoundrels off in their own coin."

AZIMGHUR.—The following is from camp Nundowlee, dated 20th September:—

"Captain Boileau, Lieutenants Wynyard, Venables, Dunbar, Haig, and Dr. Wright, went out this morning, 20th September, at 2 a.m., with some 1,000 men of the Goorkhas, including four companies of the regiment which came in at 6 o'clock last night, having left Juanpore, forty miles, at 1 p.m. the previous day, to attack the camp at Nundowlee. An express has just come in to say that they have beaten the enemy, and taken three capital guns (brass) at the point of the bayonet. The Goorkhas rushed in; would not wait for our guns, and took the enemy by assault. We have sixteen wounded; two dangerously, five severely. They hid in the sugarcane, and we have killed about 100 men, principally Hindoos. No officer on our side touched. Venables always in front. They are still shooting men in the sugar cane; spread the news everywhere, to show what jolly fellows the Goorkhas are. "Venables killed three men, and took one gun and got well men who attacked were from the Rajah of Attroniah, himself; the smashed."

The following is from Azimghur, Sept. 20th, 1857:—

No. 24.—Copy.

"Sir,—I have the honour to report for the information of Colonel Gordon, commanding the district, that having been reinforced by the arrival of the Shere regiment of the Goorkah force from Juanpore, at six p.m. yesterday, I determined to attack the largest body of insurgents in our neighbourhood at once.

"2. At half-past one o'clock a.m. I accordingly moved out against them, and reached their position at the village of Mundree, ten miles from this, a little after sunrise.

"3. I found them strongly posted, the village covering their centre, and extensive fields of sugarcane (now at its greatest height) protecting both their flanks, with a grove of mango-trees in rear.

"4. They had received no notice of my approach, and I am told that many parties had quitted their camp in search of plunder, the number left amounting to not less than one thousand men, with three guns.

"5. When within a quarter of a mile of their position, the Goorkhas broke into five columns, and advanced with great rapidity and spirit to the attack, rushing straight to the guns, receiving their fire, and capturing them in less than ten minutes after the first shot was fired.

"6. The insurgents retreated at once, and were pursued for nearly three miles, losing men at every step. They finally dispersed in the sugarcane. The country is covered with fields of this plant, and afforded an admirable shelter to the enemy, whose loss on this account was much less than it would otherwise have been. We were also unable to make use of our guns against them, as, owing to the rapidity of the advance, they were unable to keep with the troops.

"7. I would estimate the loss of the rebels at from 150 to 200 killed, and many wounded must have crept into the sugarcane.

"Our loss is two killed, and twenty-six wounded. I annex a return. Lieutenants Dunbar and Hay, and Assistant-Surgeon Wright were present in the field, and Messrs. Wynyard, of the civil service, and Venables, deputy-magistrate, volunteered their services, and accompanied the troops throughout; the latter gentleman killing three of the enemy with his own hand. I have the honour to be, &c.,

"G. W. BOILEAU, Captain,

"In Mil. Charge, Goorkah Department, Azimghur."

BARODA, Oct. 10.—The 8th instant was a day intended by the resident to be big with importance. Tents were pitched on the general parade, and ornamented with evergreens, a platform of soft earth being thrown up in front for wrestlers,—the officers of camp were invited to attend, and a subsequent invitation was given to the native officers; but as, through a mistake or an omission, no request was made that the sepoys should be placed so as to enjoy the spectacle and keep back the crowd, the ground was not at all kept, and the crush of some thousands of people was most oppressive and dangerous. His Highness the Guicowar arrived in state at half-past four o'clock in the afternoon, being received by a guard of honour, and with a royal salute. Various animals, the property of his Highness, were then exhibited; among which were some exquisite white deer; then came deer-fighting, ram-fighting, and cock-fighting,—a rhinoceros was paraded, and two giraffes capered about in their own peculiar manner. Some pairs of expert wrestlers then appeared on the scene, after which the Guicowar took his departure with the same honours as he was received. When it became dark, the ladies graced the tents with their presence, and soon a succession of brilliant fireworks spoke aloud to the multitude that the British representative kept holiday for the fall of Delhi. Dangling forms of men in grotesque garments turned and twirled amid clouds of squibs and crackers; torrents and cataracts of starry fire burst forth from representations of forts and citadels, while at times meteoric flashes, darting high into the heavens, burst into a thousand fiery brilliants ere they consigned themselves to the mystery of space. A supper at the Residency closed the programme for the day. The fifty men of H.M.'s 86th regiment stationed here had been included in the festivities most substantially, inasmuch as they had a very heavy blow-out at noon, in the shape of many plum-puddings and much beef. On the receipt of the intelligence, the Guicowar had his guns brought to the vicinity of the camp to peal forth a royal salute in honour thereof, and he has now invited all the officers and ladies to a banquet in commemoration of the event this evening, when he himself will come in state to escort his guests to the Motre Bagh, where they are to be entertained.

The fifty Europeans of H.M.'s 86th regiment marched yesterday morning for Ahmedabad at a day's notice; but no one divines why this sudden move has taken place. The men of the 8th regiment N.I. are this day moving into the lines they built at their own expense. They have been very sickly of late, one in five on the sick report—the result, doubtless, in a very great measure, of the extra duty that must fall on them when eight companies perform the duty of a brigade of two regiments.

BEHAR.—We must congratulate our Behar friends on the resolve of Sir Colin Campbell to assemble a British force of 5,000 men in that country. The measure is a wise one, and is already half accomplished; so that Koor Sing, Umer Sing, the Irregulars, Sonthals, and other troublesome vermin, may look out for squalls.

BENARES.—Benares is quite quiet. Extensive preparations are being made for the troops expected from England. Three thousand new carts are to be constructed by the end of November, with 4,000 sets of bedding, and large supplies of grain, &c. &c., are being laid in.

BOLUNDSHUHUR, Sept. 28.—The following letter to the Lahore authorities was written by Captain Norman, Asst. Adjt.-Gen., with Col. Greathed's column:—"The Jhansi troops with their artillery, aided by a miscellaneous assemblage of insurgents, having taken up a very strong position in front of Bolundshuhur, were attacked this morning by all available portions of this force, and after a sharp engagement were defeated into and through the town, and pursued beyond it. They have fled in various directions, leaving in our hands one 9-pounder and one 3-pounder gun, two ammunition-waggons, and many hackeries laden with small-arm ammunition, carriages, &c. They left upwards of 100 dead on the field, and were seen to carry off many killed and wounded. Our loss is about sixty killed and wounded. Captain Best, 8th cavalry; Lieut. Sarel and Cornet Blair, 9th lancers; and Lieut. Edgeworth, 8th foot, were all severely wounded; Captain Drysdale, 9th lancers, was severely hurt by his horse falling when shot. Our camp is now pitched on the Unooshehur side of the town, and about six miles from the insurgents' Fort of Malaghur." The fort was afterwards evacuated by the enemy, and occupied by a party of cavalry.

CAWNPORE.—By recent letters received from Brigadier Havelock's force, it appears that on the arrival of the detachment of the 78th Highlanders at that "place of skulls," Cawnpore, after the massacre of our countrymen, women, and children, they by some means or other found the remains of one of General Wheeler's daughters. The sight was horrible and aroused them to that pitch, that, gathering around, they removed the hair from off the poor girl's head, a portion of which was carefully selected and sent home to her surviving friends. The remainder they equally divided amongst themselves; and on each man receiving his carefully-served-out portion, they all quietly and very patiently applied themselves to the tedious task of counting out the number of hairs contained in each individual's lot; and when this task was accomplished, they one and all swore most solemnly to Heaven and the God that made them, that for as many hairs as they held in their fingers so many of the cruel and treacherous mutineers should die by their hands! An oath that they will no doubt most religiously keep.

An officer, who accompanied General Outram from Allahabad to Cawnpore, thus describes the present appearance of the entrenched barracks, so nobly defended by Sir Hugh Wheeler and his devoted little band of heroes:—

"The road, as you enter the town, leads past the two buildings, with their outhouses, where Wheeler, with his brave band, held his own so long against the hordes which surrounded him. These buildings formed what was called the European Cavalry Hospital. Right well and heroically must it have been defended. The walls are pitted with cannon-shot, like the cells of a honeycomb. The doors, which seem to have been the principal points against which the Nava's fire was directed, are breached, and knocked into huge shapeless openings. Of the verandahs, which surrounded both the buildings, only a few splintered rafters remain, and at some of the angles the walls are knocked entirely away, and huge chasms open blackly at you. "Many of the enemy's cannon-shot have gone through and through the buildings; portions of the interior walls and roof have fallen, and here and there are blood-gouts on wall and floor. Never did I yet see a place so terribly battered."

The following diary of Gen. Havelock's advance from Cawnpore will be read with interest:—

Sept. 18.—We are now all bivouacked on the bank of the river, waiting the completion of the bridge of boats to an island in the centre of the river, on which our guns and skirmishers are now engaged with the enemy, who have two guns firing upon us in our front. Their camp is visible at a village some two or three miles farther in. We hope to cross this evening or to-morrow morning. Major Haliburton, of the 78th Highlanders, is in command of the advanced troops on the island, where the advanced skirmishers of the rebels fired upon us during the evening, killing one of our Sikhs. After dark the advanced troops and guns under Major Haliburton retired for the night to the sand-bank and the bridge of boats.

Sept. 19.—Before daylight this morning, the advanced troops, commanded as yesterday, pushed on again, feeling their way up the Lucknow road, where they remained in skirmishing order, covering the advance of the main force;—partial musketry firing during this time on both sides, the enemy mainly occupying a ridge of sand-hills on the right. After a time, two guns of the enemy posted in a village on the right front commenced playing upon us; their shot fell close amongst the advance, and at times even passing over the column forming in rear; but no casualties occurred. After about an hour of this pretty scene, a sufficient force having crossed, the advance was ordered, diverging towards the right along two ridges of sand-hills behind which the rebels were posted. They made a show of endeavouring to maintain themselves, sending detachments and cavalry out to their left, and to the farthest removed point from the line of retreat. The advance of our skirmishers, however, supported by the column and the Enfield rifles of the former, were too much for their courage. A strong attempt was made by the leading men of the rebels on horseback to induce their men to advance on our skirmishers—Sikhs and Highlanders—between the two lines of sand-hills; a simultaneous cheer passed along their line; Jack Sepoy advanced with a shout—about twenty yards, and no more!—and then went to the right-about, keeping up a smart but harmless fire. Our troops occupied the sand-hills, where they encamped for the day to enable the stores, baggage, and heavy guns to join them.

September 20.—Soon after daylight this morning the enemy opened with two guns of heavy calibre on our patrol of cavalry, who then retired. The enemy's camp is about two miles in advance. It is said we do not advance to-day; consequently a general expectation prevails that a sudden order will arrive, putting us in motion this afternoon. We expect to give the enemy a good thrashing and take some guns after advancing a couple of miles, if he will only wait for us. The troops are in capital health and spirits, and ready for a dash at anything.

Camp on the Oude side of the Ganges, Sept. 20. 1857.—I now beg to send you a brief account of our proceedings; so that you may know what we are doing. I am happy to inform you that our (General Havelock's) force are now greatly augmented, as on the 15th and 16th instant, General Outram, with one company of the Highlanders (No. 2) from Benares, eight companies of H.M.'s 90th regiment, about five companies of the 5th fusiliers, about fifty sows of native troopers, with small detachments of different corps, also a few artillerymen, came in.

For several days past we have been preparing a bridge of boats to cross to the Oude side; and for the protection of the workmen we sent a few companies over with four guns. On the night of the 18th the enemy came down in force, and drove our men back to the boats, destroying some of our advanced works; so yesterday morning (the 19th) General Havelock had us all ready to commence crossing the river at four o'clock. The enemy at daylight was found to be in position about one mile away from the bridge, and, although they were so near it, did not prevent us from crossing the river. The enemy fired a good deal at us; but luckily their fire did us no damage whatever. The infantry moved over first; and, on each regiment reaching the opposite side, it threw out skirmishers, and soon cleared our front for some distance; and, as soon as our guns could be brought over, we opened fire upon them, which they did not seem to like, for they soon retired a few miles further in, and left us plenty of room to encamp for the night, and await the arrival of our heavy guns coming over. I am happy to say that, in addition to three batteries of smaller guns, we have this morning brought over four 24-pounders and two 8-inch howitzers.

Extract of a letter from Camp, Oude side of river, Sept. 20:—

"We crossed the river yesterday by a bridge of boats, constructed pour l'occasion, by Messrs Crommelin, Watson and other engineers. One of our cavalry, who was acting as orderly to the general, was drowned. His horse jumped off the bridge, and he and horse were drawn down by an eddy, and nothing more was seen of them. Previous to the main body crossing, the Sikhs and two companies of the 78th Highlanders had taken up a position on an island; the enemy fired upon them with their guns, but our 24-pounders seemed no favourites with them, as they became more respectful, notwithstanding they continued at intervals taking pops with their matchlocks, sheltered from sight by the long grass. No one fortunately was killed, beyond one Sikh, who was shot through the head. On the main body crossing, or rather after having crossed, a horse-gun opened fire; but that was soon silenced. The enemy occupy a village named Mangulwar, which by to-morrow will be in our hands. It is my opinion we shall not have over-much fighting till we reach Nuwabgunge. Report says they are strongly intrenched there. They are said to have a monster gun, of fabulous size, 'reaching to the sun;' whatever it is, it will be our property before long.

The following is a copy of what was put in order by General Outram on the night of the 16 instant :—

" Division Orders by Major-General Sir J. Outram, K.C.B., commanding Dinapore and Cawnpore Divisions of the Army.

" Cawnpore, Sept 16, 1857.

" All Cawnpore divisional reports to be made for the information of Sir James Outram, K.C.B., commanding.

" The force selected by General Havelock, which will march to relieve the garrison at Lucknow, will be constituted and composed as follows :—

" First Infantry Brigade.

" The 5th Fusiliers, 84th regiment, detachments 64th Foot and 1st Madras Fusiliers; Brigadier-General Neill commanding, and nominating his own brigade staff.

" Second Infantry Brigade.

" H.M.'s 73rd Highlanders, H.M.'s 90th Light Inf., and the Sikh Regiment of Ferozepore; Brigadier Hamilton commanding, and nominating his own brigade staff.

" Third (Artillery) Brigade.

" Capt. Maude's battery, Capt. Oliphant's battery, Brevet-Major Eyre's battery; Major Cooper to command, and to appoint his own staff.

" Cavalry.

" Volunteer cavalry to the left; irregular cavalry to the right;—Captain Barrow to command.

" Engineer Department.

" Chief engineer, Captain Crowling; assistant engineers, Lieutenants Leonard and Judge, engineers.

" Major-General H. Havelock, C.B., to command the force.

" The important duty of first relieving the garrison of Lucknow has been first entrusted to Major-General Havelock, C.B., and Major-General Outram feels that it is due to this distinguished officer and the strenuous and noble exertions which he has already made to effect that object that to him should accrue the honour of the achievement.

" Major-General Outram is confident that the great end for which General Havelock and his brave troops have so long and so gloriously fought will now, under the blessing of Providence, be accomplished.

" The Major-General, therefore, in gratitude for and admiration of the brilliant deeds of arms achieved by General Havelock and his gallant troops, will cheerfully wave his rank on the occasion, and will accompany the force to Lucknow in his civil capacity as Chief Commissioner of Oude, and tendering his military services to General Havelock as a volunteer.

" On the relief of Lucknow, the Major-General will resume his position at the head of the forces."

The following order was issued on the same evening by General Havelock, to the force about to proceed to the relief of the garrison at Lucknow.

" Field Force After Orders, by General Havelock.

" Cawnpore, 16th Sept. 1857.

" Brigadier-General Havelock, in making known to the column the kind and generous determination of General Sir James Outram, K.C.B., to leave to him the task of relieving Lucknow, and rescuing its gallant and enduring garrison, has only to express his hope that the troops will strive by their exemplary and gallant conduct in the field, to justify the confidence thus reposed in them."

On the 21st Sept. General Havelock forwarded the following telegraphic dispatch to General Mansfield, chief of the staff. It is dated from Bussarat-gunge :—

" I have to request that you will inform His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief that I was joined by my reinforcements on the 15th and 16th instants.

" On the 19th, I crossed first to the island on the Ganges, and then to its left bank by a bridge of boats which had been laboriously constructed by Captain Crommelin, field-engineer. The enemy retired after a very feeble, in fact a nominal, resistance to his position at Mungarwar. The two brigades of my force occupied an alignment with the right centre behind sandhills, the centre and left on a plain, extending to the road from the Lucknow Ghaut to Mungarwar.

" My heavy guns and baggage were passed over on the 20th. This morning I attacked the enemy, turned his right, and drove him from his position, with the loss of four guns;—two of which, and the regimental colour of the 1st Bengal N.I., were captured by the Volunteer cavalry in a charge headed by Sir James Outram. The loss on our side was trifling. The enemy suffered severely, about 120 were sabred by the cavalry."

The special correspondent of the Bombay Times thus describes this brilliant affair :—

22nd Sept.—Since my last, the force, consisting of 2,500 men and seventeen guns, marched forward towards Lucknow, and at the village named Mungoo Warra, had a fierce encounter with the enemy. The battle lasted four hours, and ended in the rout of the rebels, with the loss of five field-pieces and two battery guns. Three of the former and the two latter were charged by the infantry, and the other two field-pieces were most gallantly captured by our volunteer cavalry, led on to the charge by General Sir James Outram in person. The loss of the enemy on this occasion amounted to some thirty or forty killed, and several wounded. Our casualties were few, being one European and three natives killed, and some two or three slightly wounded. It rained almost the whole day, and our brave boys were exposed to it the whole march, distant some twelve or fourteen miles on the other side of Bussarat-gunge. The rebels do not much like the shot and shell from the eight-inch howitzers; our first salute was from seventeen guns at once and from three or four different places. This took them somewhat aback, and some soon deemed it prudent to put the adage that " discretion is the better part of valour " into effect, and take to their heels and be off. Our next brush will be at the broken bridge, where it is said the enemy have a strong and formidable position, with several battery guns. It is the intention of the general in command to cross the river elsewhere, and to effect this we have two or three pontoon boats with us.

Oct. 1.—Forty-two loud reports of cannon from our entrenchment proclaimed to the inhabitants of Cawnpore, not an hour since, the fall of Delhi and Lucknow. After each salute, loud and continued cheering might have been heard some distance around, and now all is quiet. Reports from Lucknow state that the rebels hold a formidable position a few miles from the town, whither our force, with the relieved garrison, proceed, so soon as our troops have refreshed themselves, and exchanged a shake of the hand with their brothers of the 32nd, now running wild on the grass, and playing at leap-frog, or taking a hop, step, and then a jump. Some four days ago, about forty or fifty chowkeedars were sent to the village of Onawah to guard the village. The poor fellows had not been there twenty-four hours, when a body of 150 horse, and a like number of infantry, attacked them. Only six of the fifty escaped with their lives, and these six are most frightfully cut and hacked with the sword.

Extract of a letter from Major-general Sir James Outram, G.C.B. dated Camp, left bank of the Ganges, opposite Cawnpore, 20th Sept. 1857 :—

" I have the pleasure to forward extracts from a letter I have to-day received from Captain Patrick Orr, dated 13th instant, from Mitaulee, the residence of a rajah in Oude, under whose protection Captain Orr, three other gentlemen, two ladies, and two children have been preserved since the outbreak; and also of a note from Lieutenant Burnes, writing from the same place, who mentions that there are nine men and three ladies at Mutteera, under protection of another chief, at a place called Mutteera, in Oude.

" These comprise ten chieftains of Oude, who have proved their fidelity to Government by protecting our subjects."

Extract from a letter from Captain Patrick Orr (living under the protection of Lonee Singh), zemindar of Mitaulee, in Oude, dated 13th Sept. :—

" I was the only one out of a party of thirty-one who escaped—not a single officer, lady, or child, present with the 25th N.I. escaped. Poor Thomson also met with his death at the hands of the mutineers, who had sworn most faithfully to spare us all on condition of leaving the Mohundee fort, and marching with them towards Seetapore. They let us march along with them the first day's march without any molestation; some taking every opportunity of stealing our firearms; but the next day, when close to the end of the march, they suddenly fell upon us, and shot every one down. The troops consisted of the three companies of 9th irregulars (my old corps), and some John Hearney's police. I rushed out towards my men, after having been about three minutes in the group under a very heavy fire, and some of them took me under their protection, brought me to this rajah's place, where I had already sent my wife and child some days before. We were joined here by Burnes; Jackson, his sister, a sergeant, and the daughter of poor Christian, late commissioner of Seetapore, and have been taken good care of by Rajah Lonee Singh. For some time we were in a house, but for nearly 1½ month we have been in a dense jungle."

Extract from a letter from Lieut. Burnes (also living under the protection of Rajah Lonee Singh), dated Mitaulee, Sept. the 10th, 1857 :—

" At Mutteera, under care of Indur Bikram Singh, nine men and three ladies, total twelve."

From Camp Bagagunge, 22nd Sept.; dated Cawnpore, 24th Sept. 5-5 p.m. From Sir James Outram.

" To the Governor-General,—

" The rebels along the road are flying before our force, which marched twenty miles, and yesterday fourteen miles: their retreat too precipitate to enable them to destroy the Bunnee bridge. Only four more guns taken, but many have been cast into wells, and only four passed the Bunnee bridge. Firing at Lucknow distinctly heard, and royal salute by our 24-pounders to announce our approach to our friends. Our army will have reached Lucknow either last night or this morning."

DINAPORE, 18th Sept.—Five hundred of the irregular cavalry are within 34 miles of this; they tried to cross the Soane, but previous measures had been taken, and all the boats on that river have been sunk. The rascals cannot cross into Arrah, which place they are evidently bound to. The magistrate and other officers, together with the 100 Sikhs, have been ordered to move back into the Buzar fort. It would have been better had they sent some Europeans and a gun or two to keep the rebels out of the latter place, and removed all the government stallions and mares, for Koor Sing is determined that no European shall remain in Shahabad, and there is not the least doubt that the Arrah gentlemen there would not like another eight days' siege. It is rumoured that the Rewah Rajah has been compelled to join Koor Sing with his forces, which, if true, will cause great havoc in the district. Dinapore is quiet at present. Every precaution has been taken to give them a warm reception, should they bend their course in this direction. The cavalry (mutineers) have their pickets out two miles on all sides, and their treasure guarded by double sentries. The 600 Madras troops, brought up here the other day on the Dalla and Coel, are to remain here for the present.

"20th Sept.—The 5th irregular cavalry, after having extorted a large sum of money from the Burra and Chote Ranees of Gya, and from the neighbouring villages, have crossed over to Shahabad, and are playing the same game there, under the guidance of Jhuddur Sing, a petty zemindar, near Gya. He points out to the Sowars fit objects for plunder, and their supposed means, when a suitable demand is made; the victims are then obliged to deliver, or take the consequence. These people have not yet come to Arrah, but I suppose they soon will, as a large booty may be obtained there without opposition; no troops to oppose them, and none can be spared from this.

It is supposed that Colonel Fisher's force has by this time crossed the Soane, and is searching the country in that direction for Meer Sing and his party of rebels. All is doubt and uncertainty as to Koor Sing's whereabouts, and for the present his above-mentioned brother, is the rebel of mark. Colonel, or we suppose we should write, Brigadier Fisher's force consists of the left wing of H.M.'s 53rd regiment, the greater part of the 27th Madras N.I., and Capt. Ripon's battery of Madras artillery.

The other brigade of what, we suppose, may be styled the army of Behar, was in camp between three or four miles beyond Raneegunge on the 29th Sept. This brigade is commanded by Brigadier Barclay, and is composed of the right wing and head-quarters of H.M.'s 53rd regiment, the 2nd battalion of the royal military train, 2 guns Madras horse artillery, one company Madras sappers and miners, and a detail of Madras native infantry.—Phoenix.

DELHI.—The following are extracts from a letter dated from head-quarters, Skinner's house, Sept. 15:—

"You will be delighted to hear that we are at last within the walls of Delhi. The assault took place yesterday morning, soon after daybreak, and the storming was entirely successful, and we were soon in possession of all this end of the city, with the Cashmere, Cabul, and Mooree gates, which we now hold, with the church, college, and other large buildings near this one, in which head-quarters are.

"The part of the city we now hold is very compact, and preparations are being made for heavy batteries to knock the mutineers out of those parts of the city in which they now are. This we hope to be able to do, with very little loss of life to ourselves, in three or four days.

"Many of the city people have come in to ask for quarters, which has been given them; but sepoys who wanted to come in have not been permitted.

"A great many of the mutineers, particularly cavalry, left last night, in the direction, it is said, of Rewaree."

Mr. Greathed writing on that day, says:—

"No serious attempt has been made by the enemy to recover the valuable line of defences they lost yesterday. On our part, measures have been adopted to consolidate this conquest, and to add to it. The magazine is the first point. Batteries have been turned against it, and ten heavy mortars are playing on the city. The camp, which remains on the old ground, has not been molested. The enemy's retention of the suburb of Telewara prevents it being advanced under the walls of the city. Our flag floats over the Cashmere gate, and head-quarters are established in Col. Skinner's house.

"Suleymgurb still continues to send an occasional discharge of shrapnel or grape into the church square, and there is a desultory fire of musketry from tops of houses in the distance.

"Two regiments are reported to have left the city last night by the Bewaree road. An organized body of triops were seen marching off yesterday morning over the bridge soon after the attack.

"The column that entered the city yesterday consisted of 2,600 Europeans and 2,000 native soldiers. The casualties amount to nearly 650. The loss amongst the officers has been very heavy—nine officers of engineers, eight of her Majesty's 8th, and nine of the 1st fusiliers. The heaviest misfortune is the wounding of General Nicholson. He may perhaps survive, but is in great danger.

"The killed and mortally wounded amongst the officers are:—Fitzgerald, 75th; Bradshaw, 52nd; Murray, guides; Ross, carabineers; Tandy, engineers; Jacob, 1st fusiliers; McBarnett, 55th N.I.; Davidson, 16th N.I.

"This is the correct list. Thirty-nine were wounded."

Sept 16.—Magazine carried this morning with loss of only three wounded. A dash and a cheer struck such terror, that the rebels dropped their lighted portfires, leaving their loaded guns an easy prey to us; 125 pieces of ordnance, and vast supplies of shot and shells found in the magazine alone. Our guns and ten mortars now bearing on palace. We hold everything on our side of the canal except the palace. All look to the complete occupation of the city in a couple of days as a certainty. 1st Bengal Fusiliers suffered most. General Nicholson rallied a little; though nearly dead when taken off the field, refused to leave it. Casualties amount to near 650; cavalry had between forty and fifty wounded. Casualties amongst officers:—Engineers 9, H.M.'s 8th Foot 8, 1st Bengal Fusiliers 9; 39 officers wounded.

Letters from Delhi were received by Mr. Sherer at Cawnpore, dated the 22nd September:—

"On that day, Delhi was entirely taken. The King and Queen Zenut Mehal close prisoners, and the Princes Mirza Mogul, Aboo Bucker, and Kuzeer Sooltan have been shot. A strong column under Colonel Greathed is in pursuit down right bank of Jumna. City a perfect desolation. The head-quarters established in the Dewan Khas."

Colonel Durand, the resident at Mhow, has communicated the following intelligence:—

Express from Neemuch of 1st instant, encloses copy of letter from Colonel A. Becher, dated Delhi, 22nd September, to Captain Nixon. All going wonderfully well at Delhi. The king and Begum Zeenut Mahall, are close prisoners. The Princes Meerzah Moghul, Abo Bucker, and Kheysur Sultan were brought in from Hamayon's Tomb, and shot at the Delhi Gate. Their bodies were exhibited at the Cutwallie where so many of our poor countrymen were murdered. A pursuing column under Colonel Greathed of 1,600 infantry, 18 guns, and 600 cavalry, has been organized. Delhi, a perfect picture of desolation, and a vast amount of property was left. On night of 21st, the Queen's health was proposed by the conqueror of Delhi, and drunk with loud cheers in the Dewan Khana of the Palace. The cheers were taken up by the gallant Goorkas, and the old buildings rang with cheers.

"Bombay, Wednesday Morning, Oct. 7.—The following is a copy of a letter from Mr. Reade, the Acting Lieutenant-Governor at Agra, to Lord Elphinstone, dated Agra, 27th Sept. "I have the greatest satisfaction in stating the complete re-occupation of the city and palace of Delhi on the 21st inst., the intelligence of which has just reached me in a despatch from Colonel Becher, quartermaster-general of the army. The princes who have been the leaders of the mutineers and rebels in this stronghold of crime and intrigue, have been taken and shot. Their bodies are lying in the Cutwallie, where our countrymen were murdered, and their bodies exposed to the public gaze. The king is a prisoner. The despatch contains no further particulars, except the mention of her Majesty's victory over her enemies having been declared with hearty cheers in the great hall of the palace, and of the detachment of a column in pursuit of the fugitives, of whose flight in this direction, altogether broken and disorganized, we have had intimation during the last two days."

Bombay, Oct. 9, Friday morning, five A.M.—Latest from Delhi, via Scinde, date not given. Brigadier Nicholson died from wounds. Columns gone down the Doab in pursuit of mutineers.

On the 23rd September the following bulletin was issued by the Lahore authorities:—

"The news from Delhi is, that the king was taken prisoner yesterday, by a party of sowars under Lieut. Hodson, near the Kootub, where four guns were also found.

"No sign of a mutineer is now to be seen at Delhi. They abandoned their camp outside the Ajmere gate; in their hurry leaving all sick and wounded, who could not walk; their drums, band instruments, clothing, bedding, cooking pots, &c., and all luxuries. The report is that a number of them are collecting at Bullbugurh. Some talk of going to Lucknow, and some to Gwalior.

"Cholera has shown itself in the town. Dead bodies and carcasses were being removed. The stench in some places is described to be unbearable."

Lahore, Sept. 25.—It is the painful duty of the Chief Commissioner to announce the death of Brigadier-General John Nicholson, on the morning of the 23rd instant. This officer, it is well known, led the attack on the memorable morning of the 14th instant, when the city of Delhi was assaulted and captured. On this occasion General Nicholson was mortally wounded.

General Nicholson's loss is greatly to be deplored. He was an officer of great promise. He possessed some of the highest qualities of a soldier,—brave, sagacious, and devoted to his profession. The Bengal army contains no more able or more noble soldier.

A strong column has moved from Delhi, down the Doab, in pursuit of the fugitive mutineers, and to clear and settle the country.

Lieut.-Col. H. P. Burn has been appointed military governor of the city of Delhi.

Sept. 27.—There is nothing of importance to communicate from Delhi, where Mr. Saunders, the officiating commissioner, is engaged in re-organizing a police, settling the country, and re-establishing order.

The following is an extract from a letter, dated Delhi, the 25th instant:—

"Riots occurring daily on account of plundering. Some men of a native corps actually fired on a guard of ours to-day, in consequence of the men preventing them from breaking into a house where valuables were secured. Our men wounded some, and took two prisoners, who will no doubt, according to order, suffer death. It is almost impossible to prevent looting, the city is so large. I have heard about some ladies being murdered on our entering the city, but no authentic news of it. The serjeant-major of the 28th N.I., the scoundrel who gave every assistance to the mutineers in Delhi (a European) during their temporary occupation, was taken prisoner, endeavouring to effect an escape with the king: he was in native uniform. He formerly belonged to the artillery, and no doubt rendered good service to the rebels in the capacity of a gunner. He is now in our guard, in irons; and I hope the villainous traitor may get his neck dislocated. He is a cut-throat-looking beggar; and no doubt his life has been spared for the present so as to pump him."

The following is an abstract of the ordnance captured in Delhi:—Magazine, 161; Cashmere bastion, 13; Water bastion, 9; Moree bastion, 9; Round Tower, 1; Gateways, 2; 3-gun battery, 3; Kishengunge, 5. Total, 203 pieces.

From Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army, Delhi, 10 a.m.

Sept. 17.—"Early this morning we took possession of the Bank house, and hold the portion of the city between it and the magazine. Skirmishing has been going on near the Bank; but we are firmly established there. Our guns command the bridge and Selimgurh entirely. The palace and Selimgurh are under a constant fire of shells. The enemy are flying in bodies of one and two hundred men towards Gwalior via Muttra. Property of every kind left in the city is immense. All the streets we occupy have been abandoned by the inhabitants. The number of dead sepoys in every quarter is very great." Another message of an hour previous, from the Adjutant-General of the army, from Skinner's house, Delhi, says:—"We have advanced our line of posts up to the canal and on the left as far as the Bank. The palace is to be breached as soon as possible, and all our mortars are to play upon it; it will be our first point of attack. Selimgurh only fires occasionally and without effect; our fire keeping down that of the enemy. The report is that the royal family, the king's three regiments, one regiment of N.I., and some light cavalry troopers, hold the palace, and intend to fight it out to the last. The mutineers are less active to-day. The Bareilly and Neemuch troops are said to have come into the town, and have started off their baggage under an escort down the Muttra road towards Gwalior, intending to follow by forced marches, when the baggage shall have had a fair start. The townspeople continue to fly to the palace, and numberless women have come into our camp. No attempt will be made to occupy the whole town, until the palace and Selimgurh are taken. The magazine is full of stores of every description except powder; and notwithstanding the enormous quantity expended by the rebels during the last three months, no impression appears to have been made on the huge piles still left. Brig.-General Nicholson is a little better. Sick and wounded doing pretty well."

"Six p.m.—Our position is the same as this morning. The mortar battery has been keeping up a heavy and continued fire throughout the day, and will do so throughout the night. The magazine does not afford a position through which to batter the palace, nor is there any suitable place in our possession as yet. The king reported to be in the palace still; if so, his residence must be a very warm one, for our shells are pouring into the whole length of it from north to south. Great numbers of the inhabitants of the city have come in, and are being passed out of the town by us; and the 'look-out' at Hindoo Rao's house reports streams of people and animals as having issued from the Ajmere gate. A correct return of guns captured in the magazine and on the works will be sent to-morrow."

"Sept. 18, 2 p.m.—Our position the same as last reported. We are strengthening ourselves at the Bank, and the sappers are working towards the houses which command the Buree bastion. No suitable place has yet been found from which to breach the palace. We continue to shell. Selimgurh has only fired a few shots to-day, and does no harm. Few people have crossed the bridge. No townspeople have come in to us to-day, nor have we any real information as to the movements of rebels. Yesterday the Delhi gate of the palace was reported to be open, and covered carts passing out from it. No certain intelligence of the king and his family."

"The following is the number of guns taken:—

"On the works, and in use by the enemy ..	35
"In the magazines	171

"Total .. 206

"Immense stores of shot and shell, but very little powder. Large quantities of percussion-caps. The whole of the buildings of the magazine remained uninjured, excepting that part which was blown up by the explosion. No increase of sickness in camp. The report of General Nicholson to-day is not favourable. His brother, Lieut. Nicholson, doing well. A fall of rain since the eclipse has cooled the atmosphere nicely, which is good for the wounded."

"The report of the death of Captain Ross, carabineer, is incorrect; but he was dangerously wounded. Lieutenants Pogson and Webb, 8th foot, have died of their wounds."

The following are the details of the despatches of the 16th:—

A battery was opened on the 15th from the college garden against the magazine. "The breach was completed during the night," writes Mr. Greathed on the 16th; "and this morning the magazine was carried, with the loss of three men wounded; the enemy abandoning the post as soon as the column appeared over the crest of the breach. One hundred and twenty pieces of heavy ordnance, and a vast supply of shot and shells, were found in it. A battery is now being constructed at the palace end of the magazine, and the embrasures of the battery in the college garden are altered, so that the guns may bear on Sulemgurh, and on the palace."

"A great number of dead Pandies, in various stages of decomposition, were found in and about the magazine."

"Mortars will now play from the magazine into the palace. The capture of this important post has secured our possession of that portion of the town. The chief annoyance now is from musketry from the palace-walls, from a light gun that moves about the foot of the palace-walls and from the Sulemgurh."

"The road from the Cashmere to the Caubul gate is now quite safe. That quarter of the town up to the street leading from the Cashmere bastion to the Jumma Musjid is entirely evacuated by the inhabitants. Some few old women are found here and there, and are kindly treated by our men. There is only one instance known of a woman having been killed, and that was by an accident."

"The force at the Caubul gate have extended their occupation along the canal to the point where the road leads from the direction of the palace to the Lahore gate; and their outposts are in communication with the outposts from the magazine side. The troops are now more collected, and under better control. They get their rations cooked on the spot; and they are being reinforced by recovered men from the hospital. The 52nd were reinforced by twenty-five men to-day."

"The enemy's force in Kishengunge made a reconnaissance of the right flank of our camp yesterday, to ascertain apparently the strength left to defend the camp. Finding the picket posts all occupied, they retreated, and the camp has remained unmolested. It is said they are now evacuating Kishengunge. It is impossible to get information from the city. The enemy's cavalry cut off communication outside the town to the right, and no messenger can penetrate from the side in our possession. It is believed the troops are deserting the city, but the palace is still strongly occupied."

In the assault "the engineers suffered much. Out of the party of three that applied the powder-bags of the Cashmere gate, one officer only escaped, badly wounded. The enemy had loop-holed the door, and the sergeant had only time to fire the bag and say, 'I have lighted it,' when he was shot dead."

Mr. Greathed gives the following list of officers wounded on the 14th, though he fears it may be not quite complete:—

WOUNDED.

Staff.—Brigadier Nicholson and Captain Anson, a.-d.-c.
 Engineers.—Lieutenants Greathed, Salkeld, Maunsell, Home, Pemberton, and Medley.
 Artillery.—Lieutenants Lindsay and Elliot.
 Cavalry.—Lieutenant Cuppage.
 Eighth Foot.—Majors Brooke and Baines; Lieutenants Pogson and Stebbings.
 Fifty-second Foot.—Colonel Campbell, Captains Bailey and Atkinson.
 Sixtieth Foot.—Lieutenants Curtis and Waters.
 Sixty-first Foot.—Colonel Deacon.
 Seventy-fifth Foot.—Colonel Herbert (slightly) and Lieut. Armstrong.
 First Fusiliers.—Captain Greville, Lieutenants Wemyss, Owen, Lambert, Speke, Caulfield (3rd N.I.), doing duty, and Graydon, doing duty.
 Second Fusiliers.—Captain Hay (60th N.I.), doing duty, and Lieutenant Elderton.
 Sirmoor Battalion.—Major Reid and Captain Boisragon.
 First Punjab Infantry.—Lieutenants Nicholson, Gambier, and Gustavinski.

In a postscript Mr. Greathed adds the satisfactory intelligence that "Kishengunge has been evacuated. The enemy left four heavy guns and mortars, which are being brought into camp."

GWALIOR, Sept. 14.—The mutineers at Moorar have withdrawn the whole of their heavy guns, but their light guns are kept out as picket guns. The Maharaja's guns and troops are still out; he says that he will not withdraw his guns and troops until such time as the whole of them have marched away. The 5th regiment and the remaining two companies of the 6th regiment, with the two guns in their possession, have taken service with his highness. Accordingly, they have removed into the lines in the Kampoo. The two guns with two companies are out with the Maharaja's troops, ready to give the Moorarians a licking should they attempt to kick up a disturbance. There are now at Moorar three regiments of infantry and five companies of artillery, in all about 3,000 men. They have promised to leave within six days. The Maharaja has sent them plenty of conveyance, but they still require more. The Indore mutineers appear to be still at the Chumbul, but the cosail will be able to give you particulars on that subject. The mutineers from Moorar talk of going vid Agra to Delhi, but they have no pluck, 400 or 500 Europeans would suffice to lick them, and take away every gun and musket they possess. I don't think they will be able to take away all their ammunition: they say that they will destroy what they cannot take away.

HATRASS, 15th Sept.—All well. Three Sowars, formerly chuprassies of Government, were executed, as it was proved that they had taken part with Ghous Mahommed in the battle against us. Mr. Daniell had visited Allygurb, and found everything in excellent order. A box has been seized belonging to Ghous Mahommed, containing important documents, which may throw light on the mutiny and rebellion.

19th Sept.—The militia cavalry under Captain De Kantzow returned last night, at o'clock nine p.m., from Allyghur, at which place, on their arrival, the usual patrolling through the town was performed to the utmost surprise of the inhabitants. The cavalry passed through the town from the Sassnee to the Delhi gates, and after crossing the latter moved on at a canter for a mile on the Delhi road for the purpose of reconnoitring. Everything appeared to be in perfect order. A gang of Poor-beach fugitives were seen to be making their way homewards from Meerut; on being interrogated by Captain De Kantzow, they were found to be (Malles) gardeners.

HANSI.—The field force of General Van Cortlandt has had some hard work lately. On the 11th Sept. Mungalee was taken and plundered. On the 12th, they moved out to the assistance of Oomera, a Jat village, threatened by the Jumalpoore rebels in revenge for the destruction of Mungalee. On seeing the cavalry, the enemy retired; in the evening the force returned to Hansi; the enemy then came on with their guns, but the Jats stood firm and beat them off. On the 13th, the field force moved to attack Jumalpoore, the mutineers fired about ten shots at long distances and then bolted, their cavalry, about 800 strong, protecting their rear. The cavalry of the field force was too tired to continue the pursuit beyond Jumalpoore, which was plundered and burnt to the ground. The whole of the cavalry and 600 of the infantry have marched a distance of eighty miles in three days. Latest accounts say that the force was to move on the 16th towards Bowany to destroy several rebel Ranghur villages in that direction; it will remain out in the district for some days.

HOSHUNGABAD, 7th Oct.—A detachment of the 28th Madras N.I., with two guns, will leave this station to-morrow, to oppose some rebels who are threatening Hurda, which is about fifty-seven miles distant.

JOUDPORE, Sept. 26.—The mutinous Joudpoore legion have not made much progress towards Delhi; they have joined a disorderly thakoor of a place called Awah, not far from Palee. Two unsuccessful attacks have been made on them, first by the troops of the Joudpoore state, who were defeated, with the loss of their six guns; and a second by a small force under General Lawrence. The first appears to have been by an army without a general, the second by a general without an army; but, I presume, the importance of doing something promptly led to the first attempt, and the necessity of repairing the failure to the second, without waiting for further reinforcements. The general was preparing to renew the attack, but it is reported in camp this morning that the enemy have bolted in a fright. We are impatiently expecting the wing of the 89th here, to enable the remaining three companies of the 83rd to go on towards Nusseerabad. The little garrison of Neemuch have marched out and defeated a gathering of vagabonds at Nimbarah, storming and plundering their village. If there is to be a wing of European infantry at Nusseerabad, and another at Neemuch, with a few guns, they will soon settle the unquiet spirits in Rajpootana. The principal chiefs all remain faithful and friendly, and, indeed, have as much to fear as we have from this epidemic disloyalty. Captain Monck Mason, resident of Joudpoore, was unfortunately cut down and killed, by a sower of the insurgents, whilst walking about alone about 300 yards from General Lawrence's camp. The 1st cavalry (lancers), and the squadron of the 2nd at Neemuch, are said to have behaved admirably at Awah and Nimbarah.

JUBBULPORE.—The advance-guard of the Madras column (which consisted of 400 men of the 33rd Madras N.I., the rifle company of the 1st Madras N.I. 1 troop of the 4th Madras light cavalry, and 4 guns with European gunners), on approaching Kuttingee (10 miles from Jubbulpore) en route from Dumoh to the latter station, came upon the mutinous Bengal 52nd, drawn up in columns of sections on the high road. Major Jenkins, Quartermaster general of the force, and Lieutenant Watson, of the 33rd Madras N.I., who were riding ahead of the advance-guard, had a narrow escape; the latter officer was fired at, the ball grazed his cheek, he spurred his horse to charge the man, when his horse fell; he however, managed to remount, and, with Major Jenkins, made the best of his way back to the main body. On the column coming in sight of the 52nd, the guns were ordered to the front, and opened fire, but with what effect as regards killed and wounded is not said; however, the 52nd retired, and on the column pursuing fled in all directions. On arriving at Kuttingee, which was the head quarters of the mutineers, the body of poor Lieutenant McGregor of the 52nd, was found with one ball through the neck, both arms broken, and his body perforated with thirty or forty bayonet wounds. It was taken into Jubbulpore and there buried. A havildar of the rifles caught a wounded havildar of the 52nd, who offered him 100 rupees to kill him outright. He was brought in and with another wounded man of the 52nd was strung up on the nearest tree. On him was found 100 rupees, 15 gold mohurs, and a bar of gold. He had been pay havildar of his company. In the fight between the Madras column and the 52nd Bengallees, the latter lost 150 killed. 125 bodies were counted, but a prisoner stated the former number was the correct "bag;" the country being very jungly, no one can tell how many were wounded and got away. On the Madras side one trumpeter was killed and about 50 wounded. Major Erskine had previously offered 8,000 rupees for the release of McGregor, but it was refused; they preferred to kill him.

KAMPTEE, Sept. 29.—The 4th light cavalry left this for Jubbulpore on the 23rd instant, and the 6th cavalry marched in here two or three days before; the former lost two horses in crossing the river. About fourteen miles from Saugor, there has been a brush with the mutineers and rebels; Colonel Dalzell, of the Bengal 42nd, was shot through the head and died soon after; Lieut. Prior, son of the brigadier commanding here, was wounded in both legs on this occasion, but I believe not dangerously. Colonel Halpin has arrived here from Hoshungabad to assume command of the 26th regt., and Col. Holl, who was removed some time ago to the 28th N.I., is still here. Dr. Porter, late of the 26th regt., and who accompanied the movable column to Jubbulpore, died there on the 17th instant, much regretted; he died of an abscess in the liver. All quiet here and at Seetabuldee, from the examples that have been made; they have had a most salutary effect, and considerably cowed the scoundrels in the city and elsewhere. Brigadier Prior's wife died here on the 23rd, very suddenly, much regretted by all. Some of the fugitives from Saugor and elsewhere have found their way here in safety.

We learn from Secunderabad, that a force, composed of a troop of H.M.'s 12th lancers, the 7th Madras cavalry, and the 2nd regiment cavalry Hyderabad contingent, have been ordered to proceed to Kamptee with as little delay as possible. It is supposed there is plenty of work cut out for the Kamptee brigade. The following further particulars regarding this force are supplied by another correspondent at Secunderabad, whose letter is dated the 27th September:—"Two squadrons of the 7th Madras light cavalry, the Rissalah under Captain Macintire, Hyderabad contingent, and a troop of the 12th lancers, with Captain Harkness and Lieutenant Blount, all under the command of Major Blogg, 7th light cavalry, march to-morrow morning towards Kamptee, in consequence of something fresh having sprung up between Jubbulpore and Dumoh, or rather at Jubbulpore, after the movable column under Colonel Millar passed through en route to Saugor. I believe they had a tussle with a large body of Boondelas near Dumoh, and of course gave them a terrible thrashing."

LAHORE.—A small force has moved from Lahore, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Paton, assistant quartermaster-general, towards Googaira, the deputy-commissioner of that place having ascertained that a plundering expedition was meditated by the cattle-stealing Belooch tribes, the Phurruhs and Khatteahs, &c.; that they were collecting on the right bank of the Ravee, opposite to Googaira. Capt. Elphinstone, the deputy commissioner, reports since, of his having moved out on the 17th Sept., and attacked and dispersed a gathering of them, taking seventy prisoners and 700 head of cattle; and that he had destroyed their village; and on being joined by the detachment of Capt. Wild's cavalry (detached from Lahore), he would have little difficulty in securing the Khereef chief and other ringleaders. They are a contemptible set of thieves, and did not stand to see a shot fired. Ahmed Khan has since sued for pardon. All quiet elsewhere in the Panjaub.

A letter from Googaira, dated the 21st Sept., mentions the defeat of the insurgents and death of Ahmed Khan, the chief of the Wuttoo clan.

On the 24th, at two hours before daybreak, the force under Major Voyle and Capt. Tronson, consisting of 80 sowars and 100 infantry levies, was attacked at Sahooka, on the Sutlej, by 1,000 insurgents of the Jumlera and other clans. They were repulsed twice by the steady fire of the sowars and levies. At daybreak the village of Jumlera was attacked, all the males killed, the cattle seized, and village burned. The force was to advance next day to Pakpattan.

Major Hamilton writes from Mooltan, Sept. 28:—"The Googaira insurgents defeated at Cheechawutnee on the 25th, with considerable loss. In a former engagement they suffered considerable loss, but I am sorry to say that Mr. Berkeley, extra assistant, Googaira, was killed, fighting gallantly, after having cut down six men with his own hand."

LUCKNOW.—Letters from Lucknow received in General Havelock's camp on the 20th September, state that the last attempt of the mutineers to destroy our brave garrison at the residency, was very nearly succeeding; when it was defeated by our soldiers taking up shells in their hands, with lighted fuses in them, and throwing them over their intrenchment into the crowd of assailants; then several of them burst, and sent the mutineers away howling.

The following is an extract from Mr. Sherer's letter, dated Cawnpore 1st of October, 10 p.m.:—

"Letters just in from Lucknow. Bellee Guard relieved on the 25th, and garrison rescued apparently by an advance made on the left of the Goomtee.

"Progress being already made towards the possession of the whole city.

"On the 29th the right quarter occupied and seven guns taken.

"Man Singh, contrary to expectation, has taken an active part against us, and has, I am glad to say, been wounded in two places."

The Indian Government communicate the annexed memorandum of news.

"The force under General Havelock, skirting the city, forced their way to the residency against strong opposition, and relieved the brave garrison on the evening of the 25th. The relief was providentially just in time; as subsequent examination showed that two mines, all ready for loading, had been run far under our chief works, which, if sprung, must have placed the garrison at the mercy of the rebels. On the 26th, the batteries of the besiegers were assaulted and taken, and the ex-king's sons fled towards Fyzabad.

"The loss has been heavy. The brave and determined General Neill is, alas! killed; also Cooper, of the artillery; Webster, 78th foot; Packenham, 84th; Bateman, 64th; and Warren, 12th L.C.; The enemy are deserting the city in thousands."

MEERUT, Sept. 19.—At midnight on the 17th, Major Stokes and Lieut. Armstrong, with 210 Afghan and Mooltan horse, accompanied by Capt. Craige, with about 100 irregular cavalry, went out on a secret expedition along the Delhi road. At sunrise on the following morning they surrounded the village of Mooradnuggur, about half-way between Meerut and Delhi, where the enemy's cavalry had established themselves in force.

Secretly as everything was arranged, the enemy were not completely taken by surprise. Some 200 of them were ready mounted outside the village, and the remainder defended the place from inside; however, after hard fighting, the enemy were defeated and driven out of the village, and the place burnt, but not until fifty-seven of their number were cut up and several taken prisoners. Our people had nine killed and wounded. Amongst the number, I am sorry to say, was Lieut. Armstrong, who received three severe sword-cuts, but is doing well. His gallantry was conspicuous throughout the affair. The man who cut him down was killed by the jemadar of the Afghan troop. Thus ended a very successful "chupao," in which the insurgent cavalry were taught a severe lesson. A very gallant fellow, by name Peetee Sing, formerly in the 11th N.I., has been, I fear, mortally wounded in this affair. He is the man who saved Mrs. Shelley's life the night of the Meerut outbreak, and has since been promoted to a high grade in Craige's new horse, where he has done good service.

The Afghan horse brought back lots of loot in the shape of horses and cattle of every description.

MEHIDPORE.—A letter from Mhow, dated the 10th Oct., informs us that on that day the stations of Biowapoor and Mehidpoor were plundered and burnt by some rebellious Pathans and Afghans in the service of the Rajahs of Dhar and Angheria.

MIRZAPORE.—The naval brigade passed this with their toys, the 68-pounders, a few days ago, en route for Allahabad. A wing of the 17th M.N.I., with two guns and eighty-five Europeans, left this day or two ago to look after the 6th irregular cavalry and Umcer Sing's rabble. They—that is our force—were recalled this morning, although the rebels were only a short distance off. The men of the 50th B.N.I. who came in with their officers have been sent on leave for three months. The officers of that regiment are still at this station. The river has fallen very much, and is still falling rapidly. I am afraid that by the time troops arrive in Calcutta they will not be able to proceed higher than this place in steamers.

NAGODE.—Two more of the Bengal regiments are gone. On the night of the 16th, the 50th N.I., stationed at Nagode, Bundelcund, mutinied, and on the night of the 10th September the 52nd at Jubbulpore mutinied. On the 14th, information was received at Nagode that the Dinapore and Ramghur mutineers, with Koor Sing's rabble, had left Banda for Nagode. On the 15th, they were within twenty miles, and the native officers declared that the men would fight; and so accordingly a position was taken up on the bank of the nullah. The spare ammunition was thrown into a well by the regimental classics (tent-pitchers), assisted by the sepoy, and other preparations were made. About nine o'clock p.m. of the 16th, the collector sent up to say that the rebels were close by, and would be down on us in the morning. The regiment was paraded, and 400 stand of arms broken up in presence of the sepoy. The two 6-pounders were spiked, and the regiment marched towards the camp. When we got to the camp, the commanding officer determined to take the regiment on. We got about two hundred yards, when a sepoy on the advance guard gave the order to halt and order arms, which was obeyed by the regiment. Nothing would make them stir; and when we heard the clicking of their gunlocks, the muskets being loaded, we thought it time to be off. Not a shot was fired at us. One officer who was on foot was being pushed about, and a man proposed shooting him, but the others said, "Let him go." After knocking about for fifteen days, we arrived here (Mirzapore) with 250 of all ranks, who followed us.

The mutineers returned to Nagode, distributed the magazine equally to the 7th, 8th, and 40th regiments, and Ramghur battalion, who marched in the next day, remained there two days, burnt the bungalows, and then returned to Banda, a scoundrel of a subadar, of the 50th, who wrote and spoke English, being made major-general. They only got Rs. 80,000 from the treasury. All the officers of the regiment got safe in, nor was any annoyance experienced on the roads, excepting from the weather. A wing of a Madras regiment is here, with two guns with European gunners, and 100 privates are in the intrenchment. The 47th B.N.I. is also here without their arms.

NYNEE TAL, Sept. 6.—All well here. The last account from Bijore makes me believe that the Hindoos have suffered in a late engagement. I am inclined to attribute their defeat to their having been attacked in detail. After their first victory at Nugeena, they must have separated, instead of keeping in one body.

It is to this failure to combine, and to keep united after a first combination, that I also attribute the want of success of certain Hindoos in Bareilly, who commenced acting offensively, but who, after a first victory at Fureedpore, had to retreat into Shahjehanpore. These men had counted on the combined attack by thakoors on the Rampore side of Bareilly, and by others on the Budaoon side; but both those last parties hung back when the time came. I have only learned this to-day by the mouth of some men who have brought up Rs. 2,000 and 100 gold mohurs from Bareilly. There was no apprehension as to money and supplies at Nainee Tal. The nawab of Rampore continues friendly. Letters from Mahometans were beginning to come in. "So the lesson at Cawnpore has taken effect. "I hear of 150 of the irregulars from Saugor having arrived at Bareilly, but undecided yet as to taking service with Khan Bahadur Khan. "The Hindoos within Bareilly have suffered much in pocket and caste-insult. I learn that a large number of the population have left the town; and now desertion of their house is followed by attachment and sometimes by its destruction."

Sept. 12.—By a letter of that date, everything is reported quiet at Nynee Tal; the Nawab of Rampore, friendly, and assisting us with money. The peace is well kept at Moradabad, and Rampore is very quiet. At Bareilly all as usual; nothing beyond threats against Nynee Tal.

PUNJAUB.—The following is from a correspondent at Mooltan, dated 29th September:—

Intelligence of the plunder of the Tubseel of Hurruppa by marauders of the Khatia and Khurl tribes, and the disaffected state of the country generally, having reached the commissioner of Mooltan, speedy arrangements were immediately made for quelling the disturbance and punishing the insurgents.

Captain Fraser, assistant commissioner, Mooltan, with 80 sowars of the 1st irregular cavalry, was ordered to proceed to Hurruppa, and Major Voyle, deputy commissioner Mooltan, and Captain Tronson, captain of police, with 100 sowars of the mounted police, to the Salt Lines on the Sutlej. Captain Fraser's instructions were to punish the insurgents, and to open the communication between this and Lahore (which was interrupted).

Major Voyle was sent to inquire into the cause of the desertion of the men from the Salt Line chowkees, to pursue marauders, and to preserve peace.

Major Chamberlain, commanding the irregular cavalry, shortly after joined Captain Fraser with another detachment of 100 sabres, when they commenced their pursuit. At Cheechawutnee (a place seventy-nine miles from Mooltan) they met with the rebels, who had collected in great numbers, and who offered a stout resistance. After a sharp fight, Major Chamberlain was compelled to retreat into the serai with his men, and defend himself there till reinforcements reached. The marauders destroyed the furniture of the dawk bungalow at Cheechawutnee, and committed other damage, after which they proceeded to Kumalia, a town on the right bank of the Ravee. Major Chamberlain, on being reinforced by the remainder of his men from Mooltan, recommenced the pursuit, and succeeded in killing sixty of the rebels.

Major Voyle and Captain Tronson met with no opposition; but, being informed that a body of rebels were collected at Jumlera, a place situated on the Salt Line, they immediately repaired thither. They were, however, attacked on their arrival by 1,000 men, but succeeded in dispersing the insurgents. They fired the village of Jumlera, putting to the sword all the males found in it.

Ahmed Khan Khurl, the chief of the Khurl tribe, and the principal actor in these disturbances, has been slain, with his son and a large number of his followers.

The Khatias and Khurls are cultivators, and inhabit the jungle Bar; but they chiefly lead a nomad life. They possess extensive herds of cattle. They were always troublesome under the native rulers, but since our supremacy have behaved better, though they still indulge in their predilection for cattle-lifting.

Mr. Berkeley, the extra assistant of Googaira, was killed in the jungle Bar, whither he had pursued a body of the rebels. This tract is most inhospitable, as water is scarce, and provisions must be carried; a journey through it is attended with much danger without guides, as the wayfarer is liable to lose his way.

RAJPOOTANA.—We extract the following from a Nussseerabad letter:—

"The little station of Beawr was thrown into much confusion, as it was generally supposed, that the Joudpore mutineers intended paying the residents a visit. Before reinforcements could arrive, however, they thought better of their intentions, and have gone off to, and are encamped under the walls of a place called Awah in the Joudpore territory, about sixty-five miles from Beawr. The thakoor of Awah (an outlaw of the Joudpore state) has called upon these mutineers for their assistance to fight for him against the rajah of that place. The general and his staff, 3 guns, 180 H.M.'s 83rd, and 150 M.L.B. arrived at Beawr from Ajmere on the night of the 1st Oct., and move off in the direction of Awah on the 6th.

"Report has it that Neemuch is in a very anxious state. It is a very fortunate circumstance that Delhi is about to fall, if it were not so, the chances are that that station would again be the scene of another outbreak, possibly accompanied this time by bloodshed, the districts around being in a state of fermentation."—Delhi Gazette Extra.

SAUGOR.—The country for ten miles round Saugor is clear, but beyond that there are the Baupoor and Shaghurajahs and the Jhansi rance in open rebellion. The Shaghur rajah has in his possession Captain and Mrs. Irwin and two children, Captain Sale, Dr. O'Brien, Mr. Gordon, and a sergeant and his wife who escaped from Lullutpore to the Thigree rance, thinking she was friendly, but who made them run to the Shaghur rajah, who will not allow them to come in, but treats them kindly, I hear. The Jhansi rance paid the mutinous troops their Rs. 25,000 for murdering all the Europeans.—8th Sept.

Sept. 26.—We have been shut up in this small native fort since the 27th June, without receiving any assistance, though we have been expecting some all the time. Our garrison consists of one hundred and twenty-three fighting men, of which sixty-three are European gunners, and the remainder officers, clerks, Indo-Britons and Christians, and we have to defend an immense arsenal with all its stores, and one hundred and ninety women and children. We have suffered a great deal from the overcrowding, which has caused much sickness and many deaths. Neither the Madras column at Jubbulpore, nor the Bombay column at Mhow, has given us any assistance.

SHIKARPORE, Sept. 24.—"Shortly after the firing commenced, several mounted policemen were galloping about from house to house, warning the European and Christian inhabitants to rendezvous at the gaol, to which place most of the ladies made their way, grape and canister flying about in all directions, but providentially not a single soul was hurt. We were all assembled in the gaol, with heavy hearts, not knowing at what moment a stray shot would come in amongst us. After two hours of the most painful anxiety, during which time upwards of thirty rounds of shot were fired, we were made aware that the guns were recaptured, and that all was quiet. An express had been despatched to Jacobabad by the collector at commencement of the row, and within three hours a squadron of the Scinde horse was heard thundering down,—they are still at Shikarpore. Last night also the ladies slept in the gaol; a strong guard of the police and Scinde horse patrolled all over the cantonments. One of the rebels was caught and brought in about ten o'clock last night; some of us went to see what sort of a brute he was—he was heavily fettered and hand-cuffed, a fierce looking fellow he was; one of the ladies had the courage to go up to him, shake her tiny fist in his face, and call him a Caffre. An express was received yesterday that a detachment of the 1st Fusiliers had arrived at Sukkur; the collector obtained the permission of the brigadier to send down the artillery waggons for them; they came in this morning, and were met outside the cantonment by nearly all the European inhabitants, ladies included; the band of the 16th N.I. played them in to the tune of "Cheer, boys, cheer." The arrival of this small band of "Toughs" has inspired such confidence in the minds of all, that if the whole of the natives here were to rise, the Christians are now prepared to annihilate them."

We have letters from Sukkur stating that all the females at that place are preparing to leave for Kurrachee. We wish those at Shikarpore would follow their example, as the authorities would have less anxiety on their minds if the ladies were all in a place of safety.—Sindian.

SINGBHOO.—Letters from Singbhoon state, that the party of the Ramghur Battalion, stationed at Chybassa, elude the vigilance of the Rajah of Seraikela, looted the treasury, and set out for Ranchi. The Rajah of Porahat must have connived at this move, and he let them pass quickly through his territory, but the loyal Rajah of Seraikela with others is trying to keep the passes against them. Should Lieut. Birch arrive in time, the treasure may yet be saved, and the mutineers meet with condign punishment.

THE LATE MR. JOHN COLVIN.

Those who have met during their career with the full reward to which their talents entitled them, whose name and labours have suffered no loss from the blight of prejudice or passion, seldom after their death meet with that applause which followed them through life, still less frequently are their memories cherished, or is that affectionate interest felt in their acts, now irremediable, which attends the deeds of those who have passed through a more troubled career or endured greater vicissitudes of fortune. Such has been their success in life, that it is felt they have met with their reward, and, except in rare instances, their fame never follows them to the tomb. They step from their closet to the grave, the official position which they dignified is filled up, and their loss is but felt by those intimately connected with them in the duties of their office, or by their own immediate circle of relations and acquaintance. And there is justice in this meting out of the world's approbation. Such men have possessed the highest honours which their talents have rendered them capable of possessing; they have suffered nothing from injustice; the world has nothing for which to grant compensation, probably very much to forgive; and in permitting the fortunate recipient of its highest honours, which have been denied to many men of greater abilities and greater worth, to pass away in silence, it continues to act benevolently towards the late receivers of its bounties, and to treat them with the greatest tenderness and consideration.

But two months ago it devolved upon us to give a sketch of the life of that administrator, statesman, and soldier, Sir Henry Lawrence, whose death has been so deeply deplored in this country, and whose memory has been so tardily honoured by its Government; and now we are again called upon to make some mention, short though it must be, of the acts and administration of the late Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces. Probably there are but few men in India that have arrived at the same height of office, and have earned such a reputation as the late Mr. John Colvin, who have left so little material for a biography, or whose actions are in the retrospect so disproportionate to the position that they have achieved. But this he owes both to the time of his death and to the man whom he succeeded in office. To the time of his death, inasmuch as that it follows that of Sir Henry Lawrence, in recording whose life we were bewildered by the multiplicity of the actions of the great man that claimed our attention; to the man whom he succeeded, because the character of Mr. Thomason was such that it endeared him to all English residents in India, and his abilities were of a character that commanded respect. But there are some traits of Mr. Colvin's character that are worth noticing, and which were apparent to those who knew him but officially. He was an eminently sincere man; but his sincerity was marked by a reserve which gave him an appearance of hauteur manifestly out of place with his position, and enabled his enemies to accuse him of pride. Sincerity, however, is a rare virtue in a man whose duties naturally bring him into contact oftentimes with men of but mediocre ability, with whom it is politic to stand well; and Mr. John Colvin deserves credit for this virtue, which far outweighs any, the heaviest charge, that might be brought against him on the score of assumption.

Mr. Colvin's first post of distinction was private secretary to Lord Auckland; and it was to his influence, with that of Mr. H. Torrens, Sir William McNaghten, and Sir Alexander Burnes, that the Afghan war in 1839 was attributed; but he always disclaimed all responsibility in the matter; and to this we have ever borne testimony; and we can now reiterate the assurance we made in 1853—"that no portion of the discredit of the weakest reign known in India since Vansittart quitted Council, ever attached to him." After Lord Auckland went home, Mr. Colvin took furlough. On his return he was sent up to inquire into a conspiracy at Patna, and he was then appointed resident at Nepal. He was from Nepal appointed to succeed Colonel, then Major, Durand as commissioner of the Tenasserim provinces; and it was in that office that he did more to establish his reputation than at any previous period of his life. He had a difficult part to play. Major Durand's administration had been a stormy one; and to Mr. Colvin was given the task of closing up old wounds. In this, as in other matters, he was perfectly successful. From this post he was removed to the Sudder Court, and soon acquired a predominant influence, and was appointed provisional member of the Legislative Council. On the 4th of October, 1853, after the death of Mr. Thomason, he was appointed by Lord Dalhousie Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces. The first impression amongst those residing in the North-West Provinces at the appointment was one of annoyance. It was supposed that the Lieutenant-governor would have been selected from the local civil service; and the absence of Sir Henry Elliott, who had been distinctly marked out by public opinion for the office, was deplored.

But the career of Mr. J. R. Colvin since 1853 has in a measure justified the wisdom and discrimination of Lord Dalhousie. It was generally supposed that Mr. Thomason had neglected the judicial administration of the North-West for the financial; and it was thought that the peculiar character and intellectual bias of the newly-appointed lieutenant-governor would correct this. Perhaps the anticipations of the late Governor-General would have been realized, had it not been for the insurrection, which has thoroughly disorganized some of the fairest of the provinces of British India, and bids fair, even after the cessation of hostilities and the restoration of comparative order, to give us not a little trouble and involve us in considerable perplexities.

What Mr. Colvin effected for the North-West Provinces during his administration, was shown by his report for 1855-56. Criminal trials were rendered just half as tedious as those in Bengal, the practice of receiving confession was discontinued, private executions were introduced, the police were reformed and their pay increased, a special detective force was introduced into the larger cities, education was promoted, and the village zemindars, raised but little in position above the richer ryots of Bengal, voluntarily imposed an educational cess.

It is an evil thing when the labours of years have been swept away, when the energies of such men as Mr. Thomason and the judicial capacity of such as Mr. Colvin have been thrown away; but this has happened, and when next we reform the North-West Provinces of our empire, we shall almost be more disadvantageously placed than at their first acquirement. The records have all been swept away, the labours of years have been lost, and we may with perfect safety say, that the descendants of those who have been most criminal in the present rebellion will not for many years, if ever, achieve their former position. Doubtless it was this sense of a life's labour exhausted that weighed upon the spirits of Mr. Colvin, who in Agra as in Nepal scarcely showed himself equal to great emergencies. There are some men who rise superior to all difficulties, whom danger and threatened loss rouse to a feeling of personal indignation, and who are ever most to be dreaded when most hardly pressed. Mr. Colvin was not such a man; and though we have the greatest respect for his abilities, yet they were not of a high order, nor was his will such as readily to command that of others. He had a large circle of friends and admirers, was an upright man, with great and honest zeal for the public service. He did not possess that affability and urbanity of Mr. Thomason which enabled him by a few pertinent questions and observations to gain the affections of the officials with whom he might come in contact, and make a native doctor or a tehsildar of a village friends of the Government by being personal friends to himself; nor did he possess the minute knowledge of his predecessor, which enabled him at a glance to detect the deficiencies and point out the excellences in the administration of any district he might visit. These and such like qualities, that betoken genius or force of will, were not possessed by Mr. Colvin, who was plodding rather than brilliant, phlegmatic rather than energetic.—Friend of India, Sept. 24.

THE LONDON MAIL of August 26 arrived at Madras Oct. 2, and Calcutta Oct. 6 (per Bentinck).

THE 4TH PUNJAB CAVALRY has been ordered down to Dera Ghazee Khan. The 3rd Punjab cavalry has gone to Asnee from Ghazee Khan, on this account, to supply their place at this latter station. The 4th Punjab cavalry is marching down. The left wing marched from Dera Ismael Khan a fortnight ago; and the head-quarter wing left last night, on the arrival thither of the 5th Punjab cavalry from Bunnoo. All quite quiet at Dera Ismael Khan. The 10th Punjab infantry is being completed rapidly.

A TRAITOR.—The Moonshee caught tampering with the guard at government house, tried to escape, having slipped off the manacles newly made. So much for the precautions taken by the fort authorities for the escape of a prisoner under sentence of death, for which an unfortunate officer was tried some short time ago; these manacles are still made too large; the Moonshee, however, was closely pursued by the European sentry, although it was a very dark night, so much so that the prisoner in his fright dashed up against a brick wall, which brought him to the ground. For better security the Moonshee is now placed in the solitary cells; this man, if convicted, as a matter of course, will suffer death, for the crime is unpardonable; inciting to mutiny and massacre is far too serious to be overlooked in the present or at any other time. A sepoy of the third company of the 70th N.I., another harmless Mahomedan, is under trial also for being mixed up in the same matter.

EUROPEAN CAVALRY.—The military train corps, numbering 260 men, came down from Calcutta to Dum-Dum yesterday, the 22nd Sept. The horses of the 8th Madras light cavalry were in waiting for the men at Howrah, and the corps was to proceed up-country by rail this morning, and have doubtless started. We wish them every luck, and only hope that the chances of war will give them a chance of paying off the 5th irregulars in the Behar country. It is exceedingly fortunate, considering the aspect of matters in Behar, that this fine body of mounted Europeans was at hand. Their presence in the disturbed districts is calculated to be of incalculable value.—Phoenix.

SIR W. WISEMAN.—We learn, says the Phoenix, that Sir W. Wiseman, Bart., has been ordered to proceed to Galle by the next steamer, to superintend the despatch of all troop ships arriving there. Sir W. Wiseman belongs to the royal navy, and is in command of H.M. steamer Penelope.

THE "PRESS."—A new Saturday evening journal, to be entitled The Press, is shortly to be published in Calcutta, in connection with the Bengal Hurkaru. The new journal will comprise all topics of discussion, and its columns will also contain carefully-selected articles of literary and readable matter. The rate of subscription is to be twenty rupees per annum.

COLONEL HUGH FRASER, C.B., of the Bengal engineers, has been appointed chief commissioner of such parts of the north-western provinces as are comprised in the Agra, Delhi, Meerut, and Rohilkund divisions, and in the districts of Ajmere, Mhairwarra, Nimar, and Neemuch. Colonel Fraser is at present at Agra, where he officiates as chief engineer. This officer served as commanding engineer with the expedition to Burmah, and was present at the capture of Rangoon and the operations in its vicinity, in April 1852. For his services on this occasion, Colonel Fraser received a medal, was made a brevet lieutenant-colonel, and created a companion of the Bath.

A HOMOEOPATHIC POLICE.—We have heard, says the Hurkaru, from an authentic source, that it is in the contemplation of Government to raise a native corps from the residents of Bengal, particularly from the class of the lattials, who are to be trained up in military tactics for the better protection of the districts in the presidency of Bengal. We further learn that a detachment of three hundred of these men will be placed under the orders of each district magistrate. Their pay will vary from six to seven rupees a month.

THE RANEEGUNGE BRIGADE.—We learn from the Englishman that the command of the Raneeunge brigade, formed for service in the Behar province, consisting of the military train, headquarters H.M.'s 53rd regiment, two guns Madras horse artillery, with detachment of Madras sappers and 27th Madras N. I., has been conferred on Colonel Berkeley, of H.M.'s 32nd regiment, late of the Scots Fusilier Guards. Colonel Berkeley was military secretary to Lieut.-General Sir George Berkeley, during the successful operations against the Kaffirs in 1847 (medal.) He also served in the Crimean campaign of 1854-5, and was severely wounded at the battle of the Alma (medal and clasp.)

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

REMOVAL OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN FROM CENTRAL PROVINCES.

"From Lieut.-Col. Strachey, Secretary, Government, Central Provinces, to H. C. Tucker, Esq. Commissioner.

"Camp, Benares, Sept. 13, 1857.

"Sir,—With reference to the orders of Government of India communicated to you in my docket No. 208, dated 8th instant, directing that all European women and children should be immediately removed from stations in the central provinces, I am directed to inform you that it is the desire of the Lieutenant-Governor that the opportunities afforded by the steamers which will return from Allahabad in a few days shall be taken advantage of for the purpose of despatching the women and children down the river.

"2. The magistrates at all stations in your division will immediately proceed to carry out these instructions, which are understood to be peremptory.

"3. Every endeavour will be made to effect the objects aimed at in a quiet and peaceable manner, but if it be necessary the magistrate will call upon the officer commanding the troops on the spot to enforce obedience to the order of the Governor-General in Council."

THE DELHI MAGAZINE.

"The Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased, in anticipation of the sanction of the Hon. the Court of Directors, to make the following promotions of officers and non-commissioned officers of the ordnance commissariat department in consideration of their eminent gallantry on the occasion of the blowing up of the Delhi Magazine:—

Ordnance Commissariat Department.

To rank from the 11th May, 1857.

"Lieutenant W. Raynor, veteran establishment, deputy commissary of ordnance, to be captain on the veteran establishment.

"Lieutenant G. Forrest, veteran establishment, assistant commissary of ordnance, to be captain on the veteran establishment.

"Conductors G. W. Shaw, J. Buckley, and J. Scully, to be deputy assistant commissaries of ordnance—to be supernumerary on the establishment until further orders.

"Officiating Sub-conductor W. Crow to be conductor, and Sergeants Edwards and Stewart to be sub-conductors and supernumerary on the establishment until further orders."

CHAPLAINS' LEAVE.

Fort William, Financial Department, Sept. 18, 1857.—The following extract, from a despatch from the hon. the Court of Directors, No. 53, of 1857, dated the 5th August, is published for general information:—

Par. 1.—We answer this question affirmatively, the privilege leaves being available to chaplains for one month after five months' service, and therefore by analogy for three months after fifteen months' continuous service, if the leave be accumulated.*

By order of the right hon. the Governor-General of India in Council.

C. HUGH LUSHINGTON,
Sec. to the Gov. of India.

PRIVILEGED LEAVE, CIVIL SERVICE.

Fort William, Financial Department, Sept. 25, 1857.—The Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council, has been pleased to direct that the provisions contained in the financial notification of the 5th December, 1856, No. 55, whereby a civil servant can obtain privilege leave by instalments, within six months from the expiration of the last instalment taken, provided the leave is granted in the same calendar year, shall be held applicable to uncovenanted as well as to covenanted civil servants.

C. HUGH LUSHINGTON,
Sec. to the Gov. of India.

TRANSFER OF SULKEEAH.

Fort William, Home Department, Oct. 2, 1857.—Under the provisions of Act No. XXI. of 1836, the right hon. the Governor-General in Council sanctions the transfer of thannah Sulkeeah, situated on the west or right bank of the Hooghly river, opposite to Calcutta, from the zillah of the 24-pergunnahs to the zillah of Hooghly.

CECIL BEADON,
Sec. to the Gov. of India.

CAPTURE OF DELHI.

"Fort William, Oct. 2, 1857.—Notification.—The Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council has received, by a telegraphic message, the gratifying announcement that Delhi is entirely in the hands of Major-General Wilson's army.

"Delhi, the focus of the treason and revolt which for four months have harassed Hindostan, and the stronghold in which the mutinous army of Bengal has sought to concentrate its power, has been wrested from the rebels. The king is a prisoner in the palace. The head-quarters of Major-General Wilson are established in the Dewan Khas. A strong column is in pursuit of the fugitives.

"Whatever may be the motives and passions by which the mutinous soldiery, and those who are leagued with them, have been instigated to faithlessness, rebellion, and crimes at which the heart sickens, it is certain that they have found encouragement in the delusive belief that India was weakly guarded by England, and that before the Government could gather its strength against them, their ends would be gained.

"They are now undeceived.

"Before a single soldier, of the many thousand who are hastening from England to uphold the supremacy of the British power has set foot on these shores, the rebel force where it was strongest and most united, and where it had the command of unbounded military appliances, has been destroyed or scattered by an army collected within the limits of the North-Western Provinces and the Punjab alone.

"The work has been done before the support of those battalions which have been collected in Bengal from the forces of the Queen in China, and in her Majesty's eastern colonies, could reach Major-General Wilson's army; and it is by the courage and endurance of that gallant army alone; by the skill, sound judgment, and steady resolution of its brave commander; and by the aid of some native chiefs, true to their allegiance, that, under the blessing of God, the head of rebellion has been crushed, and the cause of loyalty, humanity, and rightful authority vindicated.

* Letter from, dated Jan. 23, 1857, No. 12.—With reference to par. 9 of the Court's despatch, No. 84, of 1856, solicit instructions in respect to a question raised by the Government of Bombay, whether a chaplain or assistant chaplain can be allowed accumulated privilege leave for three months after fifteen months' continuous service.

"The Governor-General in Council hopes that the receipt of despatches from Major General Wilson will soon place it in his power to make known the details of the operations against Delhi, and to record, fully and publicly, the thanks and commendation which are due to the officers and men, by whose guidance, courage, and exertions, those operations have been brought to a successful issue.

"But the Governor-General in Council will not postpone till then his grateful acknowledgment of the services which have been rendered to the empire at this juncture, by the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab.

"To Sir John Lawrence, K.C.B., it is owing, that the army before Delhi, long ago cut off from all direct support from the Lower Provinces, has been constantly recruited and strengthened so effectually as to enable its commander not only to hold his position unshaken, but to achieve a complete success.

"To Sir John Lawrence's unceasing vigilance, and to his energetic and judicious employment of the trustworthy forces at his own disposal, it is due that Major-General Wilson's army has not been harassed or threatened on the side of the Punjab, and that the authority of the Government in the Punjab itself has been sustained and generally respected.

"The Governor-General in Council seizes with pleasure the earliest opportunity of testifying his high appreciation of these great and timely services.

"By order of the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council.

"R. J. H. BIRCH, Colonel,
"Sec. to the Gov. of India, in the Mil. Dep."

RELIEF OF LUCKNOW.

"Fort William, Oct. 2, 1857.—Notification.—The Governor-General in Council rejoices to announce that information has been this day received from Major-General Sir James Outram, G.C.B., showing that the residency at Lucknow was in the possession of Major-General Havelock's force on the 25th ultimo, and that the garrison is saved.

"Rarely has a commander been so fortunate as to relieve, by his success, so many aching hearts, or to reap so rich a reward of gratitude as well deservedly be offered to Major-General Havelock and his gallant band wherever their triumph shall become known.

"The Governor-General in Council tenders to Sir James Outram and to Major-General Havelock his earnest thanks and congratulations upon the joyful result of which a Merciful Providence has made them the chief instruments.

"The Governor-General in Council forbears to observe further upon information which is necessarily imperfect; but he cannot refrain from expressing the deep regret with which he hears of the death of Brigadier-General Neill, of the 1st Madras European fusiliers, of which it is to be feared no doubt exists.

"Brigadier-General Neill, during his short but active career in Bengal, had won the respect and confidence of the Government of India; he had made himself conspicuous as an intelligent, prompt, self-reliant soldier, ready of resource and stout of heart; and the Governor-General in Council offers to the Government and to the army of Madras his sincere condolence upon the loss of one who was an honour to the service of their Presidency.

"By Order of the Governor-General of India in Council,

"R. J. H. BIRCH, Colonel,
"Sect. to the Govt. of India, in the Mil. Dep."

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. WILLIAM WHEELER JASPER OUSELEY, 22ND N.I.

Head-Quarters, Calcutta, Oct. 6, 1857.—At a general court-martial assembled at Dinapore on the 21st day of Sept., 1857, Lieut. W. W. J. Ouseley, 22nd N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—For having, when on duty under arms on the outlying picquets at Dinapore, on or about the 1st of August, 1857, been found drunk.

Finding.—Guilty.

Sentence.—To be cashiered.

"Approved and confirmed."

(Signed) C. CAMPBELL, General,
Commander-in-Chief.

Recommendation to Mercy.—The Court recommended Lieut. Ouseley to the favourable consideration of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India, on account of the recent exposure, hardships, and excessive anxiety of mind he had undergone, without food for days, and in the hourly expectation of being murdered, and also on account of his youth and inexperience.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.—The Commander-in-Chief regrets that the court-martial by which Lieut. Ouseley was tried and convicted, should have thought fit to make a recommendation, to which, in the rightful execution of his duty, it is absolutely impossible for his Excellency to listen.

How could the commander-in-chief enforce strict duty from a sentry, if he were to overlook an act of disgraceful and outrageous drunkenness in an officer actually commanding an outlying picquet.

Officers when sitting on a court-martial should reflect well before they throw on the commander-in-chief the painful duty of neglecting a recommendation to mercy.

Lieutenant Ouseley will be struck off the strength of the army, from date of publication of this order at Dinapore, of which a report is to be made to the deputy adjutant-general of the army.

(Signed) C. CAMPBELL, General,
Commander-in-Chief.

MADRAS.

DEATH OF GENERAL CLOUGH.—The Madras Spectator announces the death of Major-General John Clough, of the Madras army, colonel of the 28th M.N.I., which occurred at Bangalore on the 3rd October. The late Major-General Clough served in the first Burmese war, and was present at the attack of the Burmese on the lines of Rangoon in 1824. For his services he received the India medal for Ava. His commissions bear date as follows:—Ensign, 6th April, 1820; lieutenant, 7th April, 1820; captain, 10th January, 1829; major, 28th June, 1838; lieutenant-colonel, 2nd October, 1842; brevet-colonel, 10th May, 1853; colonel, 16th November, 1854; and major-general, 28th November, 1854.

BANGALORE.—The barracks and all other public works at this station have been ordered to be suspended until such time as a place of refuge, in the event of necessity, for the garrison, has been formed. Similar arrangements, we presume, will at once be made at all our other stations where they are actually required.

DEATH OF CAPTAIN HAY.—We regret to announce the death, at Government House, early on the morning of the 14th Sept., from dysentery, of Capt. J. W. Hay, H.M.'s 70th Foot, military secretary to the Right Hon. the Governor. His remains were interred in the evening in St. Mary's burial ground, with military honours.

THE FRENCH IN THE RED SEA.—The French are about, it is understood, to secure a settlement at the seaport of Eed, on the African shore of the Red Sea, where they have long coveted the possession of a position. What they can want with it is difficult to understand, unless with the view of keeping an eye on Aden.

12TH LANCERS.—The depôt and families of H.M.'s 12th royal lancers have been ordered to proceed to Bombay on the 9th Sept., to join their head-quarters at Bangalore.

THE G. I. P. RAILWAY.—The statement of traffic on the G. I. P. Railway, for the week ending the 4th October, exhibits the following results:—Number of passengers, 15,796; amount of coaching traffic, Rs. 8,687-6-8; of merchandise, Rs. 5,403-4-11, —making the total receipts Rs. 14,090-11-7. This shows an increase over the receipts in the corresponding week of last year of Rs. 4,587-1-2.

ARRIVAL OF THE "FEROZE."—The Hon. Co.'s steamer Feroze, Lieut. Tronson, I.N., arrived in Bombay harbour on the evening of the 16th of Oct. from Bushire, via Kurrachee. Passengers—Brig.-Gen. J. Jacob, c.b.; Major Green, assistant adj.-gen.; Capt. Green, aide-de-camp; Capt. Wray, deputy quartermaster-gen.; Major Hill, commanding engineer; Capt. Dunsterville, superintendent of police; Col. Trevelyan, commandant of artillery; Lieut. Turner, major of brigade; Capt. Gibbard, commanding 4th company 1st battalion, artillery, with No. 5 light field battery attached; Assistant Surgeon Plumtre, in medical charge; twenty-nine men (Europeans) of the 4th company 1st battalion, artillery, and a detail of Golundauze; a wing of the 20th regt. N.I.

MILITARY EXECUTIONS.—The two prisoners, Drill Havildar Syud Hoossein, of the marine battalion, and Private Mungul Guddrea, 10th regiment N.I., who were tried for sedition on the 13th instant, were found guilty, and condemned to be blown away from guns; which sentence was duly carried into execution on the parade-ground on Thursday evening. The prisoners were tried on the following charge:—"For having, on or about the night of the 3rd October, 1857, attended a seditious meeting held in a house in a part of the town of Bombay called Sonapore, and at that meeting, they the said Drill Havildar Syud Hoossein and Private Mungul Guddrea made use of highly mutinous and seditious language, evincing a traitorous disposition towards the Government, tending to promote rebellion against the State, and to subvert the authority of the British Government.—The above being in breach of the articles of war."

Every preparation was made by the military authorities to meet any contingencies which might have arisen during the progress of the executions. The wing of H.M.'s 95th foot, stationed in the town barracks, was ordered to the parade-ground about four o'clock in the afternoon, and the battery of royal artillery from Fort George, under Captain Bolton, was placed to the left of the 95th, occupying a semicircular position. The ordnance department, with four guns, loaded with canister and grape, took up a position in front of the 95th; and a body of seamen from the Hon. Co.'s vessels in harbour, about 300 in number, armed with muskets and bayonets, were ranged alongside the royal artillery. The two prisoners, under an escort of the 95th regiment, were brought from their cells in Fort George about four o'clock, and stood firm and erect in the midst of their guards. About half-past four the 10th N.I., the marine battalion, and the 11th N.I. were marched on to the parade-ground, and drawn up on the right and left of the square. Hundreds of Europeans and thousands of natives gathered together in the rear. The prisoners, after being stripped of their uniform, were lashed to the muzzles of the guns—the signal was given, and the ground was strewn with fragments of their bodies. The shuddering spectators dispersed in silent terror.

ISLAND OF PERIM.—This little barren scrap of lava and sand, scarcely in all two miles square, was ceded by the Turkish government to England, through the agency of General Wilson, of the Bombay army, resident at Muscat, in 1798; and was occupied by Admiral Blanket, then commanding the British fleet in the Indian seas. It promised to furnish a valuable harbour of refuge for men-of-war, in the event of Bonaparte attempting to carry out his proposed invasion of India by the Red Sea route. Having been held until the French were driven from Egypt, it was then left by us as of no further use at the time, but never surrendered or made over to any one. It contains not one drop of water, has no human inhabitants to render homage to any one, and was as much ours for the previous half-century, before we took possession of it in February last, as it is at this moment. The attempt to fortify it, or even to make it a military post, would be so much money thrown away. It is valuable as a lighthouse-station, but worthless for everything besides; and lighthouses are equally serviceable to the mariners of all nations. The lesser strait which it commands is only 3,000 yards across, but the larger one, equally available for the purposes of navigation, is sixteen miles, and can only be shut up by a fleet.—Bombay Times.

THE "SHANGHAI."—The P. and O. Company's steamer Shanghai, which left Bombay on the 16th Oct. for China, carried on board 1,163 chests of Malway opium for China, and twenty-five lakhs of treasure for Calcutta.

IMPORTS (Bombay, Oct. 16, 1857).—Cotton Piece Goods.—The business transacted during the fortnight has been to a comparatively smaller extent, owing to the Dewallee holidays, than during the previous half month; though the prices continue steady, and the activity in the market is unabated. Grey Shirtings have been in active inquiry. Grey Long Cloths are scarce, and likely to command good prices on the first imports. Grey Madapollams have been dealt in to a moderate extent, and the prices have advanced from 2 to 3 annas per piece. Of Grey Jaconets, a want of supply is felt, and the sales have been unusually limited. Grey T Cloths are also very scarce. Bleached and Fancy Goods.—Bleached shirts are dull, and Bleached Madapollams are not inquired for. Bleached Jaconnets are in demand. There has been little business done in Book Muslins; and Lappets, of which the prices have by no means improved, have been dealt in moderately. Jarns.—These, on account of the smallness of the stocks in hand, are in very good demand, and the holders expect advanced prices. Metals.—There has been an appearance of improvement in the market, and sales at advanced rates have taken place during the fortnight. Marine Stores.—The consumption of Canvas is increasing; while Cordage and Twine are dull of sale.

EXPORTS (Bombay, Oct. 16, 1857).—Cotton.—We have again to notice an advance of about fifteen rupees per candy, and the cheering prospect may be expected to continue for some short time. After the favourable accounts by the last mail, the prices advanced on some sorts to a very considerable extent, but a reaction followed. We quote Rs. 175 for Broach and Surat, Dhollera Rs. 176, Oomerawutte Rs. 170—174, and Compta Rs. 167.

CEYLON.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS.—The transport steamer Madras reached Galle on the 25th Sept., en route for Calcutta, having on board H.M.'s 13th L.I. from the Cape, which she left on the 26th of August.

The steamers Thebes and Golden Fleece have arrived at Ceylon, en route for Calcutta, with H.M.'s 34th, 38th, and 42nd regts. on board.

CHINA.

NAVAL EXPEDITION IN THE CANTON RIVER.

On Wednesday, the 9th September, an expedition into the district of Shun-tak was undertaken by Commodore Elliot, the object of which was to ascertain the correctness of certain reports in circulation, that a large force of war-junks was being collected somewhere in the neighbourhood of Fat-shan.

The force consisted of three gunboats, Starling, Haughty, and Forrester, with the heavy boats of the Sybil and Highflyer. Proceeding down the Hamilton Passage, past Seymour Fort, which was in a state of ruin and quite deserted, the gunboats first anchored off the town of Lan-shuk, in the district of Nam-hoi. Nothing was discovered here of any importance, beyond the fact that there was in this direction a passage to Fat-shan, but not available for heavy ships except at high water.

The gunboats next proceeded to reconnoitre a strong fort defending the entrance to the capital of the district (Tai-leong); the garrison were observed standing at their guns, and ready to resist any attempt to approach the precincts of the city. The shallowness of the water, however, proved their best safeguard.

A landing party of about 150 men, commanded by the various officers of the boats, &c. then proceeded towards the important town of Ch'an-ts'un, where a great number of junks seemed to be collected. A small party advanced towards the town, and no opposition being offered, they entered the gates and examined the character of the vessels assembled in the river and being built in the yards. Altogether there appeared to be nearly 100 junks laid up, and about half that number on the stocks, of different sizes and characters; but as no war junks were discovered, the place was not molested at all. The town seems to be one of great importance and the centre of an extensive trade.

On passing the town of Sha-wan, in the district of Pwan-yu, five or six fast-boats were observed at anchor; the ships' boats were immediately ordered into the creek, on each side of which the town is built, to capture or destroy them as quickly as possible. This service was being promptly executed, when it was found necessary, in order to reach one or two of the junks, to cross a narrow belt of land: a force was called away for that purpose, when several braves were observed collected on the bridge close to which the junks lay. Captain Cochrane, at the head of his boat's crew, immediately charged the crowd, but, unfortunately, while in the act of so doing, was seriously wounded by the discharge of one of the ginjalls planted on the bridge; one of the slugs passed through the fleshy part of the calf of his leg, and two others struck him in the breast. Under these circumstances, his small force was obliged to retire, but Commodore Elliott at this moment arriving with a reinforcement, another charge was made, and the braves driven back in great confusion.

The junks were then burnt and the expedition returned.

Besides Capt. Cochrane, two men were wounded by the same discharge, but we believe not mortally.

The Niger, in going up a creek towards the back of Fat-shan, ground laid twice, but sustained no damage. The Chinese in that neighbourhood report that large numbers of the people are leaving Canton daily, driven out through the scarcity of provisions.

On the morning of the 8th, the boats of the Niger captured a mandarin junk mounting ten guns; and two wood-boats were also sunk at the entrance of Fatshan Creek.—China Mail, Sept. 17.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—We are happy to learn that the Government have sanctioned the construction of a telegraphic line from the lighthouse at Munora to Kurrachee; and from Kurrachee to Ghizree, a distance of twelve miles. We understand that the services of Mr. Smith, first-class inspector, are engaged in the formation of this line. We have no doubt the erection of this important communication will be the foundation of still more important advantages, anticipating the eventual consideration in which Kurrachee will be held as a seaport. The line recently sanctioned between Kurrachee and Ahmedabad will be carried on under the superintendence of Mr. Sellon and four assistants, who arrived from England by the last steamer. To facilitate the operations of this line, efficient aid, in the shape of artificers, accompany Mr. Sellon.

THE STRAITS.

SINGAPORE.—H.M.'s yacht Emperor, Commander Ward, from England April 30th, arrived here on the 4th Sept., and will sail for China in about a week. This vessel is intended as a present from the British Government to the Emperor of Japan.

THE ALGERINE.—The Dutch mail steamer has brought tidings to Singapore of H.M.'s screw gunboat Algerine, Lieut. Commanding Forbes, from England for China, having struck on the Karang Brom Shoals, in the Straits of Banca, where she remained fast. It was thought she might get off at the next spring tides.

THE FURIOUS.—H.M.'s steamship Furious arrived at Batavia on the 6th Sept., last from Rio de Janeiro. The Furious left twelve screw gunboats at Anjer, so that we may expect to see this flotilla here in the course of a few days. Four of the gunboats which left England under charge of the Furious had not yet made their appearance.

SIAM.—Mr. Wilson lately paid a visit to Siak to look after his interests in that quarter. On arriving at Bukit Batu he found a Dutch gun-boat there, and before he left two others made their appearance. The sultan and his brother were at the town of Siak, and it was reported that notwithstanding the friendly mediation of the resident of Rhio these two princes were not likely to maintain peaceable relations with each other. Mr. Wilson found his schooner hauled up and partly plundered; while the guns, gunpowder, and cartridges for the large guns remained, everything else in the shape of cloth, clothes, muskets, and stores of all kinds, had been carried off. With considerable difficulty the schooner was got out of the river, and Mr. Wilson and his party proceeded to the island of Bancalis, which had formerly been ceded to him by the sultan. Here he established himself, and intends to remain unless forcibly dispossessed by the Dutch government, to which, according to the account of the Siak chiefs, the entire possession and management of the country has been given up by the sultan and his brother. Pirates appear to abound at present in that part of Malacca Straits. During his stay at Bancalis, Mr. Wilson despatched a sampan with six men, armed with a tela and muskets, to Malacca with letters. In a day or two the boat returned with only two men in it, who reported that they had been attacked by a prahu manned by about a dozen orang-laut, who had opened fire on them. This was returned, but the head man of the boat being killed and another severely wounded, the pirates boarded them and killed three of the crew, while the remaining two jumped overboard. The pirates plundered the boat of all it contained, and then allowed the two persons in the water, young lads, to regain possession of it, when they returned to Bancalis. Before taking to the water, these young men had very cleverly placed a considerable amount of dollars in the well of the boat, where it escaped the notice of the pirates. On the way over to Singapore, Mr. Wilson and his companions, who were in three boats, were attacked by two prahus, which fired one or two shots, but made off as fast as they could.

on finding they had not unarmed traders to deal with, but determined Bugis, who are generally shunned by the pirates.

GENERAL GARRETT.—On the 29th Sept., Major-General Sir R. Garrett embarked on board the steamer Lancefield for Calcutta, under a salute from the Fort of Singapore.

THE FRENCH PLENIPOTENTIARY.—H.I.M.'s ship Audacieuse arrived at Singapore on the 28th Sept., having on board His Excellency Baron Gros, French Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to China, and the following gentlemen belonging to the mission:—M. du Chesne de Bellecourt, chief secretary, Vicomte de Contades, second secretary, and M.M. le Marquis de Moges, le Comte de la Tour Maubourg, le Marquis de Trevisé, and le Vicomte de Flavigny, Attachés.

On the morning of the 29th, the Audacieuse exchanged salutes with the fort, and afterwards with the senior naval officer on the station. It was expected that H. E. Baron Gros would land at eleven, a.m., and a guard of honour from the troops in garrison was in attendance at the landing place for some time, when it was discovered that H. E. had landed without ceremony, and the troops were dismissed, it being apparently the wish of H. E. to dispense with the customary marks of respect during his stay here. The Audacieuse was detained for 21 days at the Cape of Good Hope for want of coals.

ARRIVALS AT SINGAPORE.—H.M. steam transport ship Assistance, Captain Heath, arrived here on the 28th Sept. from the Cape of Good Hope the 4th August, having on board thirty officers and 610 soldiers, and left for Calcutta on the 30th.

H.M. steam gunboat Firm, Lieutenant commander Nicolas, arrived here on the 28th Sept. from England.

H.M. steam gunboat Kestral also arrived on the same day from England.

GOING ON CIRCUIT.—The H.C. steamer Hooghly, Captain Wright, arrived here from Malacca on the evening of the 1st of October, having on board the hon. Sir R. McCausland (recorder of Singapore), and the court establishment, on their return from circuit.

JAVA.

On the 19th August, two very heavy shocks of earthquake were felt at Padang (west coast of Sumatra), which, however, did no injury. During the months of June, July, and August, five Dutch, two English, two French, one Swedish, and one Hamburg, ships arrived at Padang, all for the purpose of loading Sumatra produce for the Europe market. The presence of these vessels, and eight coasting craft, gave a lively appearance to the roads of Padang. The trade of the Achinese ports during the last quarter had been very brisk. On the 11th August Lieut. Steck succeeded in ascending to the top of the Sugar Loaf Mountain (Gunong Bunku), in the Bencoolen residency. Several attempts have been made on former occasions to accomplish the ascent, but unsuccessfully.

COMING EVENTS.—The Governor of Mito has caused all the bronze and copper images in the Buddhist temples in his province to be collected, and melted down, and cast into cannon. Christians are also commencing to show themselves without fear near Nagasaki, and at other places, which, coupled with the fate of the Buddhist images, would seem to prove that more liberal and tolerant ideas are beginning to prevail in Japan.

The first vessel despatched to Japan with a cargo on private account, left Batavia on the 19th September.

DISPATCH FROM GENERAL WILSON.

[FROM THE LONDON GAZETTE OF SATURDAY NIGHT,
NOVEMBER 14.]

"Head-Quarters, Field Force,
Delhi, Sept. 15th, 1857.

"To Captain H. W. Norman, Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army.

"Sir,—I have the high satisfaction of reporting, for the information of the Major-General commanding in the Upper Provinces, and through him of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and of Government, that on the morning of the 14th instant the force under my command successfully assaulted the city of Delhi.

"Under the present circumstances, Major-General Gowan will, I trust, allow me to withhold for a time a full and complete detail of the operations from their commencement to their close, and to limit myself to a summary of events.

"After six days of open trenches, during which the artillery and engineers, under their respective commanding officers,

Major Gaitskell and Lieutenant-Colonel Baird Smith, vied with each other in pressing forward the work, two excellent and most practicable breaches were formed in the walls of the place, one in the curtain to the right of the Cashmere bastion, the other to the left of the Water bastion, the defences of those bastions and the parapets giving musketry-cover to the enemy commanding the breaches, having also been destroyed by the artillery.

"The assault was delivered on four points. The 1st column, under Brigadier J. Nicholson, consisting of H.M.'s 75th regt. (300 men), the 1st European Bengal fusiliers (200 men), and the 2nd Punjab infantry (450 men), assaulted the main breach, their advance being admirably covered by the 1st battalion, H.M.'s 60th rifles, under Colonel J. Jones. The operation was crowned with brilliant success, the enemy after severe resistance being driven from the Cashmere bastion, the main guard, and its vicinity, in complete rout.

"The 2nd column, under Brigadier Jones, of H.M.'s 61st regiment, consisting of H.M.'s 8th regiment (250 men), the 2nd European Bengal fusiliers (250 men), and the 4th regiment of Sikhs (350 men), similarly covered by the 60th rifles, advanced on the Water bastion, carried the breach, and drove the enemy from his guns and position, with a determination and spirit which gave me the highest satisfaction.

"The 3rd column, under Colonel Campbell, of H.M.'s 52nd light infantry, consisting of 200 of his own regiment, the Kemaon battalion (250 men), and the 1st Punjab infantry (500 men), was directed against the Cashmere gateway. This column was preceded by an explosion party, under Lieuts. Home and Salkeld, of the engineers, covered by the 60th rifles. The demolition of the gate having been accomplished, the column forced an entrance, overcoming a strenuous opposition from the enemy's infantry and heavy artillery, which had been brought to bear on the position. I cannot express too warmly my admiration of the gallantry of all concerned in this difficult operation.

"The reserve, under Brigadier Longfield, H.M.'s 8th regiment, composed of H.M.'s 61st regiment (250 men), the 4th regiment rifles (450 men), the Belooch battalion (300 men), the Jheend Rajah's auxiliaries (300 men), and 200 of H.M.'s 60th rifles, who joined after the assault had been made, awaited the result of the attack, and on the columns entering the place, took possession of the posts I had previously assigned to it. This duty was ultimately performed to my entire satisfaction.

"The firm establishment of the reserve rendering the assaulting columns free to act in advance, Brigadier-General Nicholson, supported by Brigadier Jones, swept the ramparts of the place from the Cashmere to the Cabul gates, occupying the bastions and defences, capturing the guns, and driving the enemy before him.

"During the advance Brigadier-General Nicholson was, to the grief of myself and the whole army, dangerously wounded. The command consequently devolved on Brigadier Jones, who, finding the enemy in great force, occupying and pouring a destructive fire from the roofs of strong and commanding houses in the city on all sides, the ramparts themselves being enfiladed by guns, prudently resolved on retaining possession of the Cabul gate, which his troops had so gallantly won, in which he firmly established himself, awaiting the result of the operations of the other columns of occupation.

"Colonel Campbell, with the column under his command, advanced successfully from the Cashmere gate by one of the main streets beyond the 'Chandnee Chouk,' the central and principal street of the city towards the Jumma Musjid, with the intention of occupying that important post. The opposition, however, which he met from the great concentration of the enemy at the Jumma Musjid and the houses in the neighbourhood, he himself, I regret to state, being wounded, satisfied him that his most prudent course was not to maintain so advanced a position with the comparatively limited force at his disposal; and he accordingly withdrew the head of his column and placed himself in communication with the reserve, a measure which had my entire approval; I having previously determined that, in the event of serious opposition being encountered in the town itself, it would be most inexpedient to commit my small force to a succession of street fights, in which their gallantry, discipline, and organization could avail them so little.

"My present position, therefore, is that which, under such a contingency, I had resolved to occupy and establish myself in firmly as the base of my systematic operations for the complete possession of the city. This embraces the magazine on one side, and the Cabul gate on the other, with the Morce, Cashmere, and Water bastions, and strong intermediate posts, with secure communication along the front and to the rear.

"From this base I am now cautiously pressing the enemy on all points, with a view to establishing myself in a second advanced position, and I trust before many days to have it in my power to announce to the supreme Government that the enemy have been driven from their last stronghold in the palace, fort, and streets of the city of Delhi.

"Simultaneously with the operations above detailed, an attack was made on the enemy's strong position outside the city, in the suburbs of Kissengunge and Pahareepore, with a view of driving in the rebels, and supporting the main attack by effecting an entrance at the Cabul gate after it should be taken.

"The force employed on this difficult duty I intrusted to that admirable officer Major C. Reid, commanding the Sirmoor battalion, whose distinguished conduct I have already had occasion to bring prominently to the notice of superior authority, and who was, I much regret, severely wounded on this occasion. His column consisted of his own battalion, the Guides, and the men on duty at Hindoo Rao's (the main picket), numbering in all about 1,000, supported by the auxiliary troops of his Highness the Maharajah Rumber Singh, under Captain R. Lawrence.

"The strength of the positions, however, and the desperate resistance offered by the enemy, withstood for a time the efforts of our troops, gallant though they were, and the combination was unable to be effected. The delay, I am happy to say, has been only temporary, for the enemy have subsequently abandoned their positions, leaving their guns in our hands.

"In this attack I found it necessary to support Major Reid with cavalry and horse-artillery, both of which arms were admirably handled respectively by Brigadier Hope Grant, of H. M.'s 9th lancers, commanding the cavalry brigade, and Major H. Tombs, of the horse-artillery, who inflicted severe punishment on the enemy, though I regret their own loss was very heavy.

"The resistance of the rebels up to this time has been that of desperate men, and to this must be attributed the severe loss we have sustained, amounting proximately, so far as I am able to judge in the absence of casualty returns, to 46 officers killed and wounded, and about 800 men. Amongst those of whose services the State has been deprived, are many officers of distinction and merit, holding superior commands, whose places cannot be supplied; and I have specially to lament the loss which has been sustained by that splendid corps, the engineers,—nine officers of that arm having fallen in the gallant performance of their duty.

"Until I am in possession of reports from brigadiers and other commanding officers, I shall be unable to enter more fully into the details of these operations, and I trust the circumstances under which I write will excuse any slight inaccuracies or imperfections which my despatch may exhibit.

"The absence of such reports also prevents my bringing to notice the names of those officers and men who have specially distinguished themselves. This will be my grateful duty hereafter. But I cannot defer the expression of my admiration for the intrepidity, coolness, and determination of all engaged, Europeans and natives, of all arms of the service.—I have, &c.

"A. WILSON, Major-General,

"Commanding Field Force."

GENERAL CHAMBERLAIN'S REPORT.

"City of Delhi, Sept. 18, 1857.

"From the Adjutant-General of the army to the officer commanding at Cawnpore.

"SIR,—On the afternoon of the 14th I despatched a messenger to you, intimating the success of the assault in Delhi, which took place that morning, and that we held from the Cabul gate to the College; since then we have pushed on, and now occupy from the Cabul gate along the line of the canal, with our left holding the bank which opens on the Chandnee Chouk. The Magazine was breached during the 15th, and taken by assault at daybreak on the 16th. You will understand from this that the mutineers occupy the Burn bastion, and all that portion of the city to its south, excepting the bank: they also still occupy the Palace and Selimgurh, and have a camp pitched outside, near the Ajmere gate. The palace wall will be breached as soon as we attain a suitable site for our battery, which we have not yet acquired. Our mortars have been brought into the town, and are shelling the palace. The guns taken on the works have also been turned upon the portions of the town which are in possession of the mutineers, and we are gradually pressing forwards. The usual license which invariably accompanies an assault of a large city has somewhat retarded our advance, but order is fast being restored. At first, the mutineers offered obstinate resistance, but they have become less active. The townspeople are flying the city in crowds, and the mutineers themselves are deserting in large bodies, their cavalry, it is reported, having almost entirely disappeared. We can get no good information as to the mutineers' line of retreat, but some say Gwalior. Few pass over the bridge. Their positions at Kissengunge were abandoned the day after the assault, seven guns being left behind in position. Our casualties on the day of assault were:—

Europeans, killed, 8 officers, 162 rank and file; wounded, 52

officers, 510 rank and file. Natives, killed, 103; wounded, 310. Missing, 10 Europeans. Total, Europeans and natives, killed and wounded, 1,145. The following officers killed:—Engineers, Lieut. Tandy, H.M.'s 75th; Lieut. Fitzgerald, H.M.'s 52nd; Lieut. Bradshaw, H.M.'s 8th; Lieut. Webb, 1st fusiliers; Major Jacob, Capt. M'Barnet, 55th N.I., doing duty; Lieut. Davidson, 26th N.I., doing duty with 2nd Punjab infantry; Lieut. Murray, 42nd N.I., doing duty with Guides. Wounded—Artillery, Major Tombs, Lieut. Lindsay; Engineers, Lieuts. Greathed, Maunsell, Medley, Salkeld (dangerously), Chesney, Brownlow (dangerously), Hovenden, Pemberton; Local Ensign Gustavinske, 6th dragoons; Capt. Rosser (mortally), 84th foot (doing duty with 9th lancers); Capt. the Hon. A. Anson; Lieut. B. Cuppage, 6th L.C. (doing duty with 9th lancers); H.M.'s 75th foot, Colonel Herbert; Lieuts. Armstrong, Watson, Dayrell, 58th N.I. (doing duty with 2nd fusiliers); Capt. Hay, 60th N.I. (doing duty), dangerously; Lieuts. Elderton, Gambier, 38th Native Infantry (doing duty), dangerously; Lieut. Walker, 60th N.I. (doing duty), H.M.'s 52nd; Colonel Campbell, Capt. Bayley, Lieut. Atkinson, H.M.'s 60th rifles; Captain Waters, Lieut. Curtis, Sirmoor battalion; Major C. Reid, H.M.'s 8th; Lieut.-Col. Brooke, Major Bayne (dangerously), Captain Beere, Captain Sandilands, Lieut. Pogson (since dead), Lieut. Walker, Lieut. Metge, H.M.'s 61st; Captain Deacon, Lieut. Moore, Lieut. A. E. Young, Lieut. Jenkins, 57th N.I., attached to the 4th Sikhs; Brig.-Gen. Nicholson, dangerously, 1st fusiliers; Captain Greville, Captain Caulfield, 3rd N.I. (doing duty); Captain Graydon, 16th N.I. (doing duty); Lieuts. Wemyss, Owen, Lambert, Woodcock, 55th N.I. (doing duty); Lieut. Speke, 65th N.I. (doing duty), 1st Punjab infantry; Lieut. Nicholson, 2nd Punjab cavalry (doing duty); Lieut. Shelley, 11th N.I. (doing duty); Ensign Prior, local officer (doing duty), 2nd Punjab infantry; Capt. Green, Lieut. Frankland, Madras infantry, 4th Punjab infantry; Lieut. Remfray (since dead), Guide infantry; Lieut. Bond, 57th N.I. doing duty.

"The following ordnance has been captured:—In position and in the streets, 35 pieces of sorts; in the magazine, 171; total 206. The amount of shot and shell is unlimited. I have communicated the contents of this to Government.—I am, &c.

"NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN, Adjt.-Gen. of the Army."

"P.S.—19th. During the night we advanced our left up to Abbott's house, and also Khan Mahomed's house. This gives us a strong position up to within 150 yards of the palace walls. All our mortars are bearing upon the Jumma Masjid and the southern part of the town, which is being fast evacuated, the resistance becoming much less on our right; we are also progressing by working through the houses. The king and royal family are said to have evacuated the place and gone to the old fort outside the city to the south. Our very small number makes it necessary to be cautious in taking possession of so large a city, for the great number we have of sick and wounded, and our loss on the day of the assault, have reduced us very much. This was too late to be sent yesterday.

"N. CHAMBERLAIN."

No. 17.

Major Haliburton to Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon.
Benares, July 7.

SIR,—In compliance with my instructions, I advanced yesterday morning, about ten, with the force under my command, about eight miles on the road to Azimgurh. Here the advanced cavalry reported a large body of men half a mile in front. On examination, I found them posted across the road, their flanks resting on villages; the road through their centre; their left, their stronghold, shaded with trees; their right partially concealed by rising ground in front, their numbers thus left doubtful.

Owing to the very heavy rain, which had still continued to fall, the guns were confined to the road.

Advancing with the Highlanders on the left centre, the cavalry again on my left, the guns protected by a detachment of her Majesty's 37th regiment, the Sikhs turning the right of the rebels, it was my intention (and my orders were issued to that effect) to approach within 350 yards of their position, and then open fire with the guns on both flanks.

This was entirely frustrated by the gun-bullocks, which refused to move in the right direction, and got into confusion. Some little delay occurred, when I advanced the Highlanders without them, the cavalry going rapidly to the front on seeing symptoms of the break up of the rebel force, which was soon in retreat in all directions, the guns from their position in rear opening upon the fugitives with some effect.

The cavalry met with combined and determined opposition at close quarters, as well from matchlock as from sword, most of the horses of the gentlemen volunteers being badly cut, and one killed.

For the conduct of this force at large I refer you more particularly to Captain Boileau, in command, but even during my own advance I myself saw sufficient to weaken confidence in the zeal of the sowers.

The conduct of Surat Singh, a Sikh gentleman, was most decided and courageous. To his example, and that of the other gentlemen, the success of the cavalry party must be entirely attributed.

I regret much to have to report that Surat Singh was very seriously wounded by a sword cut in the knee. The cavalry killed all they overtook; the infantry made many good shots; at least some sixty or seventy met their fate.

The two villages were set on fire.

The armed force of the rebels I should calculate to have been not less than 400 or 500 (it may have been much more), mixed up with and assisted by crowds of villagers ready for the fray, making the collected force, I should fancy, not less than 1,000, and which might soon, from all appearance, have been increased to double.

I reached quarters last evening about nine o'clock.

I have, &c.,

J. F. HALIBURTON,
Brevet Major, 78th Highlanders.

No. 18.

Capt. Boileau to the Major of Brigade, Benares.

Benares, July 7.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, that in an engagement with some insurgents yesterday, one sowar and two horses of my escort were wounded severely, and one horse missing.

I regret to add that the horses of Lieuts. Miles, Hale, and Campbell were all badly wounded, and are disabled from work for some time to come.

I beg you will bring to the notice of Col. Gordon the gallant example shown by these officers to the men, and the good conduct of Sowar Hyat Khan, who, under a heavy fire, went to the rescue of Lieut. Hale when dismounted, and who subsequently killed two men with his own hand. I would solicit his promotion.

I have, &c.,

GEORGE BOILEAU, Captain,
Oude Irregular Cavalry.

No. 19.

Capt. Boileau to Lieut.-Col. Gordon.

Benares, July 7.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of this day's date, calling upon me to report upon the conduct of the sowars employed yesterday under my command, I have the honour to state that, although the sowars cut up nearly every man of that portion of the enemy to which they were immediately opposed, they nevertheless did not show that alacrity in closing with them which might have been expected.

Whether to attribute their conduct to timidity or want of zeal I am in doubt.

Their number was small (only 20). The insurgents appealed to their religious feelings, and they were exposed to a sharp fire of matchlocks, as is apparent from the number of casualties in horses of officers and men.

These men are quite unknown to me, having only been very recently placed at my disposal as an escort.

I have, &c.

GEORGE BOILEAU, Captain,
Oude Irregular Cavalry.

No. 20.

Major-General Reed, C.B., to the Secretary to the Government of India.

Camp before Delhi, July 16.

Sir,—On the morning of the 14th the mutineers moved out of the city and attacked our batteries at Hindoo Rao's house,* and picket in the Subzee Mundee suburb, all under the command of Major Reid, of the Sirmoor Battalion. Our troops remained on the defensive until 3 p.m., maintaining their position against a force believed to consist of 20 regiments of infantry, a large body of cavalry, and several field-pieces, and supported by a fire of heavy artillery from the walls.

2. At 3 o'clock a column was formed, under command of Brigadier Showers, to drive the enemy out of the suburbs; Major Reid, with the troops from Hindoo Rao's picket, co-operating on the left.

3. This service was effectually and gallantly performed, and the enemy driven in confusion, and with much loss, under the cover of a very heavy fire of grape and musketry from the walls of Delhi, and very nearly losing some of the field-guns they had brought outside.

4. Our own loss, I am sorry to say, was severe, as will be seen by the accompanying return, and I extremely regret to report that Brigadier-General Chamberlain, the Acting Adjutant-General of the Army, who accompanied Brigadier Showers' column, was severely wounded. The duties of the Adjutant-General's department have therefore again devolved on Capt. Norman.

5. Yesterday and to-day the enemy have remained perfectly quiet, with the exception of a fire of artillery at intervals from the walls, to which our heavy batteries have replied.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS REED,
General, Commanding Field Force and Provincial Commander-in-Chief.

No. 21.

The Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army to the Secretary to the Government of India.

Calcutta, July 18.

Sir,—I have the honour, by desire of the Commander-in-Chief, to transmit, in original, a despatch under date the 12th inst., from Brigadier-General H. Havelock, C.B., commanding the movable column from Allahabad, giving a detailed account of the operations of the troops under his command, and of those under Major Renaud, of the 1st Madras Fusiliers, and of the very decisive action fought by the combined force at Futtehpore on the above date, which has ended in the complete discomfiture of the enemy.

2. In submitting these documents to the Governor-General in Council, I am instructed to say that his Excellency feels assured that his Lordship will agree with him that the Brigadier-General, and the officers and men of every arm under his command, have well earned the cordial thanks and acknowledgments of the Government of India, for the excellent service they have rendered, and the cheerful alacrity with which they have borne their fatigue and exposure.

3. The return of the documents when done with is requested.

I have, &c.,

W. MAYHEW, Major.

No. 22.

Brigadier-General Havelock to the Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army.

Camp, Futtehpore, July 12.

Sir,—By telegrams and reports in various shapes, the Commander-in-Chief has been kept informed of the operations of Major Renaud, 1st Madras Fusiliers, on the Grand Trunk road, between the 1st and 11th inst., at the head of a force of 400 British and 420 native troops, with two pieces of cannon. He has everywhere pacificated the country by punishing the ringleaders in mutiny and rebellion, wherever they have fallen into his hands, and earned, as I venture to think, the best thanks of his Excellency.

2. But on the 10th inst. his position became critical. Cawnpore had suddenly fallen, by an act of treachery unequalled in our annals, save by one fatal event beyond the Indus; and the rebel force, thus freed from occupation, had rapidly pushed down a force to the vicinity of this place, within five miles of which the Major would arrive on the morning of the 12th. He would thus be exposed to the attack of 3,500 rebels with 12 guns.

3. No time was to be lost, so on the 10th my column marched, under a frightful sun, 15 miles to Synee, and, resuming their course at 11 o'clock at night, joined Major Renaud on the road by moonlight, and with him marched to Kaga, five miles from Futtehpore, soon after dawn, and took up a position.

4. The heat was excessive, but there were now on a point 1,400 British bayonets and eight guns, united to a small native force. The whole is detailed in the margin.*

5. Our information has been better than that of the enemy, for when Lieut.-Col. Tytler pushed a reconnaissance up to the town, they evidently supposed they had only Major Renaud's gallant but small force in their front; for, after firing on the Lieut.-Colonel and his escort, they insolently pushed forward two guns and a force of infantry and cavalry, cannonaded our front, and threatened our flanks.

6. I wished earnestly to give our harassed soldiers rest, and so waited till this ebullition should expend itself, making no counter-disposition beyond posting 100 Enfield Riflemen (64th) in an advanced copse. But the enemy maintained his attack with the audacity which his first supposition had inspired and my inactivity fostered. It would have injured the morale of my troops to permit them thus to be bearded, so I determined at once to bring on an action.

7. Futtehpore constitutes a position of no small strength. The hard, dry Grand Trunk Road subdivides it, and it is the only means of convenient access, for the plains on both sides are covered at this season by heavy lodgments of water to the depth of two, three, and four feet. It is surrounded by garden inclosures of great strength, with high walls, and has within it many houses of good masonry. In front of the swamps are hillocks, villages, and mango groves, which the enemy already occupied in force.

* British.—3rd company, 8th battalion, Royal Artillery, 76; 1st Madras Fusiliers, 376; H.M.'s 6th Regiment, 435; 78th Highlanders, 204; 64th Regiment, 190; detachment of Bengal Artillery, 22; Volunteer Cavalry, 20; total British, 1,403.

Native.—Regiment of Ferozepore, 448; 13th Irregular and 3rd Oude Irregular Cavalry, 95; Golundauze, 18; total native, 561.
Grand total, 1,964.

* Pickets at the batteries; detachments of H.M.'s 60th Rifles, and 75th Regiment, Sirmoor Battalion, Guide Infantry; Subzee Mundee Picket, 180 of H.M.'s 8th and 61st Regiments.

8. I estimate his number as set forth in the margin.*

9. I made my dispositions. The guns, now eight in number, were formed on an enfilade close to the chaussée, in the centre, under Capt. Maude, Royal Artillery, protected and aided by 100 Enfield Riflemen of the 61th. The detachments of Infantry were, at the same moment, thrown into line at quarter-distance columns, at deploying distance, and thus advanced in support, covered at discretion by Enfield skirmishers. The small force of Volunteers and Irregular Cavalry moved forward on the flanks, on harder ground.

10. I might say that in ten minutes the action was decided, for in that short space of time the spirit of the enemy was utterly subdued; the rifle fire reaching them at unexpected distance, filled them with dismay, and when Capt. Maude was enabled to push his guns through flanking swamps to point-blank range, his surprisingly-accurate fire demolished their little remaining confidence. In a moment three guns were abandoned to us on the chaussée, and the force advanced steadily, driving the enemy before it on every point.

11. Major Renaud won a hillock on the right in good style, and struggled on through the inundation. The 78th, in extension, kept up his communication with the centre; the 61th gave strength to the centre and left; on the left the 81th and regiment of Ferozepore pressed back the enemy's right.

12. As we moved forward, the enemy's guns continued to fall into our hands, and then in succession they were driven by skirmishers and columns from the garden inclosures, from a strong barricade on the road, from the town-wall, into and through, out of and beyond the town. They endeavoured to make a stand a mile in advance of it. My troops were in such a state of exhaustion that I almost despaired of driving them further. At the same time the mutineers of the 2nd Light Cavalry made an effort to renew the combat by charging, with some success, our Irregular Horse, whose disposition throughout the fight was, I regret to say, worse than doubtful. But again our guns and riflemen were, with great labour, pushed to the front. Their fire soon put the enemy to final and irretrievable flight, and my force took up its present position in triumph, and parked 12 captured guns.

13. I must endeavour, in this hasty despatch, to do justice to those who led the troops to this easy victory:—

First on the list I must place Major Renaud, whose exertions at the head of the advanced column I cannot sufficiently praise. His coolness and conduct in the action are equally entitled to my highest commendation.

I hope that it will be in the power of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to bring speedily to the notice of his Royal Highness the General Commanding-in-Chief the courage and skill of Capt. Maude, Royal Artillery. I have seen some artillery fights in my time, but never beheld guns better served, or practice more effective, than that of my battery under this officer.

Col. Hamilton led his Highlanders well, and they followed him full of spirit and devotion.

I have every reason to be satisfied with the conduct in this combat of Major Stirling, at the head of the 64th; of Lieut. Ayrton, in command of the 81th detachment; of Capt. Brasyer, regiment of Ferozepore; of Capt. Barrow, leading the Volunteer Cavalry; and Lieut. Palliser, at the head of the Irregular Horse.

I have next to speak of the Staff:—

Capt. Beatson, Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, has given me entire satisfaction in the performance of his ordinary duties, and I was much gratified by his boldness and activity in the fight.

Lieut.-Col. Tytler is indefatigable, and most intelligent in a sphere of duty entirely new to him.

Capt. McBean's commissariat arrangements, chiefly with the advanced column, have hitherto been every way successful.

My orders were conveyed in the field boldly, actively, and intelligently, by my aide-de-camp, Lieut. Havelock, 10th Foot, and the following officers:—Lieut. Morland, 1st Fusiliers; Lieut. Moorsom, H.M.'s 52nd Light Infantry; Capt. Sheehy, H.M.'s 81st Regiment; Capt. Russell, Engineers; and Capt. McBean.

14. I inclose the list of casualties, the lightest, I suppose, that ever accompanied the announcement of such a success. Twelve British soldiers were struck down by the sun, and never rose again. But our fight was fought neither with musket nor bayonet and sabre, but with Enfield rifles and cannon; so we took no men. The enemy's fire scarcely reached us; ours, for four hours, allowed him no repose.

15. A return of captured ordnance also accompanies this report.

I have, &c.,

H. HAVELOCK.

The Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army to the Secretary to the Government of India.

Calcutta, July 31.

SIR,—I have the honour, by the desire of the Commander-in-Chief, to forward for submission to the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council, two despatches received from Brigadier-General H. Havelock, C.B., commanding the movable column, dated the 15th and 20th of July, giving an account of his engagements with the rebels under Nena Sahib, at the bridge over the Pandoo Nuddee, and at the recapture of Cawnpore from the same enemy.

* Mutineers.—2nd, 3rd, and 7th Light Cavalry and Irregulars, 500; native Infantry and Artillery, 1,500; armed insurgents, 1,500.—Total, 3,500. Iron and brass guns, 12.

2. His Excellency considers that the greatest credit is due to the Brigadier-General and to the brave troops under his command. They have marched 130 miles in eight days, at the most trying season of the year, fought three obstinately-contested combats, in each of which the insurgents have been signally beaten, destroyed the stronghold of that arch fiend and traitor, the Nena Sahib, and captured 44 pieces of ordnance, many of which are of large calibre.

3. General Havelock has on many occasions handled his force with the ability which might have been expected from his well-won reputation as a brave, skilful, and experienced soldier, and Sir P. Grant begs to recommend him and the several officers he has specified in his despatches, to the most favourable consideration of his Lordship in Council; and his Excellency desires further to draw especial attention to the glowing terms in which General Havelock describes the excellent conduct and gallantry under fire of the troops of all arms serving with him in the field.

4. The return of the inclosure is requested.

No. 24.

Brigadier-General Havelock to the Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army.

Camp, Pandoo Nuddee, July 15.

SIR,—I have the satisfaction to acquaint you, for the information of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, that the troops under my command have been twice successfully engaged with the enemy to-day, and have captured four guns.

2. While prosecuting my march towards Cawnpore, it became a matter of deep interest to me to learn whether the fine bridge over the Pandoo Nuddee had been destroyed or not. The stream is not at this season fordable, and the delay in crossing by other means, or at any other point, would have been most damaging to the objects of the expedition.

3. Intelligence meanwhile came in to the effect that the village of Aeng was strongly occupied by the enemy; that he was entrenched across the road, and had two Horse Artillery guns in position.

4. I therefore reinforced the advanced guard under Lieut.-Col. Tytler, by attaching to him, in addition to the small body of Volunteer Cavalry, six guns of Capt. Maude's battery, and a detachment of H.M.'s 64th regiment.

5. The enemy's entrenchments were not formidable, but the country being thickly wooded, he was enabled to maintain himself for some time against our fire, during which interval large bodies of cavalry advanced on both flanks with the intention of capturing our baggage. These attacks were very persevering, and to defeat them, as I had only 20 horse, I was compelled to protect the flanks with the infantry in second line, and by artillery fire. It is gratifying to have to report that the enemy was unable to capture a single baggage-animal or follower. The last attempt was defeated by the baggage-guards, whose fire was very effective.

6. Soon, however, the Lieut.-Colonel overcame all resistance, drove the enemy before him, and captured his cannon. The road was strewn for miles with abandoned tents, ammunition, and other materials of war. He reports to me, in high terms of commendation, the conduct of the troops immediately under his command, of Capt. Maude, commanding the battery, and of Lieut. Havelock, 10th Foot, my Aide-de-Camp, and Lieut. Moorsom, 52nd Light Infantry, whom I placed at his disposal.

7. The troops were halted for refreshment and short repose, when authentic information was received that the bridge on the Pandoo stream was not destroyed, but defended by intrenchments and two guns of garrison calibre.

8. Disposition had to be made to force the passage of the stream. Fortunately, the bridge was at a salient bend of the river in our direction. Capt. Maude at once suggested to me his desire to envelope it with his artillery fire, by placing three guns on the road and three on either flank. The whole of the Madras Fusiliers were extended as Enfield Riflemen, as being the most practised marksmen in the force. They lined the banks of the stream, and kept up a biting fire.

9. The enemy opened an effective cannonade upon our column as they advanced along the road. They therefore deployed, and advanced with great steadiness in parade order, in support of the guns and riflemen. Capt. Maude's bullets soon produced an evident effect, and then the right wing of the Fusiliers suddenly closing, threw themselves with rare gallantry upon the bridge, carried it, and captured both guns. These two affairs cost me 25 killed and wounded, as shown in the accompanying return. Among the latter I regret to have to particularize Major Renaud, 1st Madras Fusiliers, to whose gallantry and intelligence I have been under great obligations. His left thigh was broken by a musket-ball in the skirmish at Aeng, but I hope, from the fortitude with which he endures all suffering, a favourable result.

I have, &c.,

H. HAVELOCK, Brigadier-General Commanding Allahabad Movable Column.

INDIAN RIVER BOATS.

It will be in the memory of our readers that some time ago a commission was appointed to examine the different classes of boats, steamers, and flats, that ply on the great rivers of Europe. The commissioners were Major Crauford, B.E., Capt. Balfour, I.N., and Mr. Winter, C.E. These gentlemen have now returned to this country, and will very shortly submit to the Court of Directors the result of their investigations in foreign lands. There can be no question as to their ability to decide on this much-vexed question; so that at last we may hope to find the mystery of the Indian rivers solved in a satisfactory and practical manner.

TELEGRAPH TO INDIA.

WHILE the first-class men of Oxford and Cambridge are playfully accusing one another of bad scholarship, and impugning the legitimacy of the lately introduced "telegram," the "sick man" at Constantinople strikes at the root of the controversy, and refuses to have anything to do with the construction of telegraphs. An English company has been moving heaven and earth to obtain a firman for a line from Constantinople to Bagdad; but, like the Peri at the gate of Paradise, it has found it easier to move heaven itself than the Porte. No way discouraged, however, by this "cold obstruction's apathy," Sir Wm. O'Shaughnessy, the founder of the Indian lines, has lately visited in person the contemplated scene of operations, and decided in favour of the practicability of the scheme. It is true that the worthy knight did not lay his account with a "tight" market and money at 10 per cent. But when this temporary pressure has relaxed, there can be no doubt that a rapid communication with India will be one of the most urgent cries of the day, and it is certain that the East-India Company is disposed to afford substantial encouragement to any possible project for that purpose.

CAVALRY FOR INDIA.

As the children of Anak appear to object to the encounter of the Bengal mutineers, the military authorities have acknowledged the wisdom of the saying attributed to an ancient king of the Hebrews, that "the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." They have accordingly reduced the standard stature for homicidal horsemen to a minimum of five feet nothing. Growing lads who aspire to a loftier station can thus commence in good time the honourable career of arms. And it is gratifying to state that many specimens of human undergrowth have already enlisted, and are now learning to keep their seat as the preliminary step to obtaining the marshal's biton, the foreshadow of which, it is notorious, every British dragoon carries in his holster. These future heroes will proceed to India without delay, and at once be placed on the high-road to glory and sudden death, under the command of distinguished cavalry officers of the late Bengal army.

INDIAN RAILWAYS.

THE Report of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company for the half-year terminating on the 30th June, 1857, is eminently satisfactory. Notwithstanding the serious disturbances in adjacent districts, the company's works had suffered neither molestation nor delay. Two portions of the line, indeed, had not advanced quite so rapidly as was expected; but this was owing to accidental and surmountable obstacles. The permanent way open from Bombay to Campoolee and Wassind has been kept in excellent order throughout, and the second line of rails laid down from Tannah to Callian was opened for traffic in February. The half-year's receipts on the eighty-eight miles already completed amounted to 33,610*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.*, being an increase of 9,055*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.* on the receipts of the previous half-year, and 18,915*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.* in excess of the expenditure. Since the retirement of Mr. Nicholson, the late superintending director, the secretary's salary has been fixed at 700*l.*, and the Board suggests that the 1,300*l.* remaining from the sum of 2,000*l.* appropriated to the directors under the arrangement sanctioned by the East-India Company, should for the future be allowed to the London direction. The half-yearly Report of the East-Indian Railway Company for the same period of time is necessarily less favourable. Owing to the Dinapore mutiny, the preparations made for the great bridge across the Soane river have been rendered useless and abortive. At other stations, likewise, the plant has been destroyed, and some valuable lives have been lost. In the Upper Provinces, the works have naturally been brought to a stand-still, and the only portion likely to be completed next spring is a section of twenty-one miles in the South Beerbhoom district. Of the line already open the accounts are most satisfactory. The permanent way and works are even in better order than at first, and the cost of maintenance has been reduced from 10½*d.* to 6½*d.* per train per mile. The total number of passengers conveyed between the 1st January and the 30th June was 548,547; namely, 6,770 by first-class, 26,424 by second-class, and 515,353 by third-class carriages; showing an increase of 83,426 over the preceding half year. The tonnage in goods and minerals, exclusive of parcels, carriages, and live stock, amounted to 63,750 tons; being an increase of 19,055 tons over the preceding half-year. The traffic receipts consequently gave a corresponding increase of 14,831*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.*, making a total of 63,459*l.* 4*s.* 3*d.* And while the receipts have been thus augmented, the expenditure has been diminished from Rs. 40·98 to Rs. 36·72 per cent.; the net revenue receipts being thus 40,215*l.* 5*s.* 5*d.* The skill and gallant conduct of Messrs. Boyle and Kelly in fortifying the beleaguered house at Arrah call forth a merited compliment from the Board, whose sanguine anticipations of the remunerative character of this great public work are by no means lessened on account of this temporary check to the completion of the line.

There is no longer any question or dispute as to the immense advantage of establishing rapid and easy communication between all parts of our Indian empire; but in order to perfect the system, both railways and telegraphs must be laid down without unnecessary delay to connect our Eastern possessions with the Home Government and with European markets. The evidence given before the Committee of the House of Commons in May last is conclusive as to the practicability of constructing and maintaining a telegraphic line between the Mediterranean Sea and the Persian Gulf, and beyond those points no difficulties exist; but if there did exist even great and weighty impediments, the necessity of the case demands that they shall be removed or conquered. A telegraphic communication with India can no longer be delayed without serious detriment to the public interests, or without the incurrance of a grave responsibility on the part of those who raise timid and shortsighted objections.

ENGLISH ORATORS ON THE INDIAN MUTINY.

SOME of our readers, perhaps, may have felt some surprise that no critical remarks appeared in our editorial columns on the subject of the sermons preached upon the national Fast Day. But, where all were so bad, it would have been invidious to have selected any one for peculiar castigation. Beyond correcting the mis-statement jesuitically circulated by the Missionary Society regarding the alleged dismissal from the army of a Christian convert, in the year of Grace 1819, we abstained from offering our homage to the profound ignorance on Indian matters displayed by our reverend pastors and masters. With unparalleled forbearance we did not even direct the slightest sarcasm against the assertion that Indian sepoy mutinied at Meerut and Delhi because we cultivated opium in Bengal and smuggled it into China. With equally exceptional self-denial, we neither laughed nor murmured when it was proclaimed from the pulpit that the East-India Company oppressed the people subject to their sway with a grinding taxation, in order to swell their own profits and dividends. It was obvious that the gentlemen who entertained or expressed such an opinion must have been too much engaged with their parochial duties to be aware of what was passing in the political world. It was clear that their knowledge of India came no further down than the time of Warren Hastings; and it would not surprise us to learn that the celebrated speeches delivered at the trial of that ill-used Governor-General formed the principal groundwork of the angry declamations of the Fast Day. We may, perhaps, have regretted the existence of such deep-seated ignorance on the part of the instructors of the rising generation, but it was impossible to deny that it was quite in keeping with the apathy, and even repugnance, on the subject of Indian affairs displayed by all classes of the community, including our hereditary legislators as well as the chosen representatives of the people. The natural consequence of this previous and habitual neglect is an ostentatious display of recently acquired knowledge. Every man dogmatizes for himself, while he ridicules the dogmatism of his neighbour. Thus every one has a different reason to assign for the breaking out of the mutiny, and the only point in which all agree is in being utterly wrong.

But in the midst of all this variety and contrariety of opinion as to the origin of the evil, it is gratifying to observe the almost perfect unanimity that prevails as to its treatment and extirpation. Men of all ranks and professions recognize the necessity of putting down the mutiny with a strong hand, and of administering stern and uncompromising justice. The maudlin whine for leniency to the miscreants who butchered defenceless men, who tore in pieces little children, who violated and tortured beautiful maidens and women with child,—this cry of imbecility has been stifled by the manly voice of indignation, demanding the infliction of condign punishment on the murderers and their accomplices. Not even the amiable Lord Shaftesbury hesitated to excommunicate, as it were, the blood-stained monsters who may fall into the hands of our soldiery. Neither his lordship nor any other Christian, indeed, asks for revenge. Vengeance belongs to a higher Power, and to a Judge who cannot err. But a swift and certain punishment for crimes unprecedented save in Asiatic history, is due to outraged humanity. In this, all civilized nations are agreed. Not only the American Minister, speaking at a Mansion-House banquet, insists upon the international duty of dispensing an inexorable justice, but continental journalists also—not usually friends or admirers of this country—unite with our own press in strengthening the hands of those who wield the glaive. The only danger of ill-timed clemency seemed to threaten the world from India itself—whence it was least expected. It was affirmed that a civilian had been sent into the disturbed districts to supersede martial law, and to re-establish the tedious formalities of the ordinary courts. Lord Granville, however, labours to dissipate this apprehension, and maintains that Lord Canning is determined to show no mercy to “the devils in human form.” It is also satisfactory to learn from his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, on the unimpeachable authority of Sir Colin Campbell himself, that the utmost cordiality existed between the Governor-General and the Commander-in-Chief, and that all reports to the contrary are false and unfounded.

TWO PRESIDENCIES FOR INDIA.

It is after periods of trouble and confusion that men are most alive to the advantages of order and harmony. Governments, in the same manner as individuals, then perceive the defects in previous arrangements, and readily avail themselves of the opportunity to remodel their political relations. The result of every European war for some centuries past has been the remodelment of territories, in the hope of averting future hostilities. Unhappily, the wisdom of the conception has seldom, if ever, been borne out by the felicity of the execution. So many clashing interests have interfered, such jarring elements of discord have been evoked, that it has been found impossible to develop into action any grand scheme of international policy. Without going back to comparatively forgotten times, the philosophical student of history is compelled to acknowledge that very few of the great results anticipated from remarkable treaties have ever been realized. The peace of Ryswick was but the prelude to the wars of Queen Anne; the deliberations of the Congress of Vienna were stultified by the events of the next fifteen years.

And yet, notwithstanding these experiences—which, after all, amount to little more than an illustration of the fallibility of human judgment—we propose to advocate a congress of Indian statesmen to consider the propriety of remodelling the British empire in the East. As it is at present constituted, there is a governor of the Punjab, a second of the North-West Provinces, a third of Bengal, a fourth of Bombay, a fifth of Madras, and an officer very like a governor of Pegu and the Tenasserim Provinces. There are, besides, three commanders-in-chief and one governor-general (in council) over all. Now, even so far back as the time of Homer, the instinct of mankind had discovered that a plurality of rulers was no advantage, and certainly the history of British India in no way runs counter to the experience of past ages. The local governors are powerless to do good, though not incapable of evil. For the slightest innovation, however urgent may be its need, they are compelled first to obtain the sanction of the governor-general in council—the governor-general, perhaps, being far away on the hills of Simlah, or the frontiers of Cashmere, or on a visit to the Neilgherries or Rangoon, while his less mercurial council remain sullenly moping in Calcutta. No one can seriously approve of such an anomalous state of affairs, or imagine that such a complication of the machinery is at all conducive to good government. In ordinary times there is a natural and wholesome repugnance to removing the ancient landmarks, or to do anything calculated to unsettle men's minds; but this objection is no longer valid under existing circumstances, and the very complexion of the times is favourable to a radical change. What, then, is the mighty revolution we usher in with such a long and tedious preamble? It is simply this. Let there be but one commander-in-chief of the army in India, in reality as well as in name; and let there be but one army, recruited from all races and tongues—Hindoos, Mahomedans, Punjabees, Sikhs, Belooches, and Bheels. Let every soldier in the service thoroughly understand that he is liable to be called upon to do duty at any point between the two poles, and that, in time of peace, his legitimate sphere of action is only bounded by the limits of the British empire. Not, indeed, that we propose to garrison Portsmouth with a native corps, or even to send one unnecessarily to the Cape; but we would have the native soldiery taught to consider themselves an integral portion of the imperial army. But while we insist upon the necessity of having only one commander-in-chief, who need not absolutely have attained the mature age of threescore years and ten, nor be inevitably one of the last survivors of the battle of Dettingen, we admit the advantage of a division of civil labour and responsibility. The empire is too vast to be administered by any man, however comprehensive his intellect, however robust his frame, so long as he is subject to those human imperfections—unity and indivisibility. Calcutta would naturally remain the capital of the eastern government, comprehending all the country lying between the river Cagur and the Bay of Bengal. In other words, the extreme north-western frontier would lie a little beyond Umballa, and thence be continued in a south-easterly direction, skirting Rajpootana and Scindiah's dominions. The Calcutta presidency would thus embrace the Upper and Lower Doabs, Kumaon, Oude, Bundelcund, Behar, Saugor, Nagpore, the Northern Circars, Cuttack, Bengal, Assam, and the provinces on the east coast of the Bay of Bengal, but independently of the Straits Settlements. These should be governed and carefully watched from home, and ever guarded by a powerful naval squadron, to hold the key of both the Indian and the China seas. The Western Presidency of India would thus contain the Punjab, Scinde, the present Bombay Presidency, and the entire peninsula to the south of Nagpore. Its capital would be KURRACHEE. When the Punjab railways are completed, Kurrachee will command the line of the Indus, and the whole extent of the north-west frontier. Railways from Mooltan to the mouths of the passes will effectually check the advance of any invading army descending from Afghanistan. With a network of lines connecting Kurrachee, Mooltan, Lahore, and Peshawur, that frontier would be rendered impregnable. Bombay has outlived its time. Accidental circumstances from the first gave it an exceptional and adventitious importance. It is almost a geographical law, that no city will be permanently great unless situated on, or near, a river or an estuary. Bombay is merely a repetition of Tyre, and like that "crowning city," will one day become "a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea." Madras, too, will pass away like Sidon; though, it is to be hoped, without the assistance of either the pestilence or the sword. The true position for a commercial city on that coast is Coringa; and it is by no means impossible that if ever the works on the Godavery are completed, that port may really become the seat of a flourishing traffic and the emporium of the peninsula. Kurrachee, on the other hand, possesses all the natural advantages that foreshadow both trade and empire. Its spacious harbour affords secure anchorage to a noble fleet of merchant ships, and so soon as the railway to the Indus is completed, the natural productions and the manufactures of the Punjab, of Upper India, of Afghanistan, Cashmere, and Thibet, will there be exchanged for the results of European art and industry. Calcutta and Kurrachee are the two keys to the British possessions in the East. If from those two points railways radiated over the surface of the empire, our position would be impregnable; and a fabulous prosperity, supported and perpetuated by thousands of British colonists, would revive the traditions of the golden age.

COLONIZATION OF INDIA.

IN our last issue we endeavoured to illustrate the justice and expediency of interesting the native gentry of India in the permanency of our rule, by admitting them into the public service in an honourable capacity and on suitable salaries. It must not, however, be supposed that we are in favour of employing either Hindoo or Mahomedan in the dispensation of justice in cases where Europeans are concerned. The Hindoos, indeed, are rarely to be found on the magisterial bench. The law of our courts being essentially the same that prevailed at the time of our conquest of the country, and the official language being Persian, the Mahomedans naturally monopolized all the legal and forensic business; but these cannot be depended upon to dispense equal-handed justice when the suit lies between a believer and an infidel. It would be impossible to induce a Mussulman judge to decide in favour of a Christian to the prejudice of a follower of Islam. The experiment has been oftentimes tried in Turkey, with such effect that the interests of Christians have demanded the interference of the European powers, and a mixed tribunal has been established for the adjudication of all disputes between professors of those different religions. In India, at least in the provinces, it is not to be expected that a tribunal of this character can be obtained until there occurs a vast increase of European immigrants. But this, again, cannot reasonably be looked for in the present unsatisfactory state of the social system, and of the civil and criminal code. No Englishman who entertains any respect for himself, or who simply wishes to live in peace and tranquillity, neither molesting his neighbours nor being molested by them, will be easily persuaded to settle in a country where he is regarded as an adventurer and an interloper. In some regions, indeed, the name of adventurer is an honourable title, and implies a man of spirit and enterprise; but in India, that epithet is indiscriminately applied to every individual not actually engaged in the service of Government. Merchants, indigo-planters, barristers, and journalists belong to that category, and are still looked upon as outside barbarians. In the olden time, when the East-India Company was in reality a corporation of merchants enjoying the monopoly of the Indian trade, it was undoubtedly good policy to prevent intruders from trespassing upon their private manor; and the few who did succeed in introducing themselves into their preserves were, in fact, little better than smugglers and poachers in traffic. It was this class of men that brought European settlers into disrepute—just as in the southern states of America the “white rubbish” are despised by the slaves and oppressed by the slave-owners. The opprobrium attached to the early settlers in Bengal has never altogether been effaced. Cause and effect mutually act upon one another. Because the name of planter has fallen into disrepute, men of respectability hesitate to incur the odium; and, because these stand aloof, the stigma still remains in force. In the upper provinces, however, there are many planters of unblemished character—gentlemen in the highest sense of the word—who nevertheless are regarded with an evil eye by the official servants of the Government. Many of these “adventurers” have long resided in the country, and have thus become intimately acquainted with the language, the character, and the usages of the natives. Previous to the revolt of the Bengal army, they rendered excellent service as good citizens in arbitrating between native disputants, and in thus preventing unnecessary litigation. They likewise mingled freely with their neighbours, and in familiar conversation enlarged their ideas, and prepared their minds for the reception of Truth. Since the commencement of the outbreak they have girded on the sword, and in feats of daring have rivalled the most gallant warriors. Their local knowledge and influence have also proved very valuable on many occasions, and the intelligence they have been thus enabled to obtain has been far more accurate than that derived through the ordinary channels. These are obviously the men who ought to be invested with magisterial functions, and placed in authority over their respective districts. The vast extent of the country renders it a hopeless task to furnish a sufficient number of highly-paid civilians to administer justice and collect the revenue. But that deficiency might be amply supplied by appointing a certain proportion of resident magistrates, who would be content with the social advantages of their position, without looking for pecuniary emoluments. An appeal from their decisions would, of course, lie to a higher jurisdiction; and no one, however slightly acquainted with the native character, need entertain any apprehension as to the free use of this privilege whenever their judgments failed to give satisfaction. At present, and perhaps for some years subsequent to the suppression of the mutiny, it may be difficult to find any great number of residents capable of holding such appointments; but that obstacle may be gradually removed by encouraging European colonists, instead of heaping up obstacles in their way. Along the foot and on the spurs of the mountain-ranges, and indeed in most parts of the North-West Provinces, European settlers soon become acclimatized, and afterwards continue in the enjoyment of as good health as would fall to their lot at home. It is not the climate that is deleterious, so much as vicious indulgences and habits of indolence. Military men, indeed, may suffer from the frequent changes to which they are subjected, in passing suddenly from a cool station in the hills to a hot one in the plains; but the colonist is free from these disturbing causes, and in constant occupation may defy the climate, and even cease to yearn after his beloved fatherland. On the highlands he can cultivate tea, silk, rice, potatoes, jute, and even cotton, while in the plains he has only to make his selection from the usual productions of the tropics. In such an emergency as the present, it would be impossible to overrate the importance of 500 or 1,000 European settlers, bold riders and skilled in the use of fire-arms. Had there been only fifty colonists in the Allyghur district, that town would never have fallen, nor the communication have been interrupted between Agra and Meerut. But before any immigrants will venture to tempt fortune in the far East, they must be secured against the indignity and danger of being dragged before a native magistrate or judge, and assured that all idea of amalgamating the Supreme with the Sudder Court has been finally and for ever abandoned.

* SACK OF OLD DELHI BY TIMOUR.

[Note.—The extracts in this article are taken from the late Mr. Cargill's translations from the Zuffernamah of Sherif-ul-Ali Yeydee.]

THE great Tartar conqueror having advanced as far as Panceput without encountering any serious opposition, there poured his hordes into the Doab and pushed forward until he arrived over against Delhi. This was not the city of our own times, for that was not founded until two hundred and thirty years later, though situated at a very little distance higher up the Jumna. Timour, having halted the main body, sent a division across the river to storm Jahan-namah, on the site of which now stands the house and spacious courtyards of the late Gwalior chief, Maharajah Hindoo Rao, whence one of our earliest batteries played upon the imperial city. His next exploit was the capture of Lonee, a fortified village between the Jumna and the Hindoon, not far from the scene of General Wilson's first successes. He then crossed the river with a small detachment, and defeated an army under Malmoud's general, Mulloo Khan. While encamped on the Jumna, Timour is said to have issued orders that all the prisoners should be put to death, and 100,000 Hindoos were massacred in cold blood. The numbers are evidently exaggerated; and if any excuse could be offered for inhumanity, it would be in the ill-timed exultation displayed by the prisoners on learning that the emperor's general was advancing to give battle at the head of a superior force. The barbarian naturally repaid their ill-will by their murder, immediately after victory had crowned his arms. The whole army then crossed over and encamped on the ground at present occupied by Metcalfe House, and two days afterwards moved forward to attack Sultan Mahmoud's timorous array. The latter was estimated at 10,000 horsemen and 40,000 foot; "but their chief stay were the mountain-like elephants, which came on roaring like the sea boiling from violent winds. All were equipped with offensive weapons and defensive armour. To their teeth, which appeared like pillars, were bound poisoned iron prongs. On the backs of all were placed seats of wood, fended round. On every seat were cross-bowmen and long-bowmen, in places whence they could annoy; and archers and matchlockmen stood on the flanks of the elephants, ready for battle." Timour's soldiers, who had never before encountered these huge animals in fight, were at first filled with some trepidation; but their leader tranquillized their minds by gallant words, and took measures to check the advance of the elephants. A ditch was dug along the front of the position, and large chereaux-de-frise of iron were set up in considerable numbers. As the two armies neared one another, Timour "alighted with a step of sincerity, and turned the face of piety and supplication towards that King who has no fellow. With great purity of heart he gave utterance to prayer, and paid to God the bow of lowliness, the prostration of humility, the profession of faith, and all the modes of resignation. To the true God, who has no fellow, he uttered the prayer of two inclinations; and having placed the forehead of abasement on the dust of humility, he besought from the heavenly throne aid and victory, placing no reliance on his own efforts or the multitude of his auxiliaries." The fierce onslaught of the Tartar host was irresistible. "The champions of Hindostan, through fear of their lives, trembled like animals led to slaughter. Yet, according to their strength and ability, having confirmed the feet of bravery, they manifested the hand of valour; but to contend against a strong wind is not in the power of a weak gnat; nor is it in the power of the timid hind to contend with the fierce lion. At last, having been defeated, they set the face of humility towards flight. Sultan Mahmoud and Mulloo Khan having fled, each by himself, retreated into the city and shut the gates. And Ameer Khaleel Sultan, on the enemy's left wing, by the assistance of his young fortune and the force of the blows of his sword, captured one from amongst the elephants, and, having hurled down the driver, brought it into the presence of his majesty just as a countryman compels a wild bull to plough his land. When, through the grace of God, the zephyrs of victory and conquest blew upon his triumphant standard, and the enemy, having turned their backs, set their faces towards flight, Sahib Kiran (Timour), about the time of the second prayer, rode to the gates of Delhi and inspected it with a careful eye. Then he turned the reins of his horse therefrom, and alighted on the banks of the Houz Khas. The Houz Khas is a tank built by Sultan Feiroz Shah. It is so far across that a bowshot cannot reach to the other side, and it becomes brimful in the season of the rains." Here the victorious army encamped, and the principal officers flocked to the royal tent to offer their congratulations, and to chant their own praises. "And when his majesty Sahib Kiran considered the abundance of the mercies of God, tears flowed from his eyes, and he became very devout, and gave thanks that the High God had so distinguished him in this world, and had bestowed on him such sons and such auxiliaries so devoted to his service." That same night the Sultan and his unfortunate general fled from the city, and escaped to Guzerat. On the following day Timour entered old Delhi, and received the submission of the inhabitants. The elephants and rhinoceroses were also brought out, and made their obeisances to the conqueror. "The elephants, by way of kissing the dust, put their heads on the ground, and, as if they were asking for mercy, began to roar aloud. One hundred and twenty war elephants came into the possession of the king." After the affairs of the state had been regulated, Timour prepared, as was his wont, to yield himself to a wild debauch. "When the morning of victory and conquest had arisen from the horizon of prosperity, and the bride of desire was shining in the meeting of security, then the pillars of state and the partakers in the king's convivial pleasures caused, after their repose from battle, the music of song to reach the ear of majesty. The result of the harmony of their representations was, that the auspicious heart of his majesty was inclined to pleasure and joy. The tree of pleasure was forthwith planted in the garden of enjoyment. The brains of delight and pleasure were perfumed with the sweet odour of musk-smelling wine. From the splendour of the royal cup the festive meeting was lighted up with joy and ease of heart." While Timour was thus revelling in gross sensuality, a contention arose between his insolent soldiery and the people of Delhi. Certain accountants and other officers had been sent into the city to take an account of the royal property, while various ladies of the court were also engaged in visiting whatever was curious and worthy of note.

"For the protection of all these, an army had been despatched into the city. Moreover, several thousand horsemen, who had obtained orders for sugar and corn, entered the town. Finally, certain nobles had received orders to take a large force and seize all the Guebres that were not inhabitants of Delhi, but had come in from the country around for the sake of protection. When a great body of soldiers was thus drawn together, then the Guebres of the three cities of Delhi, viz., Seere, Jahanpunah, and old Delhi, rose in rebellion, and began to fight. Also a great many of the infidels set fire to their own household property, and burned themselves, together with their wives and children. Then the soldiers, notwithstanding the Hindoos opposed them with great courage and resolution, stretched forth the hand of power and violence in quest of plunder and spoil. At this crisis the nobles ordered the gates to be shut, that the army now outside might not enter, nor any great amount of harm be done. But on this night about 15,000 troops were in the fort, and throughout the whole night they continued to plunder, and to set on fire the houses of the people, and to feed the flames. In some places the Guebres, with great resolution, stood on the defensive, and blood and slaughter ensued. Early in the morning, when, from the inroad of the King of the Stars, the property of the Hindoo night was entirely plundered (that is, when the sun arose) all the army entered the city, and a great noise was created thereby. On that Friday, the 17th day of the month, many Mahullahs, in Jahanpunah, were publicly plundered. On Saturday, the 18th, the same state of riot continued; and every man of the army took captive about 150 persons, men and women, and brought them out of the city, so that to the meanest man belonging to the army not less than twenty persons became captive. And the other plunder and spoil consisted of various kinds of jewels and pearls, and particularly rubies and diamonds, various kinds of valuable cloths, various kinds of costly things, vessels of gold and silver, and money without count, on which was the impression of Ala-ul-deen Khiljee. And the amount of this money and the other property was so great as to defy narrative by the two-tongued pen. And amongst the spoil there were female slaves who wore bracelets and feet-ornaments on their arms and legs, the very toes of whose feet were adorned with rings of great value. Respecting medicines, ~~simples~~, and aromatics (after which great quest was usually made), ~~no one now inquired.~~ On Sunday, the 19th day of the month, they turned their attention to old Delhi, whither many of the Hindoo infidels had fled. These, being collected in the Jama Musjid, were prepared for battle and slaughter. Ameer Shah Malik and Alee Sultan Tovachee, having taken with them 500 tried warriors, went towards it, and with the stroke of the infidel-slaughtering sword, sent them all to hell; and the heaps of the heads of the Hindoos reached to heaven; and their bodies became a prey to beasts and birds. Thus, on the day above mentioned, all old Delhi was plundered, and the inhabitants who remained alive were made captive. Several days successively were they occupied in bringing the captives out of the city, and each Ameer obtained possession of a crowd of slaves. Amongst them were some thousands of tradesmen and artisans; and concerning these the royal order was issued that some of them should be distributed amongst those princes and nobles who had attended on the royal person, and had not entered into the city; and also amongst those princes and nobles who had been appointed to different stations without the city. And as the pious resolve of his highness Sahib Kiran, according to the proverb that the resolve of a good Mussulman is better than his actions, had written on the tablets of his heart that he should erect a Jama Musjid of cut stone in his capital of Samarcand, the royal order was issued that all the stone-cutters should be kept for the king's particular use. * * With good fortune and prosperity Sahib Kiran remained fifteen days at Delhi; and the beams from the crescent of his victorious standard were removing the rust from the looking-glass of the sun and the moon, and the excellences of his government and his victories were such as to have created envy in the souls of Jumsheed and Alexander, had they been alive."

Having thus completed the destruction of Delhi, Timour "turned his attention to other provinces of Hindostan." He had not gone far before he was met by the ambassadors of a neighbouring prince, who presented him with two white parrots. "These parrots were of the age of Toghlugh Shah, and had been used to talk, from a long time, in the meetings of kings. The heart of Sahib Kiran accepted as a good omen this most precious curiosity. Most precious, in that with respect to speech, these birds differed from all others, and were flying in the field of the excellence of men." These courtly birds were by no means juvenile. Toghlugh Shah was crushed to death by a pavilion falling on him about the year 1323, and Timour did not invade India before 1397. It is clear that both the barbarian and his panegyrist looked upon these venerable parrots as prodigies, endowed with speech and reason.

MANUSCRIPT, EXHUMED FROM THE BURIED ARCHIVES IN THE PALACE OF THE MOST ILLUSTRIOUS ALMAZARKHANASAR EL RAMAZAN BAHADUR.

THERE was once a king, and he dwelt in a rich land, flowing with milk and honey, and he governed through his great vakeels,* who lay upon couches stuffed with rose-leaves, and issued their *firman*s with much state, inscribed upon shining vellum, and traced with peacock's quills of rare gorgeousness.

Now the land was not large, though it was very fat. It was a prosperous land, teeming with a redundant population; therefore came it, that, fat as were the pastures, in some places they grew lean, because of the over many mouths which ate thereof.

So it fell out that some of the subjects of the king, men lightly esteemed by the great vakeels, because of the merchandize which they bought and sold, but men of mighty enterprise, and passing rich in hope and speculation, migrated from the fat land, and made unto themselves settlements in a far-off country, where the land and the people were strange to look upon—the language spoken rude and foreign to their ear—all Nature tuned in a different key from that of the fat land they loved. "Nevertheless"—thus they communed among themselves—"the country is wide; there are wide wildernesses untrodden, and waiting for the hand of man to cultivate,—wide pastures,—no possessor! Lo! here will we pitch our tents, and sell our merchandize, and cultivate the soil, and bring strange treasures back again to the land we love. Here shall we find much gold and silver, and many gems; we will exchange merchandize with the strange people, and grow rich. And lo! and behold, here are we like unto prophets of the sun, and men cry 'Wah! wah!'—whereas in our own fat teeming country we were but as the scum of the earth, not fit to hold the lamp for the great vakeels, who write on shining vellum, and issue their great decrees. True, we have been voyaging long, and many a time has the unlearned smote his breast and sworn that the end of the earth was passed; but we know mighty more of the wondrous things of this our globe, and could stroke our beards serenely and say, 'Peace be with you, for we shall surely reach the land at last.' And so we have journeyed on, through long, weary sun-settings and up-risings; and our beards have grown long and gray since we left the fat country behind us, so distant is the place of our sojourning-to-be." Thus spoke the old men. . . . Thus did the old men. . . . And lo! and behold, beside that sea-coast arose warehouses and dwelling-places; and merchandize was bartered, and crops were sown, and forests were levelled; and out of the wilderness arose the hum of many voices; and the people of the strange land bowed before the old men, and cried "Wah, wah!" at the report of their doings. And the old men sent a messenger back to the fat land, praying the king to grant unto them a long roll of shining vellum, inscribed by the peacock's pen, manifesting to the whole world that they, merchandizers from the country of their king, had royal leave and right in their own persons to build warehouses in the strange land, and plant vineyards, and barter their merchandize, and rule over the strange people who cried unto them "Wah, wah!"

* Ministers, or agents.

And this did the king do. And the old men went to their graves; and their sons followed in their footsteps and sojourned in the strange land, doing in everything as their fathers had done.

Years rolled on; and lo! and behold, there arose a wondrous transformation in the strange land of exile, whither the merchandizers had bent their steps. The pilgrims who travelled thither saw a wondrous sight. The subjects of the king of the fat land, who once sold merchandize, were beheld transformed into mighty princes, wielding the sword and sceptre. The kings of the strange country bowed down before them, and put their crowns under their feet. Buying and selling had become the least part of the business of these now mighty subjects of the king. Lo! they were clothed in fine linen, and judged the strange people, and made laws; and sat in conclave, and cultivated barren wastes, and sent their emissaries everywhere to portion out the land, and make treaties with the strange kings, and settle that wide, that mighty, that giant country, by the words which proceeded from the breath of their nostrils. And they stroked their beards, and said to themselves, "Lo! here have we spread our fame from one end of the land to the other. Even kings come and fall down and worship before us. Lo! here have we founded a mighty empire for our king. Here shall his name be glorious. Our land, won by our toil, and our sword, and our councils, shall be his land. Back to him shall we bring the treasures we have won, and spend our hoarded gold in the fat country which gave us birth. Thus shall it be still fatter through our great deeds."

Men shall say no longer that it wants breadth and length to make it glorious. All these wide pastures, all these rich forests shall we add unto it; thousands of leagues, millions of strange subjects, shall we bring unto it. Only, let the king govern through us; we who have sweated and toiled, and spent our blood, and sacrificed our best years, in getting the strange rich land to bow before our king,—we who have shown the whole world that we can guide and rule, as well as buy and sell,—only let the king govern through us. We will be his delegates. For him, the honour and the glory; for us the weight and toil. Let him give us another roll of shining vellum, traced by the peacock's feather pen, and therein declare that we have right and leave to govern still as we have done—for the king and king's son—we, his faithful subjects, he our lord and king. And all the world shall honour him for that which we have done; and the brightest jewel in his crown shall be the empire which our hands have won."

But it came to pass that the king's fat vakeels, who were clothed in purple and fine linen, and who fared sumptuously every day, turned themselves on their rose-leaf-stuffed couches, and rubbed their sleepy eyes, and called aloud, "Wah! wah! what is this that we see? Do these dogs think themselves sons of the mighty king, that they can rule and govern mighty men? Shall these dogs be set in high places, and cover themselves with silver and gold and honour and glory, so that the king's own vakeels shine with diminished lustre, and hide their faces behind their mantles and eat dust? Surely no. To the king shall go up the sound of many voices; we will say unto him, 'O king, thou art great and mighty; but thou wilt be mightier still, if thou wilt decree that thy vakeels shall share in the glory of ruling the strange country. Write on the shining vellum that these dogs and sons of dogs shall not govern alone. Make thy vakeel strong in delegated power, to be to these dogs a stumbling-block in the fulfilment of their own devices. Thus, O king, will thy glory be increased, and all thy enemies will see that thou art in truth and verity a king.'"

So the king did as he was commanded, and hung a very fat vakeel, a mighty vakeel, sleepy, self-glorifying, and strong, round the necks of those merchandizing rulers, to clog their footsteps wherever they should go; to hold them stoutly by the hand when they seemed minded to do, and to propel them forcibly along when they seemed minded to leave undone. Sleepy, but strong! Too sleepy to decypher long, dried-up rolls of yellow parchment, but strong enough to tug at the reins of power. And more vakeels came after him; all of them long-bearded, orthodox, ignorant, sleepy, and strong. "The Evil Eye be upon that distant land!" say they. "Sorry work to toil for the king about an unknown waste! Loathsome work, to burn the lamp over never-ending rolls of yellow parchment, choking ourselves with break-throat names! We love our fat land, with its oily sounds. But these ruler-subjects of our king wax strong. We'll teach them that the king's vakeels know more of the distant land than they! Idiots—to think that the king's vakeels know not every single thing in Allah's universe! Idiots, to think that the king's vakeels won't rule and govern in their shoes! Did dogs, and the sons of dogs, think to eat loaves and fishes denied to the king's vakeels? No! by the hair of Mahomet! these dogs shall be cast out, and the king's vakeels rule over the strange land!"

So feuds arose between the merchant-princes and the king's vakeel; and the string of government was pulled contrary ways, and sometimes was sorely nigh to snap. And the men who had ruled over the stranger land from the beginning, and who knew the way the winds blew, and the course the currents took, and the depth of the streams, and the height of the mountains, and the thickness of the forest trees, found at length that their knowledge took the guise of crime in the eyes of the king's vakeel. "Who were these dogs, and sons of dogs, that they should know better than the king's vakeel, who wrote with the peacock's quill, and lay on a bed of rose-leaves?"

Then arose a great man and wise, from out the merchant-empire seat; and he said unto his brethren: "See ye not what the king's vakeels are minded to do? They are minded to cast us out, and take the distant land to rule it with their own hand, and yet not with their own hand; for behold the king's vakeels are given to sleep exceedingly, and they know not the way the winds blow in that distant country of our adoption—nor the course the currents take—nor the depth of the streams—nor the height of the mountains—nor the denseness of the forests. Their eyes have never seen the land; their ears have never heard the stranger voices; they are as men who would do exceeding fine work in darkness, pitchy darkness. If it come to pass that they cast us out, lo! and behold, the new empire we have created will dissolve—the stranger people will rise and cry against our king's sway—our labours and our fathers' labours will be all for nought. Rise, therefore, brethren, with one voice, rise; and cry unto the king with a loud voice, and it may be that he will listen to your prayer, and suffer not the king's vakeels to cast out the men who have planted the brightest jewel in the king's own crown." Thus spoke the wise man; and his words rang through the hall with a trumpet-sound. It was as though he summoned them to battle and to victory.

But there were differing elements among the brethren; and some went to sleep, and others peeped into the marble-hall where the vakeels reposed themselves, and the lustre of the peacock's quill blinded their eyes so far that they forgot the "trumpet-call," and kissed the feet of the great vakeel, instead of following the wise ruler to battle. And the wise ruler sighed, because he said to himself, "What will become of the stranger people, if firmans be issued from the marble halls of the king's vakeels? Lo! their eyes, the eyes of the king's vakeels, have never looked on the stranger land; and their ears never listened to the voices of her people. Sorry will be the rule of darkness and blind unawaredness; and ill will the fiery steeds be guided through the dangerous defiles, by hands which never held the reins alone. Lo! we have filled the chariot, and with our well-known bit have the coursers been tamed. If we are cast out, will the fat vakeel avail to hold them down? In pitchy blackness of a night of ignorance, will he tell the way?—will miraculous intuition guide him on?—or will he near the precipice, and coursers, chariot, great vakeel and all, plunge into chaos?"

Thus spoke the wise man, and again his voice rang like a trumpet-call; but though he and other wise men raised aloud the sound of their remonstrance, the next roll of vellum which the king granted to them, for a sign of his favour and protection, had the name of the king's own vakeel written in large characters on the face of it.

So it came to pass that the king's vakeel waxed strong; and in intervals of wakefulness, when he scorned the rose-leaf couch, and in the recesses of his marble hall wielded the peacock quill, he issued firmans to the king's subjects in the distant land, and, stroking his beard, said unto himself, "Now will the strong men, who thought to rule, eat dust; for the firman has gone forth, and the vakeel of the king is great and mighty, and he alone shall prevail."

But lo! and behold, a mighty tumasha arose in the distant land, for the subjects of the king had read the firman of the king's vakeel; and they had gone forth into another stranger land;* and the men of the stranger land had risen with one accord against them, and had smote the subjects of the king; and lo! and behold, the sound of wailing went up through the fat country where dwelt the king, because of his people who had been cut off, and there was mourning and weeping, and putting on of sack-cloth, for the great woe which had fallen on the subjects of the great king.

Then arose again the wise men from out the jeerga,† and lifted up their voices and said, "Lo! this great evil hath come upon us, and we rend our garments, and mourn and lament, because the king's subjects are cut off from the land of the living. Is it not the great vakeel's firman which went forth to the distant land, which hath done this thing? Wherefore and for what cause did the subjects of the king betake themselves to other strange vineyards? Verily, the sin of wrong-doing shall not remain unpunished!"

Nevertheless, the king's vakeel waxed strong, and slept at ease on his rose-leaf couch, and drew the peacock-quill along the shining vellum, and men still cried unto him "Wah! wah!"

And he rubbed his sleepy eyes, and said unto himself, "Surely the men of the jeerga shall eat more dust yet. The king's vakeel is strong, and his mightiness shall yet swallow up that of these mighty men! Do they secretly laugh at my beard, and say unto each other, 'The king's vakeel knoweth not the land of Ram from the land of Kazam!!' Verily, their much wisdom shall avail them nothing; for, by the hair of the Prophet! the peacock's quill is better than knowledge, and the marble halls stronger than much understanding!!!"

And the wise man arose again in the rulers' jeerga, and sounded again the alarum call; and he said unto his brethren, with a clear true sound, which rang through the ears of those who heard: "Brethren, be strong; let not the king's vakeel prevail, to cast you from the chariot in mire. Lo and behold! much evil has arisen because of the king's vakeel; for he knew not the distant land nor the stranger people. Be strong; and for the sake of the stranger people, and for the sake of the brightest jewel in the king's own crown, suffer not the king's vakeel to trample you 'neath his feet; for in your archives are much knowledge, and from the breath of men who know the stranger land, wisdom in governing must surely evermore proceed. Help ye the king's vakeel with knowledge, with wisdom, with much counsel; but suffer him not to make ye eat dust before him. Already I behold him, with the eye of prophecy, overshadowing ye all, as ye think to guide the chariot coursers; but lo! ye are but puppets in his hand. His overshadowing hand propels and guides; ye do but seem to guide! Puppets, which a mightier power sets in motion, and works to its own ends! Brethren, let not this be! Arise, and be doing. Let the king's vakeels see that ye can rule! that so, when the time arrives (and it is now nigh at hand) for the king to inscribe another shining vellum roll, and give unto us anew our delegated power to govern the distant land which our fathers won, our names may be written in mighty characters of gold, and not be expunged by the stroke of the peacock's quill. Brethren, be up and doing. Defend the just rights of the jeerga. What blood, and treasure, and time, and labour, and long exile have won, let not the king's vakeel usurp! Lo! my time is short. I go to a better country, where the blessed ones wait at the gate to bring me in..... Much have I toiled for the distant land. Brethren, watch over it still. Labour for its people with all your might. Let not oppression prevail, to grind the poor, and despoil the just possessor of his rights. Brethren, cleave ye to justice, to honour, and to truth; and be strong."

Thus spoke the wise man in the jeerga. . . . And he passed unto his rest, leaving behind him rolls of vellum on which were inscribed words of wisdom and of knowledge, whereby those who should come after might be helped to govern the people of the distant land, and protect the poor and the weak. . . . And other wise men of the jeerga had also sunk to rest; . . . and lo! and behold, the jeerga waxed feeble, . . . and the king's vakeel rubbed his sleepy eyes, and arose from his couch of rose leaves, and said unto himself: "The day is at hand that I, the great and the mighty, shall reign alone in the distant land, stretching out my hand of power from the fat country; and lo! these men who rule even now, shall eat dust before the king."

And it came to pass, that after many years, low rumbling sounds arose from the distant land, as of a coming earthquake. The subjects of the king had dealt unrighteousness with the stranger people, and had hearkened not unto the words of the wise men who had ruled in the great jeerga; but had despoiled the stranger lords, who had bowed before them, of their lands* and great possessions, and had cast dust on the faith of sealed treaties, and had said unto themselves: "Lo! we are mighty, and can do even as we will. The lords are lazy, the lands are fat, the people are slaves; we will have them in possession."

Moreover, though they had all, when they came into the stranger land, sworn an oath that if the strange people would bow before their rule, they would leave unto them their gods and the creed of their fathers undisturbed, sundry among them had forgotten the vow, and, dressed in office robes, and standing 'neath the mighty shadow of the ruler's throne, had cried unto the people of the stranger land to come and worship their God, and break the images of their false gods in twain. . . . Whereupon a great fear arose throughout the land; and the fauqs of the stranger people rent their garments, and made the people drink of the poisoned waters of discourse, saying, "That which is done by a few, shall be done by the many. The king of the fat land has sworn to make us worship his God. If we rise not, and cast out the people of the fat land, our temples will surely be polluted, and our gods despised." . . . Then there arose a mighty tumult. . . . Mighty, terrible. The people of the stranger land, who had lived 'neath the rule of the king's subjects, like unto brother with brother, or servant with lord, arose and smote the people of the fat land. . . . And madness reigned throughout that distant country. . . . And the subjects of the king were put to the sword with many tortures; and the ancient lords of the soil who had been dispossessed looked on. Men, women, and children, all were murdered; innocents dying with agonies and wailings which, had the guilty even suffered them, we still had wrung our hands and mourned aloud in sackcloth! Men, women, and children!!! None spared whom wrath and vengeance could reach. Horrid were the wailings . . . deep was the woe! . . . The stranger subjects were as fiends let loose to leave behind them, in every city and in every plain, blackening ruin, and death, and desolation. And there were horrid wailings through the length and the breadth of the fat land; for lo! and behold, their sons and their daughters were slain; and they tore their hair, and beat their breasts, and would not be comforted.

But they looked not into the long rolls of vellum which the wise men had left behind them; else would they have known that all these things were prophesied to come to pass, if the people of the fat land dealt not righteousness and justice to the stranger people, nor kept in faithfulness their treaties and their vows.....No! the people of the fat land looked not upon those vellum rolls, words of the lips which were cold, and could no longer speak wisdom. No! the people of the fat land said unto themselves:—"Woe has fallen on the stranger land; therefore will we cast out the jeerga rulers, and have the king's vakeel to rule in their stead. What boots it that the jeerga rulers are not verily guilty concerning these woes—what boots it that men among them have written wisdom, and that to them and their fathers we owe the possession of the stranger land? Cast we these imaginations behind our backs. Lo! now is the time, when woe overspreads the land, and the great jeerga is decked with sackcloth—now is the time to give the government unto the king's vakeel, and to raise the peacock's quill on a pedestal of glory. Behold! the king's vakeel sleepeth not always. Even now, he rubbeth his eyes, bound with the film of sleep, and turneth himself on his rose-leaf couch, and stroketh his beard, and saith:—"Verily the day is come, and the hour, for the rulers who brought us the stranger land to eat dust. And dust they shall eat. What avails it that they tear their hair, and say: 'Not we have made these woes to cover the land?' What avails it that an ancient proverb hath it, that 'No man shall fell with his axe the tree which hath sheltered him, nor break in pieces the bridge of much antiquity which hath borne him in safety across the deep-welling stream?' All this availeth them nothing. Behold, on one thing we are determined, in our inmost minds, that the king's vakeel shall rule the stranger land, and the men who have held sway eat dust before him. True, our king loveth justice; but he dwelleth in the deep recesses of his crystal halls, and when his great vakeel bringeth unto him the shining vellum, to put thereto his hand and seal, he will smile a gracious smile, and say:—"Thy will, O vakeel, is my will. Be it done as thou dost command."

.....And there arose a mighty tumult of voices in the fat land; and men who had never before even so much as pronounced the names of the chief cities of the distant land, and long-bearded faqirs, all unknowing of its history, its people, and its lands, all cried aloud, with a loud voice:—"Let the great vakeel of the king be ruler! The men who sit in council, the men whose fathers brought us the land, shall surely eat the dust before us! Away with them—away with them! Let the halls where lie the vellum rolls full of the wisdom of the wise men who governed so wondrously that from their hands arose this giant empire—let the halls where assembled their jeerga, and where resounded their decrees—be razed to the ground. Let the remembrance of the wise rulers perish!"

Moreover, sundry among the people said:—"Because the people of the distant land have feared for their gods, and made a tumult, lo! and behold, we shall raise a mightier tumult still—one which shall rise even unto the mountain tops! for, by the hair of Mahomet, the king shall grant all his subjects who have vowed the vow of toleration leave to break that vow, in the face of all the people; and the stranger people shall be forced to worship, with their lips and with their knees, whatever we worship—whether they believe, or whether they do not believe; for our's is a religion of fire and sword. And the lands of which the lords were unrightfully dispossessed, even in these latter days, shall never own their ancient lordship more; and we will govern by the sword; and the king's vakeel, who never saw the distant land, and who knoweth not the land of Ram from the land of Kazam, shall be ruler thereof; and the ancient governors shall eat dust!" This did all the people cry with a loud voice. And the sound went up through the marble halls of the great vakeels, even unto the crystal palace of the king.

NENA SAHIB'S PROCLAMATIONS.

The following proclamations issued by this miscreant have been published. The first is dated the 1st July:—"As, by the kindness of God and the ikbal or good fortune of the Emperor, all the Christians who were at Delhi, Poonah, Satarah, and other places, and even those 5,000 European soldiers who went in disguise into the former city and were discovered, are destroyed and sent to hell by the pious and sagacious troops, who are firm to their religion; and as they have all been conquered by the present government, and as no trace of them is left in these places, it is the duty of all the subjects and servants of the government to rejoice at the delightful intelligence, and to carry on their respective work with comfort and ease."

Proclamation dated the 1st of July, and issued by order of the Nena:—"As by the bounty of the glorious Almighty God and the enemy-destroying fortune of the emperor, the yellow-faced and narrow-minded people have been sent to hell, and Cawnpore has been conquered, it is necessary that all the subjects and landowners should be as obedient to the present government as they had been to the former one; that all the government servants should promptly and cheerfully engage their whole mind in executing the orders of the government; that it is the incumbent duty of all the ryots and landed proprietors of every district to rejoice at the thought that the Christians have been sent to hell, and both the Hindoo and Mahometan religions have been confirmed; and that they should, as usual, be obedient to the authorities of the government, and never to suffer any complaint against themselves to reach the higher authority."

Order, dated the 5th July, to the city kotwal (mayor), by the Nena:—"It has come to our notice that some of the city people, having heard the rumours of the arrival of the European soldiers at Allahabad, are deserting their houses and going out into the districts, you are, therefore, directed to proclaim in each lane and street of the city, that regiments of cavalry and infantry, and batteries, have been despatched to check the Europeans either at Allahabad or Futtehpoore; that the people should therefore remain in their houses without any apprehension, and engage their minds in carrying on their work."

THE KING OF DELHI.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—I have received a letter from an Indian friend of mine, dated Benares, September 26, in which he says, "that some coins have come from Delhi, struck in the name of the fallen King of Delhi, bearing the following inscription:—"Ba zur zud sikkai noosrut turragee." 'Surrajood-deen Hyder Shah Ghazee.'"

The following is the literal translation of it:—

"On gold struck the die marked with victory." "Surrajood-deen Hyder Shah Ghazee."

It is at your service if you wish to insert it in your widely circulated journal.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

SYED ABDULLAH.

THE INDIAN ARMY.—The following gentlemen having obtained nominations to the Indian army, passed the required examination on the 3rd inst.:—A. H. F. Campbell, G. Coussmaker, A. F. Gerard, M. Protheroe, G. C. B. Taylor, John Biddulph, W. R. Birney, T. J. Cotton, C. R. Crawford, F. Hibbert, Alex. Milner, W. H. J. Stopford, J. H. Waller.

CAVALRY RECRUITS FOR INDIA.—Orders have been issued to recruiting parties to enlist men from 5 feet to 5 feet 4 inches in height, to be organized as cavalry regiments under the East-India Company, for service in India.

POLICE (BENGAL PRESIDENCY).—On the 1st Nov. appeared a copy of a despatch from the Governor-General of India to the Directors of the East-India Company (dated the 14th of May, 1857), with a heap of enclosures, relating to the system of police in the Bengal presidency. In the despatch of the 14th of May the Indian Government inform the Directors of their unanimous opinion that the appointment of one superintendent of police for the whole of the lower provinces is not expedient, and they consider the existing system of dividing the country into manageable tracts of four or five districts, and placing each district under the superintendence of a commissioner having authority in all the executive departments, inclusive of the police, as the best which has yet been devised for India, and one which works well both in Bengal and elsewhere. They agree generally in the view of the Governor-General (expressed in his minute) as to the extent to which it is desirable that a military organization should be given to the police of Bengal, and they opine that a moveable corps of station guards, or military police, should be attached to each division, ready to assist the civil force in case of need. The minute of the Governor-General, of the 18th of February, 1857, contained the following proposals:—1. That the police of Bengal be reorganized at once, without waiting for a plan applicable to the whole of India. 2. That there be no general superintendent of police for Bengal, but that the police be superintended, as at present, by the commissioners of divisions acting under the general control of Government. 3. That the police of Bengal be not organized after a military fashion, but that two, or perhaps three, additional corps of station guards be formed to protect the offices, gaols, and treasuries, to furnish escorts, and to aid the regular police in case of need. 4. That the salaries of the mohurirs, jemadars, and burkundauzes be raised, as proposed by the Lieutenant-Governor, at an annual additional expense of Rs. 3,38,609. 5. That special salaries be assigned to deserving darogahs, at a maximum annual cost of Rs. 30,000. 6. That either covenanted officers or uncovenanted deputy magistrates be placed in charge of subdivisions, consisting of from three to four thannahs each, and that ninety members be added to the subordinate executive service, at an increased annual expense of Rs. 4,12,800. 7. That the office of magistrate and collector, where now disunited in Bengal, should be combined in the same person, and that such of the covenanted officers as are now magistrates, and are not absorbed in the higher office, should be employed as joint magistrates and deputy-collectors, but without any increase of salary. 8. That the joint magistrate in each district should ordinarily have the superintendence of the police, under the general control of the magistrate. 9. That the deputy magistrates exercise judicial as well as police powers. 10. That the moonsiffs generally be vested with the criminal powers of an assistant magistrate, and with such higher powers as the local government may think proper to confer in particular cases. 11. That the proceedings of the subordinate courts be made as summary as possible, and that there be no appeal of right; and, 12. That the local government be authorized to vest respectable residents of the interior with the powers of an assistant magistrate. The opinions of the other members of the Indian Government on these proposals are printed at length in the paper before us. The above is a "Lords'" paper, ordered to be printed on the 11th of August last.—Times.

THE FRENCH TERRITORY IN INDIA.—The Patrie announces that official negotiations are going on between France and England for an exchange of territory in India. It is proposed that France should give up her possessions in Chandernagore to England, receiving as an equivalent a portion of territory near Pondicherry, which is the centre of the French colony in India.

THE SIAMESE EMBASSY.—These interesting personages, consisting of Phya Muntri Suroywangse, Principal Ambassador from the First King of Siam; Chau Mun Sakbedh Brackty, Second Ambassador from the First King; Charnun Mandir Bidacks, First Ambassador, and Nai Bichar Sarbick, Second Ambassador from the Second King of Siam, with twelve principal officers of state and a retinue of servants, in all twenty-seven persons, landed at Portsmouth on Wednesday, the 28th October.

THE CIVIL SERVICE AND THE INDIAN FUND.—The gentlemen connected with the Treasury have handed over to the Fund 115*l.*, and those in the Foreign Office, 200*l.*; the Circulation Department of the General Post-office has contributed 137*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*; the officers and crews of the Coastguard stations in the New-haven district have sent in 89*l.* 3*s.* 9*d.*; the Customs, Excise, Admiralty, and other public departments, have either contributed liberally, or are making up subscription lists.—Civil Service Gazette.

GENERAL WILSON.—At a dinner at Beccles, Suffolk, to commemorate the fall of Delhi, Lieut.-Col. Wilson gave the following interesting sketch of the career of his brother, General Wilson:—"Although he has hitherto had no European reputation, he has not been unknown in India. In 1819, at the early age of seventeen, and before he had completed his military studies, the Indian Government being in want of artillery officers, he was sent to Bengal. Having there completed the practical part of his education, he was employed in various parts of that large empire until the siege of Bhurtpoor, in 1824, where he commanded a battery of heavy guns; and from the efficient manner in which they were worked, and the execution done, he was publicly thanked by Lord Combermere, and also received a medal. Shortly after this he was appointed artillery staff officer in the Neemuch division, where he remained several years. He was afterwards appointed superintendent of the foundry at Calcutta, and it is a curious fact that most of the guns employed by him against the enemy during the siege of Delhi, as well as those used by the enemy against us, were cast by him when holding that appointment, and bear his name. In 1842, after an absence of twenty-four years, he visited his native country, and remained here about two years. On his return to India, so highly was he thought of by the Government for the time being, that he was immediately appointed adjutant-general of artillery, an appointment which he held until the last Punjab war broke out, when he relinquished it to take command of the artillery in the division of the late lamented Sir Hugh Wheeler. For his services on that occasion he received a second medal. At the conclusion of that campaign he again returned to this country on one year's leave of absence. On his second return to India he was appointed commandant of artillery in Bengal, and was also made Brigadier of Meerut."

EXTENDED EPISCOPAL AND MISSIONARY OPERATIONS IN INDIA.—The archbishop of Canterbury has consented to preside over a public meeting, which is to be held on the 26th inst., for the purpose of aiding the society for the Propagation of the Gospel in carrying out the following measures:—1. To double (at least) the number of the society's European missionaries in India, and to promote by every available means the education, training, and ordination of the more advanced native converts for the work of the Christian ministry among their own countrymen. 2. To found new and strengthen existing missions in the presidential and other principal cities of India, wherever there may appear to be the best opening, with a view to bring the truths of Christianity before the minds of the upper as well as of the lower classes in those great centres of population. 3. To press again upon the attention of the Indian Government the urgent necessity of a subdivision of the enormous dioceses of Calcutta and Madras, and especially to insist upon the desirableness of establishing a bishopric for the Punjab, another for the North-Western Provinces, and a third for the province of Tinnevely. 4. To encourage the establishment of industrial boarding schools, both for boys and girls, as the best means of improving the habits and tone of mind of the native Christian community. In addition to the new bishoprics above mentioned, the archbishop and bishops who form the council of the society are of opinion that before many years it will be necessary still further to provide for the extension of sees, and that a new bishopric must be created for Arracan, Pegue, and Tenasserim; one for Assam and the north-east frontier; one for Orissa; and one for Berar, Saugor, and the ceded districts on the Nerbudda. These, however, they do not intend at the present to press upon the attention of the government.

WEEKLY COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.—We understand that arrangements are being made by the Peninsular and Oriental Company for the establishment of a weekly communication with India, at the commencement of the ensuing year. It is to be hoped that there is no idea in contemplation of sending alternate mails from Bombay and Calcutta, as in that case the Bengal mail would be comparatively useless in respect to lateness of intelligence from the Punjab and the Upper Provinces. To give perfect satisfaction to the public, there must be four mails every month to and from Bombay, even if the communication with Calcutta should remain as at present.

BOOKS.

A Bird's-Eye View of India. By Lieut. EDW. KING, Madras Army. Partridge and Co.

PERHAPS the wisest course to pursue would be to leave this very pretentious pamphlet in the undisturbed enjoyment of merited obscurity; but, as silence is liable to be misconstrued into a signification of assent, we are constrained, as it were, to drag Mr. King's erroneous statements and absurd commentaries into public notice. The very title is an assumption, having been already adopted by Sir Erskine Perry. Mr. King, however, does not name the bird through whose visual organs he affects to view the social map of Hindostan. We can only surmise, therefore, that it is the owl—not on account of the fabled sagacity of that "night-fowl," but rather because of the midnight gloom that enshrouds these dark and formless fancies. The inhabitants of Devizes are singled out from the rest of the world for the ambiguous honour of a dedication, in acknowledgment of their kindness to the author during the seven years he was manager of a local bank. From the preface we gather that Lieut. and Banker King considers himself to be possessed of certain talents, which certain injudicious or sarcastic friends have requested him not to wrap up in a modest napkin. Hence this brochure—which is approached through an Introduction embodying three propositions: "OUR PRESENT POSITION—one of extreme pain and mortification. OUR DANGER—of being expelled from India on account of our unworthiness. THE REMEDY—an acknowledgment of our errors." Before grappling with the author's fallacies, it may be premised that there is scarcely a page without a scriptural quotation, not always very appropriate; but for that reason the more characteristic of the author's apparent idiosyncrasy.

Lieut. King asserts—and on this point he may possibly speak from personal experience—that India is "made a last resort for younger sons and the friends and helpless dependents of the Directors; selected, for the most part, without one solitary consideration as to moral character, mental qualification, or adaptation for the service; ignorant of the history and geography, as well as of the language and religion of the country." He then proceeds to inform his readers that many intelligent natives have of late years visited this country "for the purpose of acquiring a knowledge of our character and strength," and that the result of their inquiries induced them "to stimulate their countrymen to throw off a foreign yoke." He himself had lately met with a very intelligent native, who made some very pertinent observations. "Had he been a Christian, instead of a Mahometan, I would have given him the information he required; but he 'lacked the wisdom that cometh from above,' and I was afraid of him." A candid confession of imbecility, it must be allowed. Lieut. King, however, is not equally timid on all occasions. He will consent to no half-measures for the suppression of the mutiny. "The simple epitaph placed over the mutineers' grave should be, 'Here lies the — regt., killed for mutiny in 1857.'" Pretty well, for a scripture reader; but it is quite in keeping with his eulogy of Sir Edw. Paget for the cruel and unnecessary massacre of the 47th N.I. at Barrackpore. "Sir Edward was a good disciplinarian, and knew his duty too well to parley with rebels." It is horrible to hear that deplorably mismanaged affair spoken of with such ignorance and flippancy. Sir Charles Napier, he says, "saw at once the danger of leaving Delhi to the exclusive charge of native soldiers, and he proposed to alter it." Sir Charles objected to leaving the chief arsenal in Upper India to the charge of three native regiments, and proposed that twelve should be posted at that very unhealthy station. Would that have improved our position at the breaking out of the mutiny? We pass over Lieut. King's more trifling errors as to the red granite walls of the Delhi palace and Agra fort. It was Bishop Heber who first mistook sandstone for granite, and every subsequent writer has found it more easy to transcribe a bishop's blunder than to judge for himself. We commend Lieut. King's pamphlet to the waste-paper basket.

Bradshaw's Overland Guide to India, Egypt, and China.
 W. J. Adams.

THE time will doubtless arrive when some such manual, or guide-book, will be both convenient and indispensable; but we sincerely trust, for the sake of future travellers, that they may meet with a better one than the one above. So far as the idea is concerned we have no fault to find with it, nor do we object to the general arrangement of the materials; but the materials themselves are utterly worthless. There is no one department of the book that is free from blunders and mis-statements. The historical and topographical details are beneath criticism, save so far as it is a critic's duty to protest against such gross inaccuracies being foisted upon the public as genuine and authentic information. If Bradshaw's Overland Guide is ever to be considered an authority, it can only be after it has been entirely re-written.

Journal of a Bashi Bazouk. By H. M. WALMSLEY, Lieut.-Col. Turkish Horse. Groombridge and sons.

THE title of this pleasant series of outlines is a misnomer; but it is ungracious to quibble about a name when the thing specified is so agreeably set before us. If occasionally these lively sketches of Turkish character and society betray the hand of the amateur artist, that slight defect is fully atoned for by the freshness of the colouring and the still interesting nature of the subjects presented to our view. Our readers shall judge for themselves. We take at random the following description of the dancing dervishes:—

"Here is a man walking before us in a high conical rough head-dress, somewhat resembling a loaf of sugar stuck on his head, and wide-flowing robes; his long grey beard sweeps downwards almost to his middle, and his hands are clasped across his breast as he walks thoughtfully onwards. Two men, similarly dressed, follow him. These are the dancing dervishes. Let us follow them to their church or convent. We enter a large court-yard, in the middle of which is a fountain, and round the sides are the buildings inhabited by this singular sect. The church occupies the centre of the court-yard, and at the far end are some graves railed round, and prettily planted with flowers. Veiled figures of the lower order of women are waiting the opening of the church, and a quantity of boys playing about the yard. * * * The church is large, and scrupulously clean. A closely-latticed gallery runs round the upper part. This is for the women; for they can thus see, and remain themselves unseen. A balustrade encircles within it the centre of the flooring, forming an inner ring, floored with highly-polished oak, and the outer ring is occupied by the congregation, squatted on the matting. The dervishes, preceded by their priest, march slowly into the inner ring, and a great deal of slow, solemn chanting is gone through; then, in single file, one after another, they march round the inner ring, each bowing low as he passes what appears to be a verse of the Koran written on a board painted light blue, and then raising his head, the leading dervish turns slowly round, and fronting the one behind him, bends his head still lower as he slowly comes round again to his proper front, and then raising his head proceeds with his march. This is imitated by each in his turn, and several times they make the tour of the ring thus; then suddenly some musical instruments strike up, and at this time, as the leading dervish comes opposite the verse of the Koran, in lieu of bowing he crosses his arms on his breast, the fingers resting upwards on the shoulder-blades, makes a few pirouettes thus, and then extends the arms, holding them straight out from the body on a level, the palm of the right hand turned down, the fingers also slightly bent downwards, while the palm of the left is turned upwards, and its fingers also raised upwards, and the head is inclined over the right shoulder. There must be at least thirty of them thus spinning round and round like human tetotums, their high-pointed caps and flowing robes adding considerably to the grotesqueness of the scene. They spin in this way for about fifteen minutes, and then another walking procession takes place, followed by another spinning match, which, with a little recitation from the Koran, and plenty of prostration, ends the affair."

Our limits will not permit us to extract the equally graphic description of the howling dervishes, or do more than allude to the many characteristic vignettes of Turkish life and scenery. We cannot, however, altogether pass over Lieut.-Col. Walmsley's honest vindication of the much-abused Bashi Bazouks. Latterly, those rude horsemen had learned to appreciate the manliness of their British officers, who, on their part, began to feel a lively interest in the reckless impulsive men who, for the first time in their lives, were being subjected to the restraints of discipline:—

"At first," says Colonel Walmsley, "strange scenes occurred on parade. The men would smoke, sing, and laugh; and occasionally an officer in command of a regiment would see his whole corps suddenly dash away in a headlong charge after an unfortunate hare disturbed by the noise. Away the whole line would go, shouting, yelling, and discharging their pistols, at a hard gallop; while pussy dashed away at full speed, and the European officers remained alone on their deserted parade ground. At other times, a few of the men would decline to be drilled on some particular morning; but all this was soon reduced to order."

Here they are as they appeared on parade:—

"They looked curious enough on parade, as the different regiments fell in, dressed in the costumes of their country, and carrying their various colours. Their horses are small and wiry, generally vicious, and know their places in the ranks quite as well as their riders. Their broad, shovel-shaped stirrups, short stirrup-leathers, curious sabres, and belts stuck full of pistols, gave them a wild look. Steadiness in the ranks was a virtue difficult of attainment, and when a brigade was in close column many of the rear squadrons would kneel on their saddles to see what was going on in their front, while those still further in the rear would stand upright on theirs. With all this they manœuvred with some precision, and were gradually improving."

And this was the manner in which they left the parade-ground, exulting like schoolboys let loose from school, to the no small discomfort of some of the European officers "who had never done a day's duty as soldiers, and perhaps never bestrode a horse before:—"

"It requires no very lively stretch of the imagination to picture the position of these unfortunates mounted on Arab horses, when, on the parade being dismissed, some Arab regiment broke its ranks, and discipline being at an end, consigned all military manœuvres to the Evil One, and shouting, yelling, striking at each other with their long pipe-sticks, or throwing them in the form of javelins, they wildly careered over the plains, now rushing at full speed close past the unfortunate officer's horse, now riding at him with a wild shout, and when collision seemed impossible to be avoided, suddenly, as if by magic, pulling up their shaggy little beasts on their haunches, or darting off wildly in some other direction."

With one more quotation we must take leave of our amusing Bashi Bazouk, who can, however, be sufficiently grave at befitting times. A Turk having been foiled in an attempt to extort a second payment of a debt from a Greek, through the beneficent action of the Hatti Houmayoun, determined to avenge himself after the ancient fashion of his country and his creed:—

"That night as he (the Greek) was blessing the allied arms that had brought about so great a change, he heard noises round his house, looked out, and saw a rapidly-increasing crowd outside. Several shots were fired at him, but he was unharmed. Rapidly he looked to the bars of his doors, and ascending to the highest storey, took refuge with his wife, children, and servants in a room under the roof. Here they lay in mortal terror, listening to the threats, imprecations, and noises below; but trusting that the bars and bolts would hold out until assistance arrived. Presently a smell of fire told them that all was lost, and now their infuriated assailants, led on by the man who had lost his cause, mounted to the roof, and poking their long guns through the crannies and crevices, fired into the trembling group. One after another they were shot down, for escape was impossible. Above them flashed the Turkish muskets, below them roared the fire and the fanatic crowd. Eventually a guard arrived, the crowd dispersed, but the guard (Turks themselves) made no prisoners. They contented themselves with extinguishing the fire; and on mounting to the small room where the unfortunate family had taken refuge, a terrible spectacle presented itself. All were dead save the wife, and she, lying amid half-charred corpses of her family, wounded in two places, and with a burning beam fallen across her legs, had given birth to a child! I never heard that any one was punished for this, save the leader, who was fined, but in all probability never paid anything."

The Mahomedan is the same and unchangeable at all times and in all places. He will not be converted, and his religion prevents him from being ever humanized by civilization. No alternative, therefore, remains but to deprive him of the power of doing evil, and to hold him in as strict restraint as the fiercest monster of the forests amid the busy haunts of men.

Gazetteer and Gazetteer Map of the Seat of Rebellion in India.

By an Old QUARTER-MASTER of the Bengal Army. James Madden.

A VERY opportune and useful publication. Of the general correctness of its details there can be no doubt, as they are based upon Mr. Thornton's model work on the same subject. And yet how comes it that we find the old "episcopal" error in the very first page? Bishop Heber notwithstanding, we maintain, and will maintain with the last breath in our lungs, that the fort of Agra is built of red sandstone—and not of red granite. Whence was the red granite obtainable? The Mahomedan rulers, we know, made labourers par ordre; but we are not aware that the rude materials as implicitly accepted their hookum. We might equally demur to the red granite walls of Delhi, and to the assertion that not a single European bayonet was within forty miles—Meerut being only thirty-eight miles distant—but we prefer to acknowledge the general serviceableness of the little pamphlet, and to recommend it to those with whom variety and amplitude of information are matters of secondary importance. The price, one shilling, places it within the reach of all who are interested in the news from India—and who can fail to be so?

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST NEWSPAPER PUBLISHED IN LONDON FOR

DESPATCH TO INDIA AND THE EAST.

Thirty-two pages folio, with Supplements when necessary,

PRICE SIXPENCE.

THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS, FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES;

A fortnightly Summary of British and Foreign Intelligence, published on the 10th and 26th of each month, in time for despatch to India via Marseilles.

One uniform system is preserved throughout the Paper, and the information is so epitomized and arranged as to present a perfect and comprehensive view of the history of the fortnight, with special reference to those subjects most interesting to Anglo-Indians.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.THE CALCUTTA "ENGLISHMAN."

"Pains have been taken with the arrangement. It is evidently got up with a knowledge of what information Indian readers require, and will therefore, we expect, soon attain a considerable circulation."

THE CALCUTTA "DAILY NEWS."

"Fully bears out the assurance given in the prospectus that it should 'be all that the Overland Papers are, and something more.' We do not think that a single item of news or fact of interest which had transpired during the fortnight can possibly have been omitted, and the power of condensation displayed in this Paper is much beyond what we had expected."

"THE MOFUSSILITE."

"It is well written, and carefully compiled. It is not so diffuse in its information as the 'Home News,' and does not reprint long articles from the London journals; but it will probably not be the less acceptable on this account to a large portion of the public."

"BENGAL HURKARU."

"We gladly pronounce this first number an extremely good one, and we think the periodical is full of promise of something still better. The Editor has contrived to condense into a comparatively small space a vast quantity of miscellaneous information, of a character interesting to his readers here. This superior condensation of his materials is perhaps the leading character of the Newspaper,—and a very important one it is, especially for those Indian readers who may receive this one London Paper only."

Orders to be addressed to Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., 87, Newgate Street, London; Messrs. THACKER, SPINK, and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Calcutta; Messrs. THACKER and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Bombay; and Mr. JAMES HILL, Lucknow.

A GRAMMAR of the PERSIAN LANGUAGE, with Reading Lessons and a Vocabulary. By DUNCAN FORBES, LL.D.
London: WM. H. ALLEN and Co., 7, Leadenhall Street.

Allen's Maps of India & China.

MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectorates, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

HANWELL COLLEGE, MIDDLESEX.
SEVEN MILES FROM LONDON.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

The increasing importance of the cultivation of the LANGUAGES of the EAST, and the immediate advantages that result from their acquisition, have induced the Principal to make arrangements for affording INSTRUCTION therein.

The rudiments of Hindustani, Persian, and Arabic, will be taught to all who are intended for employment in our Eastern Possessions; and the more advanced Pupils will be prepared for their examination on their arrival in India.

The course of instruction includes not only that which is necessary to pass at Addiscombe or Haileybury, but all that may be requisite for those who are destined to pursue an Indian career.

The history and geography of the country, and the general features of Anglo-Indian life, are taught by a gentleman whose perfect acquaintance with India, from long residence there, peculiarly qualifies him for the duties he has undertaken.

The great advantage to Parents in India of an Institution of this kind must be evident. At a short distance from London, in a proverbially healthy locality, they may place their children from an EARLY AGE under a system from which there need be no departure until their education is completely finished; a class being expressly formed for the matriculation at the University of London, wherein they may matriculate at sixteen years of age, and graduate two years after that time.

Prospectuses, with full particulars, may be had on application to the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, D.D., Hanwell College, Middlesex.

MRS. C. J. YEATMAN, who during many years was successfully engaged in preparing Candidates for admission to Haileybury College, now RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS under sixteen years of age, to be educated for the Universities, the Public Schools, and Indian Appointments.

Edgware, Middlesex.

THE PRINCIPALS of the FRENCH and ENGLISH MOSELY EDUCATIONAL ESTABLISHMENT RECEIVE CHILDREN from a very early age, supplying the place of Parents as far as that relation can be replaced. The situation is excellent, the air pure, and, from being in a pastoral district, they are enabled to supply food of all kinds of the most wholesome description, and wholly free from adulteration. Where personal supervision is not possible, arrangements will be made to furnish clothing, &c. for one moderate sum, avoiding all extras. To those having the charge of Orphan Children, or to Parents about to proceed to or returning from the East or West-Indies, this Establishment offers great and peculiar advantages.

For Particulars and References address Messdames FREFONTAINE, 6, Trafalgar Terrace, Mosely, Worcestershire.

HOME EDUCATION.—A Lady (with children of her own), residing in Gloucestershire, wishes to RECEIVE TWO or THREE YOUNG CHILDREN into her family. Terms, £80 for a child under six.

For particulars, apply to E. O. J., Post-office, Newnham, Gloucestershire.

CLIFTON.—A middle-aged widow Lady, who has lost her only child, and who has been long accustomed to tuition, begs to call the attention of Parents sending Children to England to be EDUCATED, to the maternal and intellectual advantages which she can offer them at her pleasant and healthy residence at Clifton, near Bristol. References to many of the nobility and clergy, and to medical men of eminence.

Address, Mrs. GLOVER, Leicester Place, Clifton.

A LADY, residing in a healthy locality near Bath, wishes to EDUCATE with her child of six, TWO or THREE CHILDREN under the age of eleven. A French resident Governess would be kept, and a home in every sense of the word is offered.

Address, A. B., General Post-office, Bath.

INDIA.—A London Clergyman (district W.), late in the Indian army, and qualified as interpreter, RECEIVES PUPILS in HINDUSTANI, and also Prepares generally for the Army Examinations.

Address, Rev. W. D. M., Darling's Library, 81, Great Queen Street, Lincoln's-Inn Fields.

TO PARENTS IN INDIA AND OTHERS.

THE Wife of a medical man, residing in a healthy village in Buckinghamshire, wishes to take the entire CHARGE of TWO or THREE LITTLE GIRLS, to educate—with the assistance of a resident French Governess—with her own children.

Apply by letter, or personally, to C. C., 42, Bedford Square, London.

TO INDIAN PARENTS AND OTHERS.

THE widow of an Indian Officer will be happy to receive ONE or TWO LITTLE GIRLS to be EDUCATED with her own, for whom she has a Governess. The Children would have the benefit of careful and religious training, and change of air in the Autumn. A Lady with One or Two Children, who would share the same bed-room, not objected to.

Address, X. Y. Z., care of Mr. Edmonds, News Agent, Polygon, Clapham, of whom full particulars may be had.

INDIA.—Gentlemen expecting Appointments in the East-India Company's Cavalry, Artillery, Infantry, or Medical Service, are respectfully informed that, on application to Messrs. CHRISTIAN, they will be furnished with carefully prepared ESTIMATES, showing the whole cost of outfit and passage via the Cape or Egypt, without the necessity of employing an agent, which will be found desirable to those who study economy.

HYDROPATHIC TREATMENT is peculiarly applicable to CHRONIC DISEASE generally, and is unrivalled for efficacy in disorders of the STOMACH, BOWELS, LIVER, KIDNEYS, and SKIN; in RHEUMATISM and GOUT; in NERVOUS DEBILITY and CONGESTION OF THE BRAIN; in ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION, and SCROFULA; and in the special complaints of WOMEN and CHILDREN.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS a certain remedy for the cure of Bowel and Liver Complaints.—To cleanse the blood and purify the fluids is all that is required to keep the system in a sound and healthy state; these are effected by a steady perseverance in the use of Holloway's Pills, which cannot be said of any other medicine ever placed before the public. By a recourse to their use, the afflicted are soon blessed with a return of health, strength, and cheerfulness, when they have been considered beyond human aid.

Sold by all Medicine Vendors throughout the World; at Professor Holloway's Establishments, 244, Strand, London, and 80, Maiden Lane, New York; by A. Stampa, Constantinople; A. Guidicy, Smyrna; E. Muir, Malta; and by all European and Native Vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

SIR JAMES MURRAY'S FLUID MAGNESIA.

Prepared under the immediate care of the Inventor, and established for upwards of thirty years by the PROFESSION, for removing BILE ACIDITIES, and INDIGESTION, restoring APPETITE, preserving a moderate state of the bowels, and dissolving uric acid in GRAVEL and GOUT; also as an easy remedy for SEA SICKNESS, and for the febrile affection incident to childhood it is invaluable.—On the value of Magnesia as a remedial agent it is unnecessary to enlarge; but the Fluid Preparation of Sir James Murray is now the most valued by the Profession, as it entirely avoids the possibility of those dangerous concretions usually resulting from the use of the article in powder.

Sold by the sole consignees, Messrs. BAILEY and WILLS, of Horsley Fields Chemical Works, Wolverhampton, and by all wholesale and retail Druggists and Medicine Agents throughout the British Empire, in bottles, 1s., 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 11s., and 21s. each.

—The Acidulated Syrup in bottles 2s. each.
N.B.—Be sure to ask for "Sir James Murray's Preparation," and to see that his name is stamped on each label, in GREEN INK, as follows:—"James Murray, Physician to the Lord Lieutenant."

IMPORTANT WORKS ON INDIA.

In One large Volume, with Map, price £1. 1s.,

MR. THORNTON'S GAZETTEER OF INDIA.

A GAZETTEER OF THE TERRITORIES UNDER THE GOVERNMENT OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY, AND OF THE NATIVE STATES ON THE CONTINENT OF INDIA.

By EDWARD THORNTON, Esq., Author of the "History of the British Empire in India."

The work has been compiled by the authority of the Court of Directors, and though comprised within a single volume, it will be found to contain the great mass of information comprehended in the four volumes of the "Gazetteer of India," published by the same author in 1854. This result has been obtained by retrenching some few redundancies, and by adopting an enlarged page and distributing the matter into two separate columns. By these means space has been also acquired for the insertion of much new matter, rendered necessary by the political and territorial changes which have more recently taken place within our Eastern Possessions.

On the character of the work a few remarks will be sufficient. Its chief objects are,—

- 1st. To fix the relative position of the various cities, towns, and villages with as much precision as possible, and to exhibit with the greatest practicable brevity all that is known respecting them; and
- 2ndly. To note the various countries, provinces, or territorial divisions, and to describe the physical characteristics of each, together with their statistical, social, and political circumstances.

To these are added minute descriptions of the principal rivers and chains of mountains; thus presenting to the reader, within a brief compass, a mass of information which can not otherwise be obtained, except from a multiplicity of volumes and manuscript records. The volume, in short, may be regarded as an epitome of all that has yet been written and published respecting the territories under the government or political superintendence of the British power in India. Its merits have been frequently discussed in the General Courts of the East-India Company, where successive Chairmen have borne ample testimony to the utility of the publication, and where it has been characterized by the best-informed among the Proprietors as "a complete history of India, untainted in any degree by political bias."

THE MOST COMPLETE HISTORY OF INDIA.

HISTORY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE IN INDIA TO 1844.

Illustrated by Maps, showing the Possessions of the East-India Company at various periods. By EDWARD THORNTON, Esq. 6 vols. 8vo. cloth, £2s. 6s.

"Mr. Thornton is master of a style of great perspicuity and vigour, always interesting, and frequently rising into eloquence. His power of painting character, and of bringing before the eye of the reader the events which he relates, is remarkable; and if the knowledge of India can be made popular, we should say his is the pen to effect it."—Times.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE progress of the British arms in Upper India continues to be highly satisfactory, and in the Doab the very embers of the mutiny are being rapidly trodden out. The most prominent figure in the present budget of news is that of Acting-Brigadier Greathed, of H.M.'s 84th foot. In our last issue we chronicled the successes obtained by that active officer at Bolundshuhur and Malaghur, but erroneously stated that a second column of equal numerical force had gained similar advantages over the rebels at Muttra. It appears, however, that Colonel Greathed's column was the only one which actually followed up the retreating enemy. Halting at Ghazee-ood-deen Nuggur on the 25th, this force arrived at Sekundrabad on the 26th, and burnt it to the ground, as it was found to contain a quantity of ladies' apparel and other evidences of ill-gotten plunder. On the following day the column encountered the Jhansi rebels strongly posted at Bolundshuhur, and drove them from their intrenchments with the loss of seven light guns, twenty-five boxes of powder, and large quantities of shot, of hammered iron, and small-arms ammunition. The British loss was under 50, of whom six were wounded officers; that of the enemy was estimated at 150. The fort at Malaghur was occupied without resistance on Michaelmas day, and subsequently blown up. It is sad to relate that Lieut. Home of the Engineers, who assisted in blowing open the Cashmere gate at Delhi, was killed by the premature explosion of a mine. The sick and wounded were now sent back to Meerut, and on the 2nd of October Colonel Greathed resumed his onward march. Three days afterwards he reached Allyghur, and dispersed a body of rebels, who attempted to oppose his progress; cutting up 400 of them, and capturing two 5-pounder guns. On the 6th the fort of Agrabad fell into his hands, together with four guns and a large supply of grapeshot and powder. Two rebel chiefs and a hundred of their followers are stated to have been killed. As this force was triumphantly advancing towards Agra, on the left bank of the Jamuna, a numerous body of mutineers was also converging on the same point from the opposite side of the river. On the morning of the 10th October, Colonel Greathed entered the cantonments, and his troops, wearied with a long march, began to make preparations for breakfast. Suddenly, hostile artillery thundered on their camp, and some squadrons of cavalry charged on the flank and captured a gun. Though taken by surprise, the Sikhs and 9th Lancers—the latter only half-dressed—sprang into their saddles and rushed at the intruders. Nine of the Lancers, headed by Lieuts. French and Jones, attacked five times their number of sepoys and retook the gun; though the former officer was killed, and the latter severely wounded, in the performance of this dashing exploit. The artillery and infantry quickly advanced to their support, and repulsed the enemy with great slaughter, hotly pursuing them to the Kharee river, ten miles distant. The mutineers are said to have lost nearly 2,000 men, together with thirteen pieces of artillery, the whole of their camp equipage and baggage, and treasure to the amount of 50,000*l.*; the casualties on the part of the British did not exceed eighty. Some of the fugitives fled to Bhurtpore, others to Muttra and Mynpoorie; but were refused shelter by the inhabitants, who now ventured to demonstrate their preference for the British government. The Rajah of the last-named place, however, joined the fugitives, leaving his guns and 20,000*l.* worth of treasure as a prize for the victors. It was here that Brigadier Grant assumed the command of the column, and pushed forward to Cawnpore, in the hope of reaching Lucknow by the 30th October.

ARRIVAL OF MAILS.

The Bentinck, with a Mail, left Calcutta October 23; Madras, October 29; Point de Galle, November 2; Aden, November 11; and arrived at Suez November 17. The Madras, with a Mail, left Bombay November 3; Aden, November 12; and arrived at Suez November 19. The Aden, with the China Mail, left Hong-Kong October 16; Singapore, October 22; Penang, October 23; and arrived at Point de Galle October 31. The Mails thus brought were taken on to Alexandria, they arrived at Malta November 24, and Marseilles November 27 (per Vectis). The Ripon, with the remainder, may be expected at Southampton December 4.

Notwithstanding their signal discomfiture on the 10th, the Gwalior rebels continued to hover around Agra; one party intrenching themselves on the banks of the Kharee, and another taking up a position at Futtehpore Seekree. With a view to dislodge the latter, a wing of the 3rd Bengal Fusiliers marched out of the fort on the 22nd; but with what result is as yet unknown. The Delhi fugitives are supposed to have crossed over into Oude, excepting those who proceeded to Bareilly. Delhi itself was held by the 60th, 61st, 1st Bengal Fusiliers, the 4th Sikhs, the Guide infantry, the Sirmoor battalion, and two troops of horse artillery; H.M.'s 52nd had marched for the Punjab. Two more of the king's sons, Meerza Bukhtawur Shah, and Meerza Mehndoo, have been tried by military commission and condemned to be shot. The ex-monarch was also to be brought to trial, though his life appears to have been guaranteed to him at the time of his arrest. Many of the Mahomedan gentry have also been apprehended, and those who before were wavering were now actively engaged in encompassing the ruin of their less cautious brethren. A movable column under Brigadier Showers swept the adjacent country in the last week in September, and on the 2nd October took possession of the abandoned fort of Rewarree, which was armed with twelve guns and mortars, loaded and in position. A few days afterwards the horsemen of the Nawab of Jhujjur were disarmed without opposition. Sir Archdale Wilson, Bart., "of Delhi," and Colonel Becher, had repaired to the hills in ill health.

Meanwhile the position of the British at Lucknow, though critical, was daily improving. General Outram's forces occupied two positions. One division was posted at Alumbaugh, under Major Sibley, H.M.'s 64th, in charge of the ladies and children, the sick and wounded. Alumbaugh, a country residence of the ex-royal family of Oude, is a large house standing in a spacious walled-in inclosure about three miles on the Cawnpore side of the capital. About 1,000 men were in possession of this important post, which was defended by heavy guns, and amply stored with provisions. The main body of the British army occupied the Residency, but were closely hemmed in by hordes of sepoys and armed ruffians.

The chief loss incurred in effecting the relief of Lucknow was in fighting their way through the city. Nearly 600 men and officers were placed hors de combat. Among the slain were General Neill, Major Perrin, and Lieuts. Graham, Preston, and Nunn, of H.M.'s 90th; Colonel Hamilton, Capt. Hay, and Lieut. Swanson, of the 78th; Lieut. Haigh, of the 5th fusiliers; and Capt. Shute and Lieuts. Turner and Bateman, of the 64th: the numbers of officers wounded exceeded thirty. In another column will be found a partial list of the survivors of the heroic garrison.

A third attack, with the usual result, had been made upon Bhittoor, and two more guns captured. The place has at last been destroyed, together with the village of Sheo-Rajpore. In other respects tranquillity had been restored to the country around Cawnpore, through the energetic measures of Colonel Wilson, the commandant. Colonel Greathed's victory at Agra had likewise enabled the Maharajah of Gwalior to reopen political communication with the Governor-General's agent.

The troops of the Rajah of Kotah mutinied and attacked the Residency on the 14th October, and murdered Major Burton, the political agent, and his two sons. The rajah, however, was not even suspected of disloyalty. A severe action appears to have taken place at Jeerum, where the Neemuch column defeated a strong force of the rebels, though with the loss of two officers killed and five wounded. The former were Capt. Tucker, 2nd Bombay cavalry, and Capt. Read, H.M.'s 83rd; the latter, Capt. Simpson and Lieuts. Blair and Le Geyt, 2nd Bombay cavalry; Capt. Soppitt, 12th N.I.; and Capt. Laurie, 21st N.I. The Malwa column had been doing good service, by reducing Dhar, and capturing three guns from a large body of mutineers. It was, however, anxiously expected at Neemuch, as the general state of Rajpootana was by no means favourable. Saugor still held out, though seriously menaced by the enemy. In Scinde, order had been completely restored; but at Ahmedabad a conspiracy had been detected amongst the Bombay grenadiers, eighteen of whom were convicted and executed. In the Punjab, symptoms of agitation had manifested themselves, but there was a sufficient force of Europeans to prevent any formidable outbreak.

In the Santhal district, the 32nd N.I. mutinied at Deoghur on the 9th October, and murdered Mr. Ronald, a civilian, and Lieut. Cooper. The mutineers then took the road to Bhaugulpore.

The reinforcements from England were at length arriving, after unusually long voyages. Nearly 2,000 men had reached Calcutta, and 1,000 Madras; and about 3,000 more were at Galle. The Golden Fleece, with 1,000 Europeans, had been despatched from Calcutta to Masulipatam, the nearest port to Hyderabad.

The news from Calcutta is not a little characteristic of the City of Palaces. Public attention appears to be divided between two subjects sufficiently different. There had been a great "tamasha," and withal a "burra khana," on occasion of the presentation of colours to the volunteer corps, by Lady Canning. After all, it is a simple rule-of-three question. We all remember how fervent was the excitement in London when her gracious Majesty presented the Victoria Cross to the Crimean heroes. As London, then, is to Calcutta, so was the presentation of colours to the presentation of the cross. What more need be said? The other topic of general remark was the nervous conduct of Government with reference to the Press. The Englishman and the Hurtaru appear to have been desirous of reproducing certain articles from London newspapers which reflected severely on the ruling authorities. This was naturally and logically prohibited by the Secretary to Government; but the Calcutta press is offended because it is not allowed to reprint what it would not be permitted to originate. It is clear that Lord Canning was not ill-advised when he decided on placing the press under a licensing system. Our Indian journalists have too much of the vulture and the daw to be able to quote the old sarcasm, verat censura columbas. The resignation of Ameer Ally, the Mahomedan deputy commissioner of Patna, has been hailed with exultant sneers. It is insinuated that another Mussulman will be appointed to the vacant post. May the kind deities propitious to British rule in the East avert the evil omen.

THE FRENCH GUNBOAT "LA DRAGONNE."—We learn from Macao, that during the last severe gale on the night between the 30th Sept. and the 1st of October, when so many lorchas and junks were smashed, Capt. Barry, commanding the French gunboat La Dragonne, had his longboat manned, and sent it in the middle of the night, during the greatest fury of the gale, in charge of an officer, to assist in saving the many unfortunate beings floating about on wrecks and rocks in the vicinity of the gunboats stationed in the "Tyra." After extraordinary efforts, and at the imminent peril of their own lives, this officer and his crew succeeded in saving thirty-one lives, and bringing them, in different trips, on board the gunboat, twelve of them perfectly exhausted. On board they were well taken care of, and kept until declared by the doctor on board to be strong enough to leave the vessel.

BENGAL. THE MUTINY.

AGRA.—"PROCLAMATION.—Agra Fort, Sept. 29, 1857.—The sepoys who have mutinied upon lying pretexts of interferences with religion and caste and have shown the absurdity of those pretexts by associating themselves with jail felons and miscreants of every description, after vain efforts to contend with the British Government at Delhi and elsewhere, are now fleeing from the punishment due to their crimes, through various parts of these provinces, showing by their movements only a desire to save the plunder they have obtained by violence and their worthless lives.

The Government of these provinces calls on all landholders and farmers, with their tenantry, and on all well-disposed subjects, to give all possible assistance to the authorities in bringing those outcasts to justice.

Landholders and farmers of land, especially, are reminded of the terms of their engagement not to harbour or countenance criminals and evil-disposed persons.

The Government requires proofs of the fidelity and loyalty of all classes of its subjects, in recovering the arms, elephants, horses, camels, and other Government property, which have been feloniously taken by these offenders. All persons are warned against purchasing or bartering for any such property of the state under the severest penalties, and rewards will be paid to those who, immediately on obtaining possession of the same, bring them to the nearest civil or military authority.—By order.

C. B. THORNHILL,

Off. Sec. to Govt., N.W.P."

"On Friday afternoon, the 9th instant, the movable column from Delhi, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Greathed, was at Hattaras, and early on Saturday morning it was encamped in the middle of the station of Agra, having marched upwards of twenty-eight miles during the night.

For many preceding days rumours were current that a large body of mutineers from various distant places, but principally Indore, had congregated at Dholpore, thirty-six miles from Agra, on the Gwalior road, and on Wednesday it became known that this force was marching towards Agra, while on the morning of Friday it was also known that it was then actually encamped on the banks of the Kharee, a small stream about nine miles off; but nobody seems to have felt any curiosity regarding the after movements of the force, for it is a fact that no one in authority was aware of the position it occupied on Saturday, or of its having moved beyond the Kharee, and being then marching direct upon Agra.

At half-past ten, Colonel Greathed's wearied men, having breakfasted, were quietly resting themselves after their long night march, the horses being unsaddled, and the camp in all the confusion of pitching tents, when, to their utter amazement, a battery of guns, in the rear of the burial-ground, opened upon the right flank of the camp, and at the same time a numerous body of horse galloped into the midst, and cut down several of them. Never was a surprise more complete, and never did men rally with more rapidity, and prepare for resistance with greater coolness and courage, than did our gallant fellows on this occasion.

Previous, however, to this sudden attack, four Ghazees with tom-toms entered the camp, and cut down an officer and a sergeant-major—the one while he was washing, and the other asleep. In five minutes the lancers and Seikhs were in their saddles, and after the fifth shot had been fired by the enemy, our horse artillery guns were ready, and replied to them with splendid effect. In a very short time the enemy began to retreat, and Lieutenant-Colonel Cotton, who happened to be on the ground at the time, assumed command as senior officer, and immediately ordered the advance. For a short distance the enemy showed fight, and seemed disposed to dispute the ground with us; but on the cavalry and artillery approaching nearer and nearer, they changed their mind, and, what at first was an ordinary retreat, soon became a most disorderly flight. They scoured down the Gwalior road, and scattered themselves over the fields on either hand, in hopes of being concealed by the lofty jowar and bajrah cultivation (as high, strong and nearly as thick as sugarcane), with which all the surrounding country is covered; but the 9th lancers and the Seikh cavalry kept at their heels, and cut them down right and left, while the horse artillery, always in front, mowed them down with grape. In the fields, too, they were also pursued by H.M.'s 8th and 75th regiments, and the 2nd and 4th Punjab infantry, so there was no escape for them on either side; and whichever way they attempted to flee, the avenger was always behind them, and the road and the fields between the Ice Pits and the Kharee Nuddee, a distance of ten miles, tell the tale in letters of blood of the glorious slaughter of the murderous miscreants that ensued. The tired horses of the artillery and cavalry seemed to acquire strength from the excitement of the chase, and the mutineers were followed up to the Kharee Nuddee at full speed with tremendous slaughter. Every gun that the enemy possessed—fourteen in number—was captured, and their tents after being gutted of the plunder the robbers had amassed, were burnt. We also recovered treasure to the value of about a lakh and sixty thousand rupees, while several of the European soldiers, and almost all the Seikhs, obtained more or less money and other valuables from the bodies of the slain, in some instances as much as two hundred rupees being found on the person of a dead sepoy, and very rarely less than thirty or forty.

When the firing was heard in the fort, the 3rd European regiment (which early in the morning had been warned to hold itself in readiness for service at 2 o'clock) immediately got under arms, and into their confounded red cloth jackets, the rest of the force being attired in drab holland—and shortly after 11, it marched at a rapid pace to the assistance of their comrades in cantonments, cheering most enthusiastically. The regiment was delayed for a minute at the Ummer Sing gate, in consequence of their advance being checked by a crowd of panic-stricken fugitives from cantonments, among whom were a few mounted soldiers who ought to have known better. It is said that a small party of the enemy's horse (dressed in light cavalry uniform) pursued them to within a very short distance of the fort, but what course it afterwards took, we have not heard. Every officer and gentleman, who had horses, and could get ready in time, rushed out of the fort to accompany the 3rd Europeans; and had not an order been issued to stop the egress, the fort might have been left under the charge of the ladies and children. The men of the 3rd were so anxious to get into action, that of their own accord they went at the "double," which had the effect of soon knocking many of them up; and by the time they had advanced five miles, the stragglers were very numerous. Many preceding days had been tolerably cool and cloudy, but on this day the sun shone forth in its full glory, and there was hardly a breath of air stirring, so that the men suffered exceedingly; and many poor fellows, unable to move from the effects of the sun, were obliged to be left on the roadsides.

The 3rd, about 550 strong, accompanied by some Seikh cavalry and infantry, and by the new Militia Rifle Company, were led by Lieut.-Colonel Riddell seven or eight miles out, but although they prevented the enemy escaping to the left, they had no opportunity of encountering them or of performing any deeds of daring. It is difficult to estimate the number of slain, but when we consider the enemy numbered at least 7,000 men, and that they were pursued and slaughtered for ten miles, we think we are not above the mark if we put them down at 1,000—and it must be remembered that we took no prisoners, and as far as we know, none are merely wounded. On our side we had one officer killed—Capt. Lucius French, 9th lancers; four European non-commissioned officers and men, and six Seikhs. Four officers wounded—Lieut. A. S. Jones, 9th lancers; Lieut. A. Pearson, artillery; Lieut. C. S. Maclean, 3rd European regiment attached to 1st Punjab cavalry; and Lieut. G. A. P. Younghusband, 13th Bombay N.I., Commanding 5th Punjab cavalry, the latter by falling into a well while charging the enemy, twenty-two Europeans soldiers, and twenty-eight Seikhs. Missing, two Seikhs. Total, eleven killed, fifty-four wounded, and two missing—altogether sixty-seven.

Our rule had already been re-established between this and Meerut by the fall of Delhi, and one of the results of Colonel Cotton's victory will be the establishment of order between this and Jhansi, and in more distant parts in that direction, and towards Ajmere also—and as Col. Greathed is now proceeding towards Mynpooree, we shall in a few days have order restored there, in Etawah, and adjoining districts, and dak communication re-opened with Calcutta.

We have omitted to mention the strength of our force, and therefore conclude with the following rough estimate. Two troops of horse artillery, and one horse battery, together eighteen guns belonging to the column, and a horse battery with four guns under Lieutenant Pearson from the fort, 250 of the 9th lancers; 220 of the 8th foot; 270 of the 75th foot; 550 of the 3rd Bengal Europeans; 500 Seikh cavalry, and 800 Seikh infantry, and about 50 of the Agra militia. Altogether about 1,300 Seikhs and upwards of 1,500 Europeans."—Mofussilite, Oct. 14.

October 21.—A portion of the Mhow and Indore mutineers, whom Col. Greathed's column thrashed so severely on the 10th, have been moving about from place to place. Some went to Bhurtore, where they were not welcomed. They were told to lay down their arms, but they would not, and were thereupon attacked by the rajah's people. Some six or eight were killed, about fourteen were taken prisoners and sent here, of whom six were hanged, and the rest escaped. A portion of the rebels are now on the other side of the Kharee Nuddee, and a few are at Fattypoor-Sikree, where, with the townspeople, they make some show. About three hundred of the 3rd Bengal Europeans go from hence to-morrow to Futteypoor-Sikree to bring them to account. The movable column is at Mynpooree, where a large body of these mutineers were.

ALLYGHUR.—From the Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army, Allyghur, 5th Oct., 3 P.M.—“The movable column marched on Allyghur this morning. The insurgents made a show of fighting, and opened fire with two native cannon and several small guns made from the sockets of telegraph posts. They were driven off, their guns captured, and they were gloriously and effectually pursued by the cavalry, a column of infantry with guns proceeding at the same time around the city. Between three and four hundred were cut to pieces, while on our side only a few were wounded. The insurgents were composed principally of fanatic Mahomedans, with a few sepoys and irregular cavalry sowars.

“The town of Coel has suffered much from plunder during the last month; and the Hindoos, who are alone left in it, appear to rejoice at our appearance. Part of the Barcilly mutineers plundered Hattrass the day before yesterday, and it is feared are now out of reach, crossing or across the Ganges; but we hope to cut off a number of mutineers who are still at Muttra, or proceeding thence to the Ganges. No further news from Lucknow to-day. We march to Akraabad to-morrow.”

ASSAM.—3rd Oct.—The 100 sailors sent up by Government in the Hoorungutta steamer arrived at Debrooghur yesterday, about four P.M. The Cutcherry, which is the only building large enough to contain them all together, has been given up for their accommodation, and the residents at the station will have the pleasure of entertaining the officers. It is to be hoped that the mere sight of so many white faces will do all we need up here, for though many may have wished us harm, their plots were but half-fledged when they were broken up by timely precautions; and it is to be hoped we have now nothing more to fear. The young rajah has been sent under a guard for change of air on the river, by the magistrate of Sibsaur; and our Mahomedan native doctor here, with the ominous name of Hedait Allee, who was found meddling more with politics than pills, has also gone in his wake, —sent off by our commandant at a moment's warning.

BEHAR.—The following message has been received from Major English at Chuttra:—

“I had a severe engagement yesterday with the Ramghur battalion; defeated them, taken four guns complete, and forty-five cart-loads of ammunition. I have had forty-five men killed and wounded.”

The following is from Camp, Chuttra, dated 4th October:—

“On the 2nd October, 1857, the small force under the command of Major English, consisting of 150 men of H.M.'s 53rd regiment, and about an equal number of the Police battalion, advanced from the village of Dourol 'Erechak,' upon 'Chuttra,' where the Ramghur battalion, upwards of 750 strong, with four brass guns, were encamped, commanded by a baboo, who directed the whole of their operations.

“We came in sight of the enemy about 8 A.M., when a party, under command of Captain Fendall, were sent out in skirmishing order, followed by the main body at about 250 yards' distance. The skirmishers immediately opened fire upon the enemy, who was in position in line protected by his artillery, which instantly opened a heavy fire of round shot, grape, and canister. Nothing daunted, the skirmishers moved steadily on, while the main body, under Major English, by a flank movement to the left, came upon the enemy's right, when the action became general. The enemy fought his guns to the last minute, and kept up a heavy and continuous fire of musketry for about an hour and a half, when he fled from all points, with the loss of his guns, ammunition, and colours, and the whole of his baggage and camp equipage, &c. If we had had with us a few cavalry, scarcely a man would have escaped being killed or taken prisoner. A great number of their dead covered the field; but their wounded crawled into the jungle, from whence a good number were brought into the camp during the day. Our loss in this sharp action is rather severe, being three killed and forty-three wounded, three of whom have since died of their wounds.”

BENARES.—A plot has been discovered at Benares, in which some sepoys had arranged to murder three officers of the 37th N.I. whilst in their beds. They are being tried by court-martial, and it is to be hoped will meet with the punishment they have deserved.

Oct. 16.—News has just come in of the mutiny of the 32nd Bengal Native Infantry in the Santhal district. They have murdered some of their officers, and are marching towards Bhaugulpore. We hear that the 31st, at Saugor, have also gone. Troops in small detachments pass up daily. Yesterday, two companies of H.M.'s 53rd, and five companies of the 27th Madras native infantry, passed up, with 400 remounts, for Allahabad. The works at Raj-Ghaut are progressing rapidly, but they are three and a half miles from the station, and the road to it is entirely through gardens, affording excellent cover to skirmishers. All quiet here, but Jaunpore is threatened by 4,000 Oude scoundrels, so, at least, it is reported. The whole of Rewah is in a blaze. Capt. Osborne, with the rajah and 600 men, are still holding on there. The rajah himself is well inclined, but he cannot command his men.

BOLUNDSHUHUR.—Mr. Sapte, the collector and magistrate of the district, thus describes the affair of the 28th Sept.:—

“We arrived at daybreak, and found the rebels, consisting of the Jhansi Brigade, and Wallee-dad of Malaghur's levies, entrenched on the road in the station close by my compound. They fired as we advanced, and after two hours' pounding or more, we drove them from their position, killing some 150 of them, and losing ourselves some fifty killed and wounded—among the latter were six officers. We took one 9-pounder gun and one 3-pounder; two 9 pounder ammunition waggons, a quantity of small-arm ammunition, and twenty-five barrels of gunpowder. I am sorry to say, during the action, Wallee-dad escaped from his fort, and has gone to Rohilkhand. The Nana Sahib [it is concluded that the Nana's brother is meant, who lately arrived at Malaghur wounded] was said to be with him. We took possession of Malaghur this morning, and it is now being mined preparatory to being blown up.”

From the A. A. Gen. of the Army, Camp, Bolundshuhur, 4 P.M. 2nd Oct.:—“This force moves to Koorja, in progress to Allyghur. Several executions have taken place. Colonel Farquhar remains at Bolundshuhur, with two horse artillery guns, 200 horse, and a wing of the Belooch battalion, about 250 strong. All the mutineers in this part of the country are believed to have crossed the Ganges. Lieutenant Home, of the engineers, a most gallant and intelligent officer, was unfortunately killed yesterday, by the premature explosion of a mine, whilst employed in the destruction of the fort of Malaghur.”

October 4.—Mr. B. Sapte left Colonel Greathed's force at Koorja, and returned to Bolundshuhur on the 4th. He is supported by 220 Belooch troops, 200 Pathan horse, and two horse artillery guns.

At Bolundshuhur a greater amount of ammunition was captured than at first reported. Mail carts are running in both directions from that station. The line of Delhi is open. Wallee-dad escaped to Barcilly. Many of his followers have been caught. His teshseldar was to be hung on the 5th.

CAWNPORE, October 20.—Some 650 infantry, a battery of artillery, and a few sowars of the garrison at Cawnpore, marched, on the morning of the 18th inst., towards a village called Sheo-Rajpore, distance hence some sixteen miles, where it was reported at 10 P.M. of the 17th. A large force of rebels had collected there, with the fiend Nana at its head. The evening previous to our march we were under orders for Lucknow, and this contrary movement of the gallant Colonel Wilson somewhat surprised the whole of us, for I can assure you not a soul in camp, with the exception of the colonel himself and Captain Bruce, magistrate of Cawnpore, knew but what we were proceeding to Lucknow; but after forming upon the glacis of the entrenchment, instead of going towards the bridge of boats to cross the Ganges, we were marched off in the opposite direction, and straight out of the entrenched camp, headed by the brave colonel himself. We moved off at one o'clock A.M., and after several short halts, we got as far as Bhitoor, where we rested, and breakfasted on hard biscuit and a glass of rum and pawnee. At about twelve o'clock we again moved off under a broiling sun, and after accomplishing five or six miles, intelligence was received that the enemy were in a grove of trees not half a mile ahead, with two guns in position—a 24-pounder and a 9-pounder. We had not moved on much further, when it was thought prudent to deploy our small force on either side of the road, but this move we were rather late in putting into effect, for the detachment of the 90th L.I., which was in rear, had just commenced to move off the road, when the enemy's guns opened fire, and told terribly on the fated 90th. The first shell burst immediately before this detachment, killing two and wounding two or three others. Our guns shortly afterwards commenced, but our shot fell far short, and we had to advance closer up, so as to get in range; and it was well we did so, for the shot of the enemy came pretty quick, but now passed harmlessly over our heads, except one or two shells which exploded immediately above us, but did us no injury. After exchanging twenty or thirty rounds, the enemy's guns were charged. I should have said position, as the guns were already silenced and being limbered up. No sooner was this effected than the cowardly rascals made off, leaving behind two waggons which could not be moved, owing to some of the horses being knocked over by our shot. The enemy, however, cut the traces, &c., of the animals, and fairly bolted. Were it not for the paucity of cavalry on our side, we would have created great havoc amongst the routed foe. The want of this arm has been greatly felt in all our actions with the insurgents, and I doubt not that if we had a body only five hundred strong at the battle before Cawnpore, the massacre at the assembly-room might never have happened. The enemy left behind them three country carts laden with ammunition, and these also fell into our hands. Though our movement was quiet and quickly done, yet the rebels knew, and had prepared for our coming. One unfortunate fellow, however, was fast asleep during the action, and continued in this happy state till he was roused by one of our men dealing him a soft kick on his posterior. He let forth a yell that would have done credit to a beast of the forest, on seeing a white face over him, and made one bound, thinking of a run; but he was brought sharp round by the thrust of a bayonet, and was seen no more. The action altogether did not last an hour; but in this short space of time we had two killed and six wounded. The two former and five of the latter belong to the 90th L.I., and the other wounded man is one of the Madras fusiliers, who was struck in the arm. Of the five wounded of the 90th, no less than four had to undergo amputations—one from the shoulder, one from the thigh, and two of the arm. It was difficult to estimate the loss of the enemy, as the villains have a most expeditious way of either carrying off their killed and wounded, or secreting them in some place tedious to find. On our return to Cawnpore we set fire to and otherwise destroyed the village of Sheo-Bajpore. In one house there was a great quantity of hay and chopped straw stowed away; and nothing would do for a few of the 64th, but they must needs go poking their bayonets into the loose portion in quest of live game. Strange to say, after driving in two or three bayonets, and on turning over a small quantity of the stuff, out came no less than four or five rebels, with drawn swords in their hands. You may rest assured, the men of the 64th did not allow them time or opportunity to use their weapons, but bayoneted everyone on the spot. The whole of this day was occupied in destroying the village of Bhitoor, and on the morning of the 20th we marched back to Cawnpore, and arrived about 9 o'clock, A.M. Soon after, two of the many prisoners we brought in were launched into eternity by the hangman. One was the bearer of letters from Nana to the villagers of Bhitoor and the neighbouring places, calling upon them to supply ammunition, and have supplies prepared against his coming, which would take place in fifteen or twenty days, when it was his intention of clearing Cawnpore of the infidel Peringhee logue. Large reinforcements are daily expected from the Lower Provinces. The 93rd and 53rd are a day's march off, and will, in all probability, be in to-morrow. Detachments of H.M.'s 78th, 84th, 90th, and 5th Fusiliers, with a battery of artillery, go on with a convoy of provisions to Lucknow.—Bombay Times.

DEOGHUR.—We have received intelligence that the 32nd Bengal native infantry have murdered several of their officers, and are now in a state of open revolt. Lieutenant Cooper who was in charge of the detachment at Deoghur, is among the killed, and so is Mr. Ronald, the assistant commissioner of the district. Mr. Floyd, the sub-assistant commissioner, has escaped, but by what means and under what circumstances we have not yet been able to learn. Lieutenant Cooper's men, it will be in the recollection of all, not long ago turned out and fired upon a body of the 5th irregular cavalry on their attempting to approach their lines, and thus established a claim, however unworthy of recognition it has in the end proved to be, to be regarded as stanch and trustworthy. Lieutenant Cooper was well known to be a kind and indulgent officer. He did everything to promote the comfort and welfare of his men. He mixed a good deal with them, and studied to win their regard; and this he made sure he had succeeded in doing.

DHAR.—CAMP BEFORE DHAR, Oct. 23.—At 4 o'clock yesterday morning, the Rajah of Dhar sent a messenger to Major Robertson, warning him that his detachment would be attacked. No attack however was made. About 6 A.M. Brigadier Stuart came up, with the rest of the column, and all moved on towards Dhar. At a quarter to 8, the advance guard, composed of the 14th Light Dragoons, H.M.'s 86th Foot, and the 25th N.I. were seen getting into skirmishing order, and presently the bang! bang! of two guns was heard, but a long way off. The grenadier company of the 25th N.I., under Forbes, were then by order sent from the main body to support the cavalry. Soon after, three more guns were heard. The column then halted to enable Major Keane's (H.M.'s 86th) detachment to join. In about half an hour an advance was again made. In front appeared a hilly ridge with a hump in the centre. By degrees the whole of this hilly ridge was covered by the advance guard; the brigadier and staff being on the top of the hump. They then moved on. Upon the main body reaching this ridge, the fort was seen in the distance, also a hill with tents on it. A continuation of the advance was made, and at last, Woolcombe's battery having got within range, unlimbered, and began to speak to some guns of the enemies placed in position on the hill where the tents were. An occasional round shot came from the guns on the hill, and also, now and then, a bullet from a matchlock; but the enemy kept at a respectful distance. Our battery again advanced to take up a nearer position; and just at that time some dragoons and irregular cavalry galloped diagonally across and up to the left of the hill. A tremendous cheer then arose: the dragoons and irregulars had charged and captured the guns. The infantry advanced to the spot and found that the dragoons wished to spike the guns, but Robertson and Little, of the 25th N.I. objected because they said their men could work them. The grenadier company accordingly took possession of a 6-pounder, turned it, and commenced loading and firing it against the fort situated below the hill—Little pointing the gun. A 9-pounder had been upset and tumbled down the hill, which also was taken possession of by the 25th; but could not be used, as no ammunition could be discovered suitable for it. A shot came now and then from the fort below, where they evidently knew the range of every point. Below this hill, to the left was the road through a gorge between two hills, by which the town and fort were approached. Little fired twelve rounds from his gun, he and his men being loudly cheered. The brigadier came up and called out "Well done 25th." Just at this time, when all were ready, and hoped for and expected an advance against the fort, the order came to cease firing and to retire a little way and encamp.

The three captured guns were apparently about to be left to their fate; but the Major of the 25th calling for volunteers, descended the hill for the gun that had been tumbled over, and though two round shot were fired at them, they brought it up and over the hill to where some of the 86th were standing, who patted the sepoy on the back, shook hands with them, and said "bhot atcha." Of the other two guns one (a 9-pounder) was brought in by the 86th and one by the 25th—that is, two by the latter corps. The 86th appeared disappointed, and said that with the 25th they were quite ready to attack anything. A picket was left at the entrance of the gorge, and thus it may be said was the day's work ended.

The 86th men appear to have fraternised with the 25th sepoy exactly as H.M.'s 22nd did after the battle of Meeanee, and both because they admired them as brave and good soldiers. Pat called out, "Let's have a yell!" and out came such an Irish cheer—far different from an English one; then, "Here's for the 25th!" then, "Here's for their major!" again, "Here's for the 86th!" and lastly, "Here's for everybody!"

It appears that Major Keane's detachment reached the neighbourhood of the enemy at 8 a.m. yesterday. His orders were to avoid engaging the enemy, and to await the concentration of the three different detachments. The consequence was the enemy got very daring, and tried to surround him and cut off his baggage. They shook their standards defiantly at him, and fired upon him. A jemadar of the 1st Nizam's cavalry was killed; a round shot passed Keane's head, and hit the foot of one of his sergeants. Keane could stand this no longer, and sent the cavalry against them, who went at them with a will. Orr, their commandant, killed, it is said, two men. Keane also sent some of the 86th and 25th in skirmishing order against the enemy, and the rascals were soon driven off.

Intelligence has since been received by electric telegraph, of the capture of the fort of Dhar, by the Malwa field force, at one P.M. on the 1st November. The force from Edlabad would reach Mhow on the 3rd. The Sindwah road is not safe, as the opium carts were plundered at Kuroondbaree, near Seerpoor, on the 30th October.

TELEGRAM FROM DHAR, via Mhow, DATED 22ND OCTOBER.—The Malwa field-force marched fourteen miles and attacked the rebels in front of Dhar this day, who were in position to the east of the fort, and numbered over 3,000. Our advance was made in two columns, with light infantry thrown out, and cavalry on the flank, as skirmishers. These quickly drove in the enemy's skirmishers and pickets, when our field batteries opened with excellent practice. The enemy held a strong position to the south of the fort, and other to the north-east on some hillocks, and in a wood under cover of the fort's guns which opened upon us. Woolcombe's battery soon silenced the enemy's guns to the south of the fort, and the left column advancing drove the enemy from his position, when a party of dragoons and 3rd Hyderabad cavalry, headed by Capt. Gall and Macdonald, charged and took their guns. The cavalry on both flanks then went in pursuit of those of the rebels who did not enter the fort, and cut up some thirty of them. A party of the 1st Hyderabad cavalry accompanied Capt. Gall in the pursuit, who said they equalled his own dragoons. The rebels are driven into the fort. Our loss is one dragoon wounded; two killed and five wounded of the 3rd cavalry, H.C. The enemy lost about forty killed.

DELHI.—The following information is contained in a letter from Delhi, dated 1st Oct.:—"We are now working hard to get matters settled here and in the district. Brigadier Showers returned yesterday with a small force with which he had been to the Kootub.

"Another force under Brigadier Showers will march to-morrow towards Goorgaon, and will visit Rewaree, and other places."

Letters received up to 5th instant. General Wilson left the day before for Meerut and Mussoorie, on medical certificate. General Penny arrived on the 5th to take the command. Colonel Becher had left several days before for Simla.

Brigadier Showers's column was supposed to be at Goorgaon on the 5th.

The reinforcements for Colonel Greathed's column were to march on the 6th.

All being quiet at Delhi, H.M.'s 52nd marched towards the Panjab. Three European regiments, the 60th, 61st, 1st Europeans, remain at Delhi, with the 4th Sikhs, Guide infantry, and Sirmoor battalion, and two troops of horse artillery.

Oct. 9.—We are all quiet here, and everything going on satisfactorily.

Brigadier Showers's column found Rewaree almost deserted. Rao Toolaram had evacuated his fort, which, notwithstanding his protestations of friendship, was found armed with twelve guns and a mortar, "all in position on the ramparts, loaded. He had a gun foundry, in which two new brass guns, just made and very neatly turned out, were found." A quantity of military stores and ammunition were seized.

Oct. 12.—Mirza Bukhtawur Shah and Mirza Mehndo, sons of the king, were condemned by the military court, and sentenced to be shot. The execution was to take place on the morning of the 13th.

The king will be arraigned before a military commission next week. The prosecution will be conducted by Major Harriott, deputy judge-advocate-general. His life was guaranteed to him at the time of apprehension.

"Some of the chief rebels," Mr. Saunders writes, "among the Mahomedan gentry of Delhi, are being gradually arrested, and will be brought to trial, when sufficient evidence to convict them has been collected."

Oct. 13th.—Mr. Saunders writes, "everything is quiet here. We have received letters to-day from Showers's column, reporting that they were then at Janoo Sata, and had made several of the Jhujjur sowars who had come across them lay down their arms without resistance.

"We are gradually apprehending some of the chief offenders, —the nabab of Jhujjur and others being anxious now to testify their loyalty and affection for the British Government, by apprehending for us parties who have been concerned in the rebellion."

The main body of the Delhi fugitives have turned off, it is believed, from the trunk road about Canouge, and passed over into Oude. A portion had previously gone off towards Bareilly; and another portion joined the Raees at Farruckabad.

The city of Delhi still remains without inhabitants, but proclamations have been issued, and assurances of safety given to all who did not participate in the rebellion and its attendant foul and brutal murders.

GWALIOR.—The contingent, it is reported on good authority, has moved from Gwalior and taken an eastward course. It started on the 14th or 15th Oct. News of the victory of the 10th had reached Gwalior, and created great sensation there. The Maharaja, now relieved of his difficulties, will publicly re-open political communications with the Governor General's agent.

KOTAH.—Intelligence has been received of the murder of Major Burton, political agent at Kotah, and two of his sons, at that place, on the 15th Oct., by some mutinous troops of the Rajah there, who rose on the date mentioned, and, having set fire to the residency, murdered its unfortunate inmates. Major Burton was a most estimable and good man, of a kind and conciliatory disposition, and greatly beloved by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. He had left Neemuch only a few days previous, with his two sons, to proceed to Kotah, leaving the rest of his family behind in the fort at the former place, who have now to deplore his most sad and untimely fate. Major Burton belonged to the 40th regiment Bengal N.I., and served as interpreter to the 1st light cavalry during the Gwalior campaign, being present at the battle of Maharajpore (bronze star).

KURRACHEE.—The following extract is taken from a letter dated the 21st Sept.—since then the tranquillity of the station has not been disturbed.

"We have lately had a mutiny here, in the 21st regiment Bombay N.I.; it took place on the night of Monday the 14th inst., about 11 o'clock; the wretches had intended rising at 2 o'clock, and doing for all hands, but fortunately they were found out in time. All the sentries left their posts too soon, consequently one of the officers going the rounds, at once found out that something was amiss, and at once turned out the artillery and Europeans, and surrounded the lines and disarmed the regiment. All the ladies had to get up in the middle of the night, and run for their lives to the mess-house arsenal. Some very amusing scenes took place; some of the ladies were only in their night-clothes, and very much frightened. Husbands looking for their wives, and rushing up to the wrong person in mistake; one lady came with a drawn sword in her hand, another with a double-barrelled gun on her shoulder; however, at 5 in the morning all was quiet again, and everybody went home."

LUCKNOW.—A correspondent of the Bombay Times, writing from Cawnpore, on the 12th October, gives the following details concerning the relief of Lucknow:—

"The town of Lucknow is not yet ours, though General Sir J. Outram is close upon it, and has destroyed upwards of two miles of the famous and extensive city. All communication with him and his force is at present totally obstructed. About two or three miles from the town of Lucknow, the enemy had a formidable entrenchment thrown up, and had fifty pieces of ordnance mounted on it; and the taking of this was the commencement of a series of fights with the rebels. The battle at this place was well and fiercely contested, and lasted some hours, and ended in the enemy evacuating it in a most precipitate manner, but the loss on our side was great. Between this entrenchment and Lucknow is an extensive and wide canal, over which, in peaceful times, was constructed a bridge. The main body of our army marched on to the relief of the garrison, and close upon the heels of our sable foes, leaving behind in the entrenchment the whole of the wounded and baggage, and a strong party under command of Major Sibley, 64th foot, to protect and garrison it. After our army had got well over the bridge, cheers and loud hurrahs rent the air, and handkerchiefs and pieces of cloth were waved by the garrison, which was shortly afterwards joined and set free by the brave troops come to their succour. This relief happened in good time, for the rascally rebels had a part of the garrison entrenched camp undermined, and ready for loading. Had we delayed another day, there would have been another tragedy enacted, but the relief was well timed.

The poor women and the still more helpless children were in a most miserable plight from want of clean clothes; in fact, the whole of the garrison were hard up for a change. The women, children, and sick were all sent to the entrenchment at Allumbagh, and there they are now, waiting for reinforcements ere they can be trusted even as far as Cawnpore, distant some forty miles or so. I forgot to mention that the whole of the guns in the fortification, taken by a charge from the enemy, became ours, and shortly before two others were captured,—one in rather an original kind of a battery situated on the road. This gun was charged in a most gallant style by the small detachment of H.M.'s 64th. No sooner had the ladies and children reached the entrenchment, and the escort joined the main body in the garrison, than the enemy flocked in the rear of our advancing columns under Generals Outram and Havelock, and destroyed the bridge. They then took up a position along the canal, to intercept, obstruct, and prevent any communication, provisions, and reinforcements passing to our army, now well up to the walls of the town. This measure leaves our main body, and the party in the entrenchment at Allumbagh, in a strange predicament; and should any from the latter sally out towards the broken bridge, he meets with a warm reception from Jack Sepoy in the shape of a dozen or so of bullets, and is therefore fain to stay within doors. Ever since our fellows crossed the bridge and advanced towards the residency, there has been scarce an hour's cessation of firing from guns of large and small calibre, and those infernal jinjals from the city. Upwards of two miles of the city is levelled, and every hour lessens it still more, but the firing does not slacken in the least. Detachments of eighty and one hundred strong come in almost daily, and two companies of the 5th Fusiliers, and one of H.M.'s 64th, with details of other regiments, are expected in a few days. A detachment of H.M.'s 64th, three hundred strong, under the command of Major Bingham, left with a large store of provisions and ammunition, but these could be taken no further than the entrenchment at Allumbagh, and there both men and stores still remain. Last night a party from various corps, numbering in all one hundred and fifty, arrived from Allumbagh, in charge of an immense number of captured elephants and camels, and one or two of these men tell me that, for want of other material to erect breastworks, the bedding belonging to the men was appropriated for this purpose. The medical gentlemen and their subordinates are hard-worked, and have scarce a moment to think or call their own.

The following additional particulars regarding the relief of Lucknow have been received at Cawnpore, in a letter from Lucknow, dated 26th instant:—

"On the 25th, General Havelock's force, having left the sick and wounded with a detachment at the Alum Bagh, forced their way into the city under serious opposition.

"After crossing the Charbagh bridge, the troops skirted the city to avoid the enemy's defensive works prepared through the entire length of the main street leading directly to the residency. Still much opposition had to be encountered, till we reached the residency in the evening. Our loss was severe—estimated at from 400 to 500 killed and wounded.

"On the 26th the troops were occupied in taking the batteries bearing on the garrison, which were held till assaulted, and continued till then to fire on the residency, after our troops had relieved the garrison the night before. Many thousands of the enemy had deserted the city. The late king's (illegitimate) sons had fled to Fyzabad.

"October 3.—Stores, under a convoy of 300 men, were being despatched to Lucknow. Cawnpore would be reinforced from Futtehpore; and that again from Allahabad, where the naval brigade was expected next day. The road between Lucknow and Cawnpore was still infested by plunderers, who interrupted our communications.

"Oct. 8.—Mr. Sherer mentions the receipt of letters from Lucknow, dated 6th instant. General Outram now holds important positions in the city itself. The strong post at Alumbagh has been victualled and reinforced from Cawnpore. The detachment at Alumbagh is described as well off in all respects. They had returned to Cawnpore 150 elephants for which they had not sufficient fodder, under a guard of about 100 men; so the obstructions on the road cannot be of any strength. Alumbagh signifies 'the garden of the world.' The place is about 500 yards square, with a house in the centre, and an ornamental tower in each corner, large enough to contain twenty men in each tower. The outer wall is about ten feet high. The garrison was unable to communicate with the army under General Outram."

"We left Delhi on the 24th at three A.M., and marched to Gazeedeenuggur; we halted there on the 25th, and, on the 26th marched to Dadree, from thence to Secunderabad. In the village we found in the head man's house a good deal of plundered property, consisting of boxes and pettarahs, which had been broken open, and their contents—ladies' dresses, bonnets, lace, and various other things—scattered over the house. The village was burnt; it seems that some sepoys had been there, but had decamped. I saw a pouch-belt belonging to one of them. The next day we marched towards Boolundshuhur; on entering the station, where we saw houses on each side of the road destroyed, we found that the enemy had taken up their position at a place where two roads meet. They had some light guns with them. It was a well-concealed place, the trees hiding their position, they had thrown up a parapet of earth at the angle where the two roads met; the artillery were sent on and engaged the guns of the enemy which were not seen for a long time, they were so well concealed by the trees; besides having the breastwork, they had some cavalry with them, but what number is not exactly known. The guns were silenced and taken by the artillery. The cavalry both European and native, went in pursuit of the now flying Pandys. Some regiment of irregular cavalry formed into line to receive a charge from Watson's horse—the lancers charged nobly. One squadron charged down the street, and suffered rather from musketry from the sides of the street, or rather serai; two officers out of three were wounded; several cavalry officers were wounded. Lieut. Blair, a gallant soldier, received a very severe wound on the shoulder; whilst in the act of running a man through, he was attacked by three men, who seemed to single out the officers; he did for two of them. Capt. Sarel and Lieut. Jones, 9th lancers, were also wounded. Capt. Best, of the irregular cavalry, also received a sword-cut in the neck. Boolundshuhur, if properly held, is a very strong position.

"In the evening a party went out to the fort at Malagarh, which was found deserted; quantities of European articles were found there: canaries belonging to a lady at Boolundshuhur, crockery of all kinds, loaf sugar in large boxes from Shahjehanpore; some seven or eight wrought iron guns of small calibre were taken there, all the shot were hammered. In the ammunition wagons that were taken with the 9-pounders were some beaten shot; twenty-five barrels of powder; some small arm ammunition was found in the city; the powder was Government: quantities of coats of the 12th N.I., and some few of the 9th, and a box of Golundauze coats were also found. Malagarh is a mud fort with high ramparts and mud bastions at each angle, also another bastion between each of the bastions at the angles, making in all eight bastions; all the walls of the rampart were loopholed. They had an outwork in front of one of the spaces of the work, the ditch is deep, and slope steep. The grape for guns or jinjals was made of pieces of telegraph wire of about an inch in length, put into leather bags; their port-fires were made of piece sulphur."

MEERUT, Oct. 14.—The whole of the Upper Doab is rapidly settling into order. The land revenue balances for the Rubbee harvest will soon have been paid up entirely.

The horse dak runs all the way from Meerut to Agra. Brigadier H. Grant, C.B., has arrived at Agra, and proceeds this day to take command of the movable column, which is now more than half way to Mynpoory.

Fifteen fugitives from the Indore force were apprehended by the Bhurtpore authorities, and reached Agra this morning under an escort of Bhurtpore cavalry.

Captain Nixon returns this evening with the same escort to Bhurtpore, as political agent.

MOZUFFERNUGGER, Oct. 11.—All was again quiet in this district. The rebels appear to have entirely dispersed. Mr. Edwards was still at Thannah Bhowin with the district force, and the land revenue was coming in rapidly.

NAINEE TAL.—A letter has been received, dated the 22nd Sept., stating that Jung Bahadur was sending two Ghoorkha regiments and 1,500 recruits to Almora. Major Ramsay, thus reinforced, would probably commence offensive operations in Rohilkund.

The Bareilly rebels have again sent a force against Nainee Tal, and have occupied Huldwanee and Kaleedoonjee, Nainee Tal is, however, quite secure, and Major Ramsay only waits for a favourable opportunity to attack the invaders. A supply of arms &c. has been sent over from Mussoorie.

A Mussoorie letter of the 16th Oct. mentions that the Bareilly army, which had invaded Huldwanee and menaced Nainee Tal, had again retreated.

NASSICK.—October 13.—At Pinpulgaoon, some twenty miles from here, two Mussulmans were arrested by the Jageerdar, for having with them a European female child about seven years old, and who, it was afterwards discovered, had been stolen from Foolshire. She had been kept for nearly two years at Gungapoor, a village five miles from here, and a short while at Sawurgaoon, and from thence removed to Pinpulgaoon. Where the kidnappers of the child were bound to it is hard to say; she is, however, now placed in the missionary school.

October 18.—The Bheels, it appears, are making use of their time. They robbed the bazaar of Taugaoon last Sunday, and exacted from three Buneas there two hundred rupees each, and ten maunds of wheat; waylaid a soukar, and took five hundred rupees from him; and relieved a number of cloth men of the trouble of carrying their parcels of cloths, both in going to and returning from the bazaar; and any one that offered the least resistance was tied fast to trees. These blackguards, it is feared, will give more trouble than is generally imagined. The row has already spread as far as Candesh; but it is to be hoped that the capture of the fiends' relatives at Tanna will tend greatly to stop its progress.

We are informed that Colonel Macan's force had an engagement with the Bheels on the 18th inst., in which Captain Graham, 4th Rifles, and Mr. Chapman, C. S., were wounded—indeed, they were the only persons touched on our side. Capt. Graham is wounded in the ankle. The affair lasted five hours, and resulted in the Bheels being driven from their strong position, when they dispersed towards Nassick.

ORAI.—Extract from a letter dated Cawnpore, 4th October, from one of the persons who escaped from Orai in Bundelkund:—

"Our party arrived here on the 4th Sept., after suffering great hardships. On the 16th June, we were captured by a party of mutineers of the 53rd N.I. returning from Gwalior, at Roodarree, in Koonah. They plundered all the property and cash we had with us, horses, guns, jewels, &c., to the tune of Rs. 5,000. Our property at Orai was all plundered, and houses burnt by the mutineers from Jhansi. Our first captors brought us to Orai, threatening to murder us or take us to the Nana at Cawnpore, but God in His mercy softened the hearts of the majority, and after five days' imprisonment they released us. We then, after a few hours, fell into the hands of another party from Lullupore; these also released us the next day. The Goorsera chief took possession of the district, and we remained in the town of Orai. A small party of mutineers came to murder us; but, as we had two guns, we kept them off until they were driven away by some of our well-wishers in the town; last of all we were captured by the Goorsera chief's son by order of the Nana, and were bundled off in two carts towards Cawnpore, but when we reached Culpee, news came of the Nana's defeat, and we were saved a fourth time. At last, by the exertions of General Neill, we were sent to Cawnpore.

PESHAWUR.—It appears that we were mistaken in ascribing to the 61st N.I. the merit of being faithful among the faithless. That corps, unhappily, was unworthy of our praise, which would have been more fitly bestowed on the 21st N.I. We have great pleasure in now rendering honour where honour is due.

POONA.—We are informed that another treasonable and inflammatory placard has been found posted on the entrance to a Hindoo temple in the Toolsee Baug, in the city of Poona, where it is usual for the Brahmin community of this place to assemble to hold counsel together on all public occasions. The object of the proclamation, which is in the hands of the police, is to instil into the minds of the people a distrust of all intelligence published in the newspapers that is favourable to the prospects of the British Government in the suppression of the revolt; and the precious document is evidently the "bunao" of an emissary of that incarnate fiend Nana Shitan.

PUNJAB.—The plunderers who have lately infested the Mooltan road have disappeared, and are reported to have betaken themselves to the high grass jungles on the right bank of the Ravee, where, notwithstanding the very difficult nature of the country, they will speedily be coerced. Four detachments are now employed in hunting them down, under command of Lieut.-Col. Paton, Majors Jackson and Chamberlain, and Captain Cureton.

Captain Hockin, of the 17th irregular cavalry, with a party of his men and some irregular levies under command of Mr. Cowan, extra-assistant, Dehra Ismael Khan, has succeeded in cutting up seventeen men and a native officer of the 9th irregular cavalry, near Kadirpore, on the Jhelum, after a desperate conflict. Ensign Chalmers, of the 39th regiment N.I., who accompanied Mr. Cowan and Mr. Thomson, extra-assistant of Leia, were severely wounded. In all thirty men had mutinied, and deserted on the arrival of the regiment near Kalabagh, on the Indus, and the remaining thirteen are reported, with the exception of two apprehended, to be skulking in the Salt Range Hills. The 9th irregular cavalry has proceeded to Bunoo, where it will replace the 5th Punjab cavalry, ordered to Derah Ismael Khan.

RANEENGUNGE.—The following is from a member of the Bengal yeomanry cavalry, dated Raneengunge, 18th October:—

"We hope to be in action soon. An army is forming here already; there are upwards of 1,000 men. The heat fearful under canvass. The Bengal yeomanry cavalry are most anxious to encounter the rebels of the 32nd Bengal native infantry not many miles off. There is no doubt we shall fall in soon with them. We have six light field-guns of the royal artillery, and four companies of the Madras rifles, besides H.M.'s 13th light infantry."

ROHTUCK.—Mr. Ford, in a letter dated the 30th Sept., states that General Cortlandt had arrived there on the 26th, after having visited Bhewance, which was illuminated on the occasion. Mr. Ford was busy re-establishing the Tuhseels and Thannahs.

The large villages had tendered their submission, and the "collections were going on very well indeed;" the roads being cleared for travellers, and the custom line being laid down.

SAHARUNPORE.—The following is an extract from a late letter from Saharunpore:—

"The popular tide is now running fast in favour of Government. All the large towns in this district were illuminated in honour of the fall of Delhi."

THE LONDON MAIL of Sept. 10 arrived at Calcutta Oct. 15 (per Bengal).

TEN STAFF SURGEONS of the second class have been added to the medical staff of H.M.'s forces in Bengal, as a temporary measure under the present emergency.

ENTENTE CORDIALE.—The Englishman states, that rumour has it that Lord Canning will accompany Sir Colin Campbell to the Upper Provinces, on the arrival of the troops from England, and will take up a position at Allahabad.

A SAILOR A-SHORE.—Captain W. Peel, of the Royal Navy, has been gazetted as commandant of the fortress and station of Allahabad, and is to exercise the functions of commandant, in the usual manner, over all persons, naval and military, there serving.

THE steamer Himalaya, left Calcutta for the Cape on the 7th Oct. for the purpose of bringing horses from that colony. The colonial secretary has been requested to purchase and send as many horses as can be procured, by this opportunity.

THE remainder of H.M.'s 82nd regiment, consisting of thirty officers, forty-one non-commissioned officers, and five hundred and ninety-two rank and file, arrived at Calcutta on the 10th of October, in H.M.'s steamer Assistance, from England via Singapore.

THE "PENELOPE."—We have been told that the steam frigate Penelope, besides two hundred horses, brought specie amounting to six lakhs of rupees from the Cape. The local authorities have offered to make another remittance as soon as practicable. A requisition has also been made to the Madras and Bombay presidencies for as much silver as those governments can conveniently spare for Bengal.

AMEER ALLY.—The Phoenix says that Ameer Ally, the deputy commissioner of Patna, has taken his passage down to Calcutta in the Mirzapore. His appointment was thoroughly opposed to the wishes of the Europeans in India, and has turned out apparently a failure. Ameer Ally will, it is said, be succeeded by a Mahomedan, the love of the Mussulmans of India to the British rule and their many noble qualities, so fully exemplified in the late rebellion, rendering them worthy of such a compliment.

CALCUTTA GUP.—Things are getting drier in Calcutta. By the grace of Government dribbets of information are vouchsafed to us; not a tithe of what it possesses however, for, inter alia, it is said that it has the list of casualties that occurred during the siege of the Lucknow Residency, in which half Calcutta had friends. It is feared that the list is a long one, and includes Gubbins and Ommaney. A singular state of feeling pervades the town people now that they have got over their funk here, with marvellous stoicism, of isolated murders and remnantal mutinies, and pretty generally approve of the sneering article of this morning's Englishman, anent the Government notification of the fall of Delhi. The merciful doctrine finds no favour, though it is sedulously preached by the civil slaves whose salary pays for their opinions. Apropos of salaries, a paragraph in one of this morning's papers, regarding a 25 per cent. reduction in all salaries, created quite a sensation in the club, particularly when it oozed out that some such project was actually under consideration. It is to be hoped that the cutting will only include the staff and civil salaries, and will not touch the ensign's mite. It will of course begin with the G. G. himself. The idea is said to have originated with Mr. Dorin, but this must be a mistake, for there is not a griff in the land who has not tried the same experiment on his domestic servants. The Nile is in with Company's recruits. Mr. Halliday's plan of having officers on the G. T. road to procure provisions for the troops on their way up is a good one, but why put a civilian at their head? Surely a commissariat officer would have been the proper person. The Hurkaru advertises a new weekly. It is to be superior to the Literary Gazette, inasmuch as it is to contain original matter. There is room for such a paper, and it will succeed if tolerably good contributions are to be found. The editor of the Hurkaru has not yet departed: his sting, however, is now a mere flea-bite, and Beadon rests in peace. The Marquis of Dalhousie goes or had gone to Malta by the last accounts. Had he not better return to India and annex Oude again? The line of battle ship Sanspareil and frigate Shannon are the sights of Calcutta and daily parties visit them. The Shannon is a superb vessel with every modern improvement. Provisions get dearer and dearer, and the khansamahs worse and worse. Servants find it so easy to obtain places with fresh Queen's officers, at unheard of rates of wages, that they are deserting their old masters. All the Oorlahs have bolted long ago, so we shall soon be left with none but mehters. Several elderly gentlemen in the Sudder are thinking of engaging midwives, and really it is not such a bad idea, for they may depend upon being kept in close confinement, which is the very best situation they could possibly be in. May their labours be long.—Dacca News, Oct. 10.

NEW STEAMERS.—We are informed that by the orders of Government five or six new steamers are now being built by Mr. McNicol, under the superintendence of the railway engineers, in the railway compound at Howrah. The work will be executed with all possible expedition, and the engines to be fitted are to be supplied from the railway shop. We further hear that Lord Canning was about to inspect them, and that the paddle-wheel will be constructed on a new principle altogether, securing greater velocity than in ordinary paddle-wheeled steamers.

CAPTAIN HENRY HOWE.—We are happy to learn that Captain Henry Howe, so long favourably known to the mercantile community as secretary to the superintendent of marine, has in consequence of Captain Rogers's opposition to his advancement to the officiating master attendantship, been appointed acting superintendent of marine, and Captain Hill acting master attendant. Captain Rogers retires. The appointment of Captain Howe will give universal satisfaction, for it is the right man in the right place.

THE COMMISSARIAT.—We hear that orders have been issued to all the zemindars in the interior to provide the commissariat officers with all sorts of provisions, cattle, &c. within their respective zemindarees, that may be required for military purposes, and to render them every assistance they may stand in need of.

REWARD.—We learn from a credible source that his honour the lieutenant-governor has been pleased to grant a reward of nearly four thousand rupees to parties who had protected and escorted to the fort at Allahabad Mrs. Goldie and a number of European gentlemen and ladies.

WRECK IN THE HOOGLY.—On the 6th October the ship Constantinople, under pilotage charge of Mr. Master Pilot J. C. Priddle, whilst proceeding in tow of the steamer Phoenix into the Eastern Gut, was taken by a strong tide, which swept her on the Muckraputty Lump, and caused her to capsize immediately she touched. The captain's son and five of the crew were lost. The life-boat was cleared, and by that means the crew were providentially saved. The wreck was twice revisited by the commander, pilot, and crew; but she sank so fast in the sand, that nothing could be saved.

COLOURS FOR THE CALCUTTA VOLUNTEERS.—For the information of those who feel curious upon the subject, we may state that the colours are four in all: two for the infantry, and two for the cavalry,—none at present for the artillery. Those for the infantry are in dimensions about six feet square, the standards for the cavalry measure three feet by two. The regimental colour is scarlet, and the ground of the cavalry standard a rich purple silk. The Queen's colour for the infantry exhibits the Union, worked out in red, white, and blue, combining St. George's and St. Andrew's Cross. The infantry regimental colour presents a ground of scarlet or crimson silk, on which is emblazoned in one of the corners, the Union, and in the centre is embroidered a large bold wreath of oak leaves and acorns worked in richly-coloured floss silk of different shades, containing the words—

INFANTRY.

The staves are surmounted with spear heads of massive gold, and appended to them are some very handsome cordons or tassels of gold and crimson silk. On the cavalry standards, which are nearly the same as the colours for the infantry, though on a smaller scale, the royal arms are richly and handsomely embroidered on a blue field of silk; they are surrounded by a silver fringe, and the legend is the same as that for the infantry. The Governor-General, it appears, had given orders that these colours should not only be expeditiously finished, but also that they should be richly and handsomely executed. Their workmanship evidently reflects much credit on Messrs Gibson and Wallace, who have got them ready in less than three weeks. We forgot to mention that the Queen's guidon, which the Royals alone, we believe, are entitled to carry, is worked on a field of dark blue, and bearing the Queen's arms superbly embroidered in silver lace. These gay colours were presented to the volunteers on the 20th by Lady Canning, with the usual pomp and speechifying.

REINFORCEMENTS.—The Golden Fleece, with 815 men of H.M.'s 34th and 42nd, arrived on the 15th Oct. She left England on the 6th of August, and has made the run out in sixty-nine days; and if the other steamers which left about the same time and earlier, make equally good passages, we may expect to see here in the course of next week the following troops:—

Ships.		Men.
Robert Lowe	416 1st regiment.
Scotland	200 Artillery.
United Kingdom	403 38th.
John Bell	210 38th.
Victoria	408 Art. and 42nd.
Lady Jocelyn	206 5th, Art. and Rifles.
Sarah Sands	900 Art. and Rifles.
Sydney	440 Art.
Australian	304 42nd.
Candia	672 19th, 20th, 34th, and 97th.

exclusive of 1,500 men for Ceylon, which probably will be ordered to proceed to Calcutta; so that with these, and the men arrived in the Golden Fleece, we shall have an immediate addition of 6,474 men, exclusive of the number that are coming in sailing ships, and several of which are fully due.

PLUNDERED TREASURES.—One of the most active "exciting causes" of the extensive spread of the present revolt has, no doubt, been the love of loot inherent to people of every clime and country in the world, and in particular to the natives of India. The plunder of the Government treasures has been at least one of the great incentives to popular outbreaks, wherever they have occurred. This fact will be abundantly established by the ruinous list of treasures plundered, which we subjoin:—

Treasures Plundered in the North-West Provinces.—

Allahabad, Agra, Allyghur, Ajmeer, Azimghur, Bandah, Baitool, Bareilly, Bijonore, Bhutthe, Budon, Bhoolundshuhur, Cawnpore, Delhi, Dumoh, Etawah, Fatehpore, Furruckabad, Goruckpore, Goorgaon, Hissar, Humunpore, Hushingabad, Jhansi, Jaunpore, Jubbulpore, Jaloum, Kumaon, Moradabad, Mynporie, Muttra, Mundlah, Mosuffurnagpur, Nimar, Nursingpore, Neemuch, Panceput, Rohtuck, Saharunpore, Shajehanpore, Seonee and Saugor.

Treasures Plundered in Oude.—Lucknow, Seetapore, Fyzabad, Indore and Baraitch.

Treasures Plundered in Bengal.—Behar, Shahabad, Singhbloom, Hazareebaugh, Loharduggah and Manobloom.

The above gives no less than fifty-four treasures that have been pillaged by the rebels, and we believe the loss of Government in specie is estimated at ten crores of rupees.

ECCE ITERUM "HURKARU."—"To the Proprietor of the Hurkaru. Dated the 16th October 1857.

"Sir,—The article headed 'The Government of India,' taken from the Press, and reprinted in the Hurkaru on the 6th instant, is in violation of the conditions of your license.

"2. I am directed, therefore, by the right hon. the Governor-General in Council to remind you that you are not protected in printing an article which offends against the law, by the fact that it has already been printed in a newspaper published elsewhere; and to add, that if the offence be repeated, the law must be enforced.

"3. A like communication has been made to the proprietor of the Englishman, the article having been also reprinted in that newspaper.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,

"Your most obedient servant,

Council Chamber, the 16th Oct., 1857.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

PENSIONS TO FAMILIES OF OFFICERS KILLED BY THE MUTINEERS.

Our Governor-General of India in Council.

We have to announce to you that the families of officers who have been killed in the mutiny of the Bengal troops and of the contingent forces, or who have died of their wounds within six months after being wounded, or who have manifestly fallen victims to exposure and hardship immediately consequent to any mutinous risings of the native troops, will be entitled to the benefits of the regulation granting pensions to the families of officers killed in action.—We are, &c.

(Signed) ROSS D. MANGLES,

London, Aug. 26, 1857. And ten other Directors.

REMUNERATION TO MEDICAL OFFICERS.

Fort William, Home Department, Sept. 29, 1857.—Notification.—In supersession of the Notification of the 18th Jan. 1857, it is hereby declared that all medical officers in the service of the Government are, as a general rule, entitled to remuneration for professional attendance on the families of those public servants whom they are bound to attend gratuitously. An exception is made in the case of the families of military officers, staff or regimental, and of chaplains and assistant chaplains; but this exception does not include the families of commissioned military officers in civil employment.

The amount of remuneration for attendance on the families of public servants shall be left in every case to private adjustment, and the conduct of any medical officer who makes a demand which, under the circumstances of the case, shall appear to the Government to be excessive, will be noticed as it deserves.

DISCOMFITURE OF REBELS AT DELHI AND LUCKNOW.

The following has been received from the Home Department:—From C. Beadon, Esq., Sec. to the Gov. of India, to A. R. Young, Esq., Sec. to the Gov. of Bengal, dated Oct. 3, 1857.

Sir,—Intelligence which has been received of the entire discomfiture of the rebels both at Delhi and Lucknow, and the reoccupation of both places by the forces of the British Government, renders it no longer necessary for the present, to insist on the immediate removal from the Behar districts of families residing out of cantonments; and I am accordingly directed to request, that the Lieut.-Governor will suspend the operation of the order of the 4th September. But the Governor-General in Council resolves that the prohibition against European women and children being allowed to enter any of the districts referred to in that order, or to leave Calcutta with the intention of doing so, shall, for the present, remain in full force.

2nd.—These instructions will not affect any orders which may have been given by his excellency the Commander-in-Chief, for the removal of the families of Europeans from military cantonments.

I have, &c.,
(Signed) CECIL BEADON,
Sec. to the Gov. of India.

Council Chamber, Oct. 3, 1857.

CIVIL.

APPOINTMENTS, &c.

FREIGHTS.

Quotations to London and Liverpool, 3l. 5s. to 3l. 12s. 6d.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Oct. 22).—Mule Twist.—The market continues very favourable, owing to the arrivals and stocks being light, 50 and 60 have further advanced about $\frac{1}{4}$ to 1 pie per morah this week. All other counts continue in good demand, but remain as last quoted. Coloured Yarns continue in limited inquiry at about previous prices. A sale of 6 bales German Dye, Nos. 30 to 60, at Co.'s Rs. 1-5 3 per lb. is the only transaction reported this week. Chintzes and Prints continue selling to a limited extent for only local requirement. Nothing as yet doing for the upper provinces. Shirtings, Grey.—39 to 40 inches, and to 7½ lb. have been in increased demand since last week, and sales have been reported at an advance of 2 as. to 3 as. per piece; 45 inches have also improved, about 1 anna per piece. White continues in limited request, and the reported sales are 36 inches at Rs. 4 to 5-14 and 7 per piece. Figured.—Stocks light and in good demand; sales have been reported of 40 yards at Rs. 6-7, and 27 yards at Rs. 3-13 to 4 per piece. Spotted Shirtings at Rs. 6 per piece, and 27 yards at Rs. 4 per piece. Madapolams.—Grey, stocks small and in good demand. Importers are holding on for higher prices. A few sales are reported this week at Rs. 2-1-6 to 2-2 per piece. Cambrics are in limited request. No sales reported this week. Jaconets.—Grey, 39 and 40 inches, low quality, are dull of sale, and about 1 anna per piece lower this week. Middling quality remain as last week. 45 inches stocks small and in good demand, and prices paid are rather higher than former rates. White have been on speculative demand lately, and sales to a fair extent have been reported at slightly higher prices. Book Muslins.—There are a few buyers at former prices; but holders are firm, owing to very moderate stocks. We have heard of no sales during the week. Lappets, Mulls, and Japan Spots are selling to a very limited extent, and only for local requirement. Woolens.—Although this is the season for operation for local requirement, we have only heard of a sale of 24 pieces medium at Rs. 3-12 per yard this week. Copper.—Market without any symptoms of improvement as to demand and prices. Our last quotations remain unaltered. The only transaction reported this week is maunds 100 old at Rs. 42 per maund. Iron.—Sales of English flat, square, and bolt, are reported at a small reduction in price. Nail rod has also slightly declined in price. Sheet has improved about 0-2 per maund, and Swedish flat and square 0-4 to 0-8 per maund.

EXPORT (Calcutta, Oct. 22).—Raw Silk.—Very little doing at present, and prices have gone down Rs. 1-4 to 1-12 from the rates ruling before the holidays. Stocks are light; but the remnant of the rainy Bund in the districts are estimated at about maunds 800, chiefly Hurrupaul. Oil Seeds.—Linseed has slightly improved in price, bold Patna and Mirzapora is at Rs. 4-3 to 4-4. Supplies are very moderate, and holders are rather firm. In Rape Seed there is nothing doing for shipment. Poppy has engaged inquiry during the week for Great Britain, and some transactions are reported at Rs. 3-8 to 4. Oils.—Shipments of Castor Oil have taken place during the week for Great Britain, Cape, and Mauritius, and of Cocoonut, Mustard and Teel Oil for the Cape. Prices of all descriptions remain unaltered. Jute and Hemp.—The new Crop Jute is daily arriving, and the increased supplies in the bazaar have caused a reduction in price. Transactions have taken place during the week at Rs. 3-3 to 3-5 per md.

MADRAS.

TROOPS FROM ENGLAND.—The transport steamer Carthage from Kingston, the 2nd August, arrived in the roads on the 19th Oct., with nine officers and 195 rank and file of H.M.'s 38th regiment, and three officers and three rank and file of the 1st Royals. These latter were landed here, the detachment of the 38th regiment having been taken on in the evening towards Masulipatam.

BOMBAY.

THE LONDON MAIL of Sept. 26 arrived at Bombay Oct. 22 (per Bombay).

FIDELITY REWARDED.—The Governor of Bombay has with praiseworthy alacrity given Gunga Singh, a Subadar of the 2nd grenadier regiment, Rs. 1,000 for his gallant and faithful conduct, and for saving the life of Lieut. Brown. Gunga Singh, at the outbreak of the mutiny, was returning to the Bombay Presidency from furlough. He was intercepted at Banda with some of his comrades, and was forbidden to return to his regiment, but permitted to go back to his home, which was about seven coos to the north west of Futtehpore. On his return he heard that Lieut. Brown had sought shelter in a neighbouring village. He sought him out, and finding him in a most wretched plight, having nothing on but a shirt, a great part of which he had torn to make bandages for his wounded feet, carried him to his own house. There he concealed him, and when about to join his regiment, entrusted Lieut. Brown to the care of a relative, who after some time escorted him in safety to the force under General Havelock.

Mutineers for Transportation.—Fifty-six mutineers of the 27th regiment N.I., were brought to Bombay from Vizadrog, in the H. C. steamer Lady Canning, guarded by a detachment of H.M.'s 95th regiment, and a party of European seamen. They are under sentence of transportation, and will be forwarded to Penang in the ship Faize Allum.

A THIRSTY "DUCK."—We are informed that Colonel C. F. Jackson, of the 2nd regiment Bombay light cavalry, is under arrest, and will shortly be tried by a court-martial, on a charge of having partaken of too much refreshment during a small affair with some rebels a few weeks ago.

IMPORTS (Bombay, Nov. 2).—Cotton Piece Goods.—The business transacted during the fortnight under report has been, to a fair extent, at former prices, with but slight variations; the stocks are now at a low ebb, and the holders remain firm, expecting a further advance and increased activity. Grey T. Cloths have improved in price; Grey Domestic are in good demand; and Grey Madapollams and Jaconets have remained firm.

EXPORTS (Bombay, Nov. 2).—Cotton.—There has been a slight decline in quotations. Broach and Surat at Rs. 170; Dhollera, Rs. 180; Oomeravuttee, Rs. 161-162; Compta, Rs. 155-60; Mangalore, Rs. 160-65; and Dharwar, sawginned, Rs. 190-95.

CHINA.

THE CIVIL WAR.—During the past week we learn both by advices from Ningpo, and from Chinese sources here, that the Taeping insurgents are overthrowing the imperial power in every direction in Keangse province; that the great Taeping leader Shih-ta-kae was lying before Nan-chan-foo, the capital of Keangse, besieging it with a large army; and that it was impossible that it could hold out many days.

About two weeks back the Taipings of Chinkeang came out of the city in large force, attacked the imperial camps under the command of General Changkwo-leang, and destroyed nearly two thousand of the imperial soldiers.

The Chinese soldiers in several parts of Chekeang province have mutinied from want of pay and disinclination to oppose the Taeping soldiers. This, with the news lately received from Shih-ta-kae's army, of the opposition shown by the imperialists to resist the progress of the insurgents, is causing great uneasiness to the Chekeang authorities. It is believed that the troops of Shih-ta-kae will meet with no opposition in entering Chekeang province.

We hear also that the people in Yunnan and Kweichow have risen against the local government and almost overthrown it. The governor of Kweichow committed suicide some time since, and in Yunnan six of the principal towns (or foo) are in the hands of the rebels.—North China Herald.

THE RUSSIAN PLENIPOTENTIARY.—The Russian war steamer America, returned to Shanghai on the 27th of Sept. When she left that port on the 6th, it was understood her destination was the gulf of Pecheli, where H. E. Count Poutiatine expected to receive a reply to a communication he had transmitted to Peking on his previous visit there early in August. We have not heard the result, but as His Excellency has returned in the America, we infer that his diplomatic mission has not been successful. We learn that the America visited Japan and the Corea during her absence.

DISPOSITION OF THE FLEET.—By the lorcha Centaur, from the Canton river, we learn that the typhoon of the 1st Oct. was very severe about the Bogue, the squadron losing five boats through it. The hardest period of the blow was, as at Macao, between three A.M. and daylight, and on until half-past eight, the wind going round from N.N.E. by north, and moderating at south-west. The following is the disposition of the fleet:—Fatsan Passage, Acorn and Bittern; Hamilton Creek, Elk; Escape Creek, Forester; Tiger Island, Sybilie, Highflyer, Esq, Actaon, Cruiser, Sampson, Dove, Bustard, and Plover; Chuen-pee, Tribune. The assemblage of so many of the fleet at the Bogue is for the purpose of enabling the chiefs to meet at a court-martial on one of the Dove's officers. A man was lost in one of the Highflyer's boats when it swamped.—Friend of China.

CABUL.

We are in receipt of Cabul advices down to September 22. It is said that there is much internal dissension and some fighting between a chief named Shaffraz Khan and Goolam Hyder Khan's troops. Sirdar Rahimdil Khan is very sick, and not expected to live.

Intelligence of the assault of Delhi had reached Cabul, and Dost Mahomed openly testified his joy at the success of the British arms.

The following is the translation of a Persian letter from Ghuznee to a Mahomedan gentleman in Calcutta, dated 14th Jelhez, Sunnay Hazah, corresponding with 6th August, 1857:—

"May the blessing of God and the benediction of the Prophet ever rest on you. There is a decided change in the political aspect of Cabul. The martial appearance of the country begins to wear off. The government have relaxed in its preparations for war, so that I have very little of importance to communicate to you at present. Hyder Khan, the governor of Candahar, sent a despatch to his father, the ameer, intimating that the Iranee (Persian) Sirdar Sham Khan Almanee had received orders from his royal master, the Emperor Nusseeroodeen, to withdraw the troops from Herat, and the country has already been evacuated. I am glad to be able to inform you that, through the intercession of our powerful ally, the British, Herat is once more left in the hands of its independent native chiefs. The governor also states, for the information of the Dost, that he paid every respect, and has given a very kind reception to the British Elchee (Ambassador) and his party at his court. I have also heard that the said party, in their return passage, will have an interview with the Dost.

"I heard with regret that the British territories in Hindostan are disturbed by a refractory native soldiery, and hope the insurrection will shortly be quelled by the indomitable power of the Belatee (British) arms. It is rumoured that some of the mutineers from Peshawur, or Ferozepore, are coming over this side for protection. Should this report turn out to be correct, I dare say Dost Mahomed Khan will immediately arrest all of them, and make them over to the British Government."

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

ATTACK ON JUGDESPORE.

From Major V. Eyre, Bengal Artillery, Commanding Field Force, to Major Lydyard, Assistant Adjutant-General, Dinapore Division.

No. 12.

Dated Koor Sing's House, Jugdespore, Aug. 13, 1857.

Sir,—My letter No. 11 of yesterday will have informed you of the successful march of my force upon this place, and the complete rout and dispersion of the rebel Koor Sing and his army.

2nd. Leaving Arrah at 2 p.m. on the 11th, I marched eight miles, and encamped for the night on the bank of the Gagur Nuddee.

3rd. Resuming the route next morning at 6½ a.m. I proceeded without difficulty as far as Bumneeason, where for two miles the road passed over rice-fields, and was in many places under water. Had heavy rain fallen, this road must have been impassable for guns.

4th. At nine a.m. I halted to refresh the troops and animals for an hour. At half-past ten we descried parties of the enemy's horse and foot occupying the village of Tolo Narainpoor, evidently with the view of disputing our passage of the river immediately beyond it; I forthwith pushed forward skirmishing parties from the 5th Fusiliers and Wake's Sikhs in that direction, backed up by Lieut. Jackson's valuable little troop of Shahabad Volunteer Yeomanry. This elicited a sharp fire, which was maintained on both sides with great spirit. As our main body approached nearer I advanced two guns to the front, and opened fire of grape on a party of the enemy, whose heads I could just discern in ambush, about 300 yards distant.

5th. This caused them to rise in some confusion, discovering large masses who had been lying in close concealment. The men of H.M.'s 10th now became so impatient to be led to the charge, that instead of continuing the fire from the guns, as I had intended, I yielded to them the honour of putting the foe to flight. With loud and continuous shouts, they advanced and charged, led on in the most noble manner by Capt. Patterson, impetuously driving all before them. The sepoys fell back on the large village of Dalleem, across the river, where entrenchments had been thrown up. There they endeavoured to make a stand, but were driven out by the joint efforts of the gallant 10th and 5th Fusiliers; the latter under Capt. L'Estrange and Scott.

6th. Thence our route lay through a dense and difficult jungle for one-half mile to Jugdespore, throughout which a running fight was maintained, during which two guns were captured.

7th. Jugdespore was but feebly defended, and at one p.m. we took possession of Koor Sing's noted stronghold, wherein we found large stores of grain, ammunition, and other materials of war.

8th. Koor Sing has fled to the Jutoorah jungle, south of this, with a few followers, and the villagers around Jugdespore are sending in tokens of their submission.

SIR JAMES OUTRAM, G.C.B.

BY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Head-Quarters, Bombay, Sept. 21, 1857.

The Commander-in-Chief has received from the Government the following letter from the Right Hon. the Earl of Clarendon, Secretary of State, conveying her Majesty's approval of the conduct of Lieut.-General Sir James Outram, G.C.B., and of the troops under his command, during the late operations against Persia.

The approval thus accorded by her Most Gracious Majesty to the distinguished officer who held the command, and to the troops which served under his immediate orders, must be a source of just pride to all who were engaged in the late operations, and in announcing her Majesty's approbation of their conduct, his Excellency has great pleasure in desiring that Lord Clarendon's letter shall be read and explained to all the regiments and detachments serving under this presidency at a special parade to be ordered for the purpose,

No. 14.

"To Lieut.-General Sir James Outram, G.C.B.

"Sir,—I have great satisfaction in conveying to you, by command of the Queen, her Majesty's entire approval of the zeal, judgment, and ability which you have shown throughout the whole of the operations in the south of Persia, in which you have been engaged, and her Majesty is convinced that, if the war had not been happily brought to an early conclusion by the treaty of the 4th of March, she could have fully relied on your zeal, and on the courage and devotedness of the army under your command, for the continued prosecution to a successful issue of the military operations which might have been found necessary to induce the Government of Persia to agree to a just and honourable peace.

"Her Majesty has received with peculiar satisfaction your reports of the exemplary conduct, on all occasions, of the forces employed under your orders; and it is her desire that you take the proper steps for making known to them her gracious approval of their conduct.

"I am happy to add that her Majesty has been graciously pleased to signify her intention of conferring upon you the honour of the Grand Cross of the Bath, in testimony of her approbation of your conduct in Persia.

No. 25.

Brigadier-General Havelock to the Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army.

Cawnpore, July 20.

Sir,—I have the pleasure to announce that the triumph of the Mahratta pretender Nena Sahib, adopted nephew of the late "Expesha Bajee Rao," has been of short duration. The treacherous proceedings by which he compassed the destruction of the force under the gallant Sir Hugh Wheeler have already been reported to the Commander-in-Chief.

I have now to announce the complete discomfiture of his force under his personal command, and the capture of his cannon, followed by the re-occupation of his station, which, since the 6th of June, he has been devastating and desecrating by every form of cruelty and oppression.

2. He filled up the measure of his iniquities on the 15th, for, on hearing that the bridge at the Pandoo Nuddee had been forced, he ordered the immediate massacre of the wives and children of our British soldiers still in his possession in this cantonment, which was carried out by his followers with every circumstance of barbarous malignity.

3. My information was in every respect good, and I ascertained that he had taken up a position at the village of Ahirwa, where the Grand Trunk road unites with that which leads direct to the military cantonment of Cawnpore.

4. His intrenchments cut and rendered impassable both roads, and his guns, seven in number (two light and five siege calibre), were disposed along his position, which consisted of a series of villages. Behind these his infantry, consisting of mutinous troops and his own armed followers, was disposed for defence. It was evident that an attack in front would expose the British to a murderous fire from his heavy guns sheltered in his entrenchment. I resolved, therefore, to manoeuvre to turn his left. My camp and baggage were accordingly kept back, under proper escort, at the village of Maharajpore, and I halted my troops there two or three hours in mango groves, to cook and gain shelter from a burning sun.

5. My column then moved off, right in front: the Fusileers led, followed by two guns, then came the Highlanders, in rear of whom was the central battery of six guns, under Capt. Maude. The 64th and 84th had two guns more in their rear, and the regiment of Ferozepore closed the column.

6. My troops, defiling at a steady pace, soon changed direction, and began to circle round the enemy's left. They were shrouded for some time by clumps of mango; but as soon as the enemy comprehended the object of their march, an evident sensation was created in his lines. He pushed forward on his left a large body of horse, and opened a fire of shot and shell from the whole of his guns. But he was evidently disconcerted by our advance on his flank, and anxious for his communication with Cawnpore. My troops continued their progress until his left was wholly opened to our attack, and then formed line and advanced in direct echelon of regiments and batteries from the right. A wing of the Fusileers again covered the advance extended as riflemen.

7. The opportunity had arrived for which I have long anxiously waited, of developing the prowess of the 78th Highlanders. Three guns of the enemy were strongly posted behind a lofty hamlet well entrenched. I directed this regiment to advance, and never have I witnessed conduct more admirable. They were led by Colonel Hamilton, and followed him with surpassing steadiness and gallantry under a heavy fire. As they approached the village they cheered and charged with the bayonet, the pipes sounding the pibroch. Need I add, that the enemy fled, the village was taken, and the guns captured.

8. On the left, Major Stirling, with the 64th, was equally successful against another village, and took three guns.

9. The enemy's infantry appeared to be everywhere in full retreat, and I had ordered the fire to cease, when a reserve 24-pounder was opened on the Cawnpore road, which caused considerable loss to my force; and, under cover of its fire, two large bodies of cavalry at the same time riding insolently over the plain, the infantry once more rallied. The beating of their large drums, and numerous mounted officers in front, announced the definitive struggle of the "Nena" for his usurped dominion.

10. I had previously ordered my volunteer cavalry to adventure a charge on a more advanced part of the enemy's horse, and I have the satisfaction to report that they conducted themselves most creditably. One of their number, Mr. Carr, was killed in the charge.

11. But the final crisis approached. My artillery cattle, wearied by the length of the march, could not bring up the guns to my assistance; and the 1st Madras Fusiliers, 64th, 84th, and 78th detachments formed in line, were exposed to a heavy fire from the 24-pounder on the road. I was resolved this state of things should not last, so calling upon my men, who were lying down in line, to leap on their feet, I directed another steady advance. It was irresistible. The enemy sent round shot into our ranks until we were within 300 yards, and then poured in grape with such precision and determination as I have seldom witnessed. But the 64th, led by Major Stirling and my aide-de-camp, who had placed himself in their front, were not to be denied. Their rear showed the ground strewn with wounded; but on they steadily and silently came, then with a cheer charged, and captured the unwieldy trophy of their valour.

12. The enemy lost all heart, and after a hurried fire of musketry, gave way in total rout. Four of my guns came up and completed their discomfiture by a heavy cannonade; and, as it grew dark, the roofless barracks of our artillery were dimly descried in advance, and it was evident that Cawnpore was once more in our possession.

13. The points of this victory I shall have afterwards to describe. The troops had been 13 hours in their bivouac when a tremendous explosion shook the earth. Nena Sahib, in full retreat to Bithoor, had blown up the Cawnpore magazine.

The first movements of the Mahratta indicated a determination to defend himself desperately. Reports from the front assured us that he had assembled 5,000 men, and placed 45 guns in position for the defence of his stronghold; but his followers have since despaired, and I have taken possession of Bithoor without a shot.

14. I was joined by the steamer Burramputa this morning, which is now in easy communication with me.

15. I must reiterate my obligations to the officers commanding my detachments and batteries, to Major Stephenson, Madras Fusileers; Col. Hamilton, the leader of my Highlanders, who had his horse shot; Major Stirling, 64th, who is slightly wounded; Capt. Currie, 84th, severely, I fear dangerously, wounded (since dead); Capt. Maude, artillery; Capt. Brasyer, commanding the regiment of Ferozepore; and Capt. Barrow, commanding my small body of horse. Lieut.-Col. Tytler's zeal and gallantry have been beyond all praise.

16. It was my desire to have offered my thanks in like terms to Capt. Beatson, deputy assistant adjutant-general; but I can now only record my opinion over his grave. He was attacked by cholera on the morning of this fight, and though he did his duty throughout it, and bivouacked with the troops, he sank in three days under the violence of his disorder. Lieut. Moorsom, H.M.'s light infantry, assisted in carrying my orders, and displayed great courage and much intelligence.

I have already mentioned the conduct of my aide-de-camp in front of the 64th throughout the fight; he was seen wherever danger was most pressing, and I beg specially to commend him to the protection and favour of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

I inclose returns of killed, wounded, and missing, and ordnance captured.

I have, &c.,

Sir,—In forwarding for submission to the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council* a despatch, in original, from Brigadier-General H. honour to request you will state to his Lordship in Council that the Commander-in-Chief considers that the best acknowledgments of Government are due to the Brigadier-General for the true soldierly skill and ability with which these brilliant affairs were conducted.

2. I am further to solicit the attention of the Governor-General in Council to the officers named by the Brigadier-General as most conspicuous. His Excellency considers them especially worthy of commendation.

No. 27.

Brigadier-General Havelock to the Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army.

Camp, Buseerut Gunge, July 29.

(Extract.)

I moved forward from the strong position of Munghowar on the 19th inst., and soon became engaged with the enemy near the town of Unao.

2. It is necessary to describe the enemy's position; his right was protected by a swamp, which could neither be forced nor turned; his advance was drawn up in a garden inclosure, which in this warlike district had purposely or accidentally assumed the form of a bastion. The rest of his force was posted in and behind a village, the houses of which were loopholed. The passage between the village and the large town of Unao is narrow. The town itself extended three-quarters of a mile to our right. The flooded state of the country precluded the possibility of turning in this direction. The swamp shut us in on the left. Thus an attack in front became unavoidable.

3. It was commenced by the 78th Highlanders and 1st Fusiliers with two guns, and soon became exceedingly warm. The enemy were driven out of the bastioned inclosure, but when our troops approached the village a destructive fire was opened upon them from the loopholed houses. It became necessary to bring up the 64th under Col. Wilson, K.H. Here some daring feats of bravery were performed. Private Patrick Cavanagh, 64th, was cut literally in pieces by the enemy, while setting an example of distinguished gallantry. Had he lived, I should have deemed him worthy of the Victoria Cross. It could never have glittered on a more gallant breast.

4. Lieut. Bogle, 78th Highlanders, in an attempt to penetrate into a house filled with desperate fanatics of the Mussulman faith, was badly wounded. The village was set on fire; still its defenders resisted obstinately. Finally, the guns were captured, and the whole force was enabled to debouch by the narrow passage between the village and the town of Unao, and formed in line. It found the enemy rallied, and re-formed in great force. Infantry, guns, and cavalry were drawn up in line on the plain. They were attacked in direct echelon of detachments and batteries, their guns taken, and the infantry and horse put to flight. During the whole of the action a large detachment of the troops of Nena Sahib threatened our left flank.

5. The troops halted three hours, and then moved on towards Buseerut Gunge. It is a walled town, with wet ditches. The gate is defended by a round tower, on and near which four pieces of cannon were mounted, the adjacent building being loopholed and otherwise strengthened. In rear of the town is a broad and deep inundation, crossed by a narrow chaussée and bridge. The guns pushed on in admirable order, supported by the 1st Fusiliers skirmishing and the 78th Highlanders and 64th regt. in line.

6. The enemy's cannonade was well sustained; nevertheless, our force continued to gain ground. The 64th were then directed to turn the town by our left and penetrate between it and the swamp, thus cutting off the enemy from the chaussée and bridge. The Fusiliers and the Highlanders precipitated themselves on the earthworks, broke through the intrenchment, and captured the town.

7. The whole of the guns of the 5th company of 7th battalion of artillery were taken by us, with nearly all its ammunition. It had come from Fyzabad and Lucknow. The ground on both sides of the road at Unao was so flooded that it was impossible for cavalry to act. My volunteer horse were therefore reduced to inactivity, though most anxious to engage.

8. The loss of the enemy at Unao is estimated by native report at 1,500 killed and wounded. It might, in truth, amount to 500. It was lighter at Buseerut Gunge, in consequence of the mistake already noticed.

9. In these two combats 19 guns were captured from the enemy.

10. I must praise the conduct of all my staff officers. Lieut.-Col. Tytler, hardly able from indisposition to sit on his horse, set throughout the day an example of daring and activity; Lieut. Havelock, deputy assistant-adjutant-general, had a horse shot under him; Lieut. Seton, my acting aide-de-camp, was severely wounded. Major Stephenson, at the head of the Madras Fusiliers, showed throughout the day how the calmest forethought can be united with the utmost daring.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THE INDUS STEAM FLOTILLA.

THE habitual readers of this journal will readily understand the feeling of gratification with which we announce the official recognition of the Company for establishing a steam flotilla on the Indus, in conjunction with the Scinde Railway. There is no one public enterprise in India of greater importance, or one calculated to play a more influential part in the future history of that country. The prosperity of the Punjab and, indeed, of the whole north-western districts of Hindostan, depends upon the navigation of the Indus and its tributary railways. In a strategic point of view, the defence of the extreme frontier towards Afghanistan will thereby be immensely facilitated; and for commercial purposes, it is the one thing needful to render the Punjab one of the most flourishing departments of the British empire. The East-India Company, deeply impressed with the advantages likely to be derived from the opening up of the vast natural resources of the Punjab, have guaranteed a minimum rate of interest of five per cent. per annum on a capital of two hundred and fifty thousand pounds, for the purpose of establishing a steam flotilla between the terminus of the Scinde Railway and the city of Mooltan. This is truly the minimum rate; for there can be no doubt that the net returns will speedily amount to twenty per cent. The net profits over and above the guaranteed rate of interest are to be divided equally between the East-India Company and the shareholders, until such time as all advances for interest shall have been repaid, when they will pass in their entirety into the hands of the shareholders. At a period when so little confidence can be placed in strictly private speculations, an investment of this secure character can scarcely fail to "flutter" all commercial and monied circles. The only fault likely to be found is the limited amount of capital, owing to which so many applicants must inevitably be disappointed.

THE LATE BRIGADIER-GENERAL NICHOLSON.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL JOHN NICHOLSON was born at Virgemont, near Dublin, on the 11th Dec., 1822. His father, Dr. Alexander Nicholson, a physician who practised for some years in Dublin, was of a very good family, settled at Stramore, in the county of Down. His mother, who is still alive, and residing at Lisburn, in the county of Antrim, was a daughter of Wm. Hogg, Esq., of Antrim, and sister of Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., for many years a prominent member of the Court of Directors of the East-

India Company, and who formerly represented Beverley, and subsequently Honiton, in Parliament. John Nicholson received his early education at the grammar-school of Dungannon, in the county of Tyrone, which at one time held a high reputation in Ireland as a first-class seminary. It was there, as many of his school-fellows can testify, that he early gave tokens of those splendid qualities which, in after days, in the camp before Delhi, gained for him the name of the "Lion of the Punjaub." He completed his studies under Dr. Wall, of Hume-street, Dublin, and, having received a nomination as direct cadet of infantry on the Bengal establishment, from his uncle Sir James Hogg, he proceeded to India in 1839. The regiment to which he was posted, the 27th Bengal Native Infantry, formed part of the army of occupation in Afghanistan, and when Nicholson joined it was garrisoning Ghuznee. The surrender of that fortress by Colonel Palmer to the Barukzye sirdars, and the subsequent consequences, have all been ably chronicled by the historian of the Afghan war. Nicholson, a beardless ensign, but a "heaven-born soldier," felt so deeply the humiliating circumstances of the surrender, that with tears of indignation he broke his sword rather than give it up to the Afghan chief. He remained in captivity with the remnant of the ill-fated garrison until relieved by the force under General Nott in September, 1842. On the withdrawal of the British army from Afghanistan, Nicholson, in 1843, was appointed adjutant, and on him mainly devolved the duty of re-organizing the corps which had been almost annihilated at Ghuznee. When the first threats of the Sikh invasion necessitated the formation of a corps of observation at Ferozepore, under Sir John Littler, Nicholson, whose regiment at that time was stationed at Ferozepore, was offered the appointment of deputy quartermaster-general of the division. With a spirit that requires no comment, he declined the post, as his own corps was then short of European officers. Subsequently, however, he became attached to the commissariat department, and in that capacity was present at the battle of Ferozeshuhur. On the conclusion of peace, he was one of the officers sent by Lord Hardinge to Jummoo to assist in training the infantry of his Highness the late Maharajah Gholab Sing, of Cashmere. Having performed this duty, he resigned the sword for the pen, and became assistant to the Resident at Lahore; but on account of his health was obliged to leave for Peshawur shortly before the second Sikh war broke out. In 1847 he was employed, under the late Sir Henry Lawrence, in Peshawur; and, on the rising in the Hazareh country, in July of that year, was sent to secure the important fortress of Attock, on the Indus. It was on this field that Nicholson was now about to gain a reputation, at the age of twenty-five, that caused him to be singled out, ten years later, to become one of the main props of the tottering empire of Britain in India, and gained for him the glorious, but fatal, distinction of heading the storming columns at the final assault on Delhi. He commenced operations by turning out the Sikh regulars, and by garrisoning Attock with some of his own more trustworthy Pathan levies, and then took the field with the remainder, to watch, and, if possible, to check, the movements of the different bodies of insurgent troops roaming about the country. Alone—in the midst of troops inferior to the enemy in numbers, and in whom he could not place implicit confidence—he yet managed, for a length of time, by indomitable energy, promptitude, and decision, and the rapidity of his movements, to overawe a hostile populace, and to hold in check disaffected sirdars and a mutinous soldiery. At last the crisis came. General Whish had been compelled to raise the siege of Mooltan in consequence of the defection of Shere Singh; and the subsequent march of the Sikh chieftain to join his father Chuttur Singh in the Hazareh country, thence to threaten Lahore, obliged Nicholson to abandon the line of the Indus, and to fall back on the capital. He left Lieut. Herbert, of the 18th N.I., to hold Attock with his raw Pathan levies; and the gallant and protracted, though unavailing, defence of the fortress by that officer is one of the brightest episodes of the war. Nicholson henceforward acted as the "eye and ear" of the grand army under Lord Gough; was present at the action of Sadoolapore, and the battles of Chillianwallah and Goojerat, and accompanied General Gilbert in his pursuit of the enemy to Peshawur. For his services in the first Sutlej campaign Lieutenant Nicholson had received a medal and clasp; for the second he now received a similar honour, and the rank of brevet-major. On the annexation and settlement of the conquered provinces, he again laid aside his sword for the pen, and up to the time of his return to England on furlough, in 1850, he remained in civil employment. When at home, instead of wasting his time in inglorious ease, the same ardent love of his profession which ever characterized him, led him to make a tour of all the principal schools and arsenals of the continent, in order to acquaint himself with the French and German military systems. On his return to India he resumed his civil appointment, which he continued to hold until the exigencies of the present crisis again called forth his services.

One of the first of the prompt and decisive measures of Sir John Lawrence on the outbreak of the mutiny was to appoint Nicholson a brigadier-general, and to place him in command of a movable column of European and Sikh regiments.

In the beginning of July, last a wing of the 9th light cavalry and the 46th native infantry mutinied at Sealkote, shot some officers, plundered the station, and marched off towards Delhi. On the 10th the news reached Nicholson, who was then at Umritsur. He immediately marched towards Goordaspore, which he reached on the following day, and on the 12th came on the enemy crossing the river Ravee at the Trimmoo ford. He drove them back with severe loss; but a good many managed, after their discomfiture, to escape into a large island in the river, whence Nicholson prepared to dislodge them. The mutineers had a gun placed in a breastwork on the very margin of the island, opposite to which Nicholson placed Capt. Bouchier's battery, of one howitzer and two 9-pounders, on the mainland, in order to occupy their attention. At daybreak on the morning of the 16th the general crossed over H.M.'s 52nd L.I. to the island, about three-quarters of a mile below the enemy's single gun. This operation took some time, as there were only two small boats to be found, and in the mean time Bouchier engaged the enemy's attention with his guns, without the loss of a single man on his side. At seven o'clock, the 52nd having been nearly all crossed over, General Nicholson himself went over to reconnoitre the enemy's position with half a dozen sowars. Having effected this, he ordered the 52nd to advance in two lines, preceded by their skirmishers. The enemy now turned their gun round to bear upon the approaching infantry, and, notwithstanding the heavy fire of round shot and shrapnell which Bouchier and Dawes kept up on their flank, saluted the advancing 52nd with two or three discharges of grape. The skirmishers, with a cheer, doubled on the gun; a few stood and were bayoneted beside it, the rest fled to the head of the island, and were either shot down or drowned in attempting to escape. General Nicholson's loss was four men of H.M.'s 52nd wounded. Well might the telegraph announce to us that "General Nicholson, with the movable column, had ANNIHILATED the Sealkote mutineers." After this brilliant piece of service, Nicholson, with H.M.'s 52nd L.I., a wing of H.M.'s 61st Foot, Bouchier's battery, Dawes' horse-artillery-guns, and some Sikh corps, continued his march on Delhi, where he arrived on the 4th August, and was immediately appointed to the command of a brigade of the beleaguering army. On the 24th August, Bukhtaur Sing, "the Bareilly general," formerly soubadar of Capt. Kirby's battery of native artillery, left Delhi with 7,000 men and 18 guns, to intercept the British siege-train on its way from Ferozepore, and to attack the besieging force in the rear. General Wilson immediately despatched Brigadier-General Nicholson in pursuit, with a force little over 2,000 men and 16 horse-artillery guns. General Nicholson left the camp before Delhi at daybreak on the 25th, and after a harassing march came up with the enemy, strongly posted at the village of Nujffghur, at 5½ p.m. The enemy were in position on his "left and front, extending from the bridge over the Nujffghur canal to the town of Nujffghur itself, a distance of a mile and three-quarters or two miles. Their strongest point was an old serai on their left centre, in which they had four guns; nine more guns were between this and the bridge." As the evening was far advanced, and he had no guides, he was compelled to make a very hasty reconnoissance. Having formed H.M.'s 61st Foot, 1st fusiliers, and 2nd Punjaub infantry (Green's Sikhs), in line, horse-artillery guns thundering on each flank, squadron 9th lancers and Guide cavalry supporting, he attacked and carried the serai at the point of the bayonet. Then, changing front to the left, so as to turn the position of their guns, he swept down their whole line, capturing thirteen field-pieces, while Lieutenant Lumsden, with the 1st Punjaub infantry (Coke's Rifles), attacked and cleared the town of Nujffghur on his right. The enemy fled precipitately, as usual, except a few, who, being surrounded in the little village of Nuglee, made a desperate defence; and it was not without the loss of Lieutenants Lumsden, of Coke's Rifles, and Elkington, of 61st Foot, with several of their men, that the village was at last carried. The enemy abandoned guns, baggage, everything; and, notwithstanding their attempts to prevent it, Lieut. Geneste, of the engineers, mined and blew up the bridge over the canal that same night. At daybreak on the following day General Nicholson returned to head-quarters camp, and was warmly thanked by General Wilson, in Orders, for the "energy and judgment" he had displayed on the occasion. We now come to the closing scene of his brief and brilliant career. On the formation of the storming columns for the final assault on the 14th September, Brigadier-General Nicholson was intrusted with the chief command. The first column, under his immediate command, consisting of H.M.'s 75th regt., 1st fusiliers, and 2nd Punjaub infantry, consisting of 950 men, assaulted the main breach, covered by the skirmishers of the 60th rifles. The operation was completely successful, and the enemy, after a severe resistance, were driven back at all points in a complete rout. During the advance along the ramparts, General Nicholson fell desperately wounded; but with that indomitable courage which even the agonies of death could not subdue, he refused to leave the field till his work was done. He lingered, in a precarious state, long enough to catch a glimpse of the accomplishment of that task to which he had so sternly and zealously laboured to contribute, and expired on the 23rd of September. His character requires no elaborate comment, for it was stamped in every action of his life. The boy at Ghuznee—the leader of raw levies or civil administrator in the Punjaub, as circumstances required—the conqueror at the Ravee and at Nujffghur, and finally, the general struck down in the hour of victory on the ramparts of Delhi—were the same consistent man of thought or of action, equal to any situation; and if success is the criterion of good service, eminently worthy of a public monument. General Nicholson leaves a mother and two sisters, to whom it will be but slight consolation, that "had he survived, he would have been recommended for a K.C.B.-ship." He is the third son that Mrs. Nicholson has given to the Hon. Company and the country. The second son, Alexander, fell in Affghanistan, and another died in the unhealthy climate of Scinde. She has yet another son, a lieutenant in the service, and second in command of a Punjaub corps, who was wounded along with his distinguished brother in the assault of the 14th. The Hon. Company, despite their detractors, have ever been good and liberal masters, and we feel sure that some substantial mark of their sense of General Nicholson's eminent services will not be wanting towards his bereaved relatives.

The dates of the late Brigadier-General Nicholson's commissions are:—

Ensign	24th February, 1839.
Lieutenant	13th January, 1842.
Captain	20th March, 1848.
Brevet-Major	7th June, 1849.
Brevet Lieut.-Colonel,		20th November, 1854.
Brigadier-General (temporary),		June, 1857.

He was also made a C.B. for his recent successes on the Ravee.

THE SIEGE OF DELHI.

ON the morning of Monday, the 11th of May, the inhabitants of the imperial city proceeded to the discharge of their daily duties without the slightest suspicion of the truth that a revolution was at hand. The day, indeed, had scarce begun, before a rumour spread from mouth to mouth that there had been a great tumult at Meerut, and that a whole brigade of troops from that station was already within sight. Presently it was announced that a body of horse was seen rapidly approaching the bridge of boats, and that in the distance gleamed the bayonets of the infantry. Mr. Simon Fraser, the Commissioner, instantly hurried down to close the city gates; but the precaution was useless, as the mutineers were at once admitted into the palace fort. He then turned his horse and drove to the palace, with the evident intention of confirming the king in his allegiance; but, before he could reach the gate, he was overtaken by the mutineers and foully murdered. The commandant of the palace guards and the chaplain of the station were the next victims. Fevered by the sight of blood and excited by intoxicating drugs, the cavalry then dashed forward towards the Cashmere gate, galloping wildly through the dense masses of awe-struck citizens. Not far from the main guard they encountered the 54th N.I., under Colonel Ripley, who had been despatched from cantonments to check the progress of the mutineers. As the latter came thundering onwards, the sepoys suddenly opened their ranks to receive them, and left their officers unprotected in the middle of the road. The colonel alone was armed, and shot two of the ruffians, but was quickly cut down, together with his brother officers. The troopers then fraternized with the sepoys, and horse and foot rivalled each other in cruelty and violence. The only check they received was through the devoted gallantry of the ordnance officers at the magazine. These brave men defended the arsenal against overwhelming numbers until ladders were applied to the walls, and then blew up the small-arms ammunition, with at least 500 rebels. As the day drew on, the other two regiments of the brigade became restless and agitated, and, when the smoke of the explosion was seen, ran to their arms with loud cries of "Deen! Deen!" They did not, however, attempt to molest their officers or the ladies, except that an artilleryman shot the horse of his commanding officer. The Europeans living in cantonments, with a few fugitives from the city, had gradually collected at the Flagstaff Tower, with a vague hope of being defended by the artillery. But as the evening drew near and the defection of the troops became general, the brigadier gave orders for all to seek safety in flight. Those who had carriages and horses instantly hurried off to Meerut or Kurnaul, while the less fortunate betook themselves to the friendly shelter of the jungles, and only reached a haven of safety after encountering a thousand perils. Within the city walls scenes of diabolical lust and cruelty were meanwhile being enacted, and the followers of Christ were again subjected to insult and persecution.

When the news of this alarming and wide-spread mutiny reached the Commander-in-Chief, who had repaired to Simlah for the hot season, it was received with incredulity and impatience. The worst rumours, however, were speedily confirmed, and General Anson hastened down to Umballa, to take active measures for the suppression of the revolt. He was denied, however, the opportunity of atoning for his previous neglect of warnings by the activity and resolution he might subsequently have displayed. On the 27th of May he was carried off by cholera at Kurnaul, while awaiting the arrival of the siege-train from Phillour. His death was regretted by his friends, and his faults were condoned by the public. His immediate successor was Sir Henry Barnard, a Queen's officer of Crimean experience, but utterly devoid of original genius, and a stranger to the country. However, he lost no time in taking the field, and on the 1st of June commenced his march upon Delhi. The Meerut division, under Brigadier Wilson, of the Bengal artillery, had already opened the campaign. On the day of General Anson's decease a force, consisting of 450 men and officers of the 60th royal rifles, 200 troopers of the 6th dragoon guards (Carabineers), a battery and a half-troop of artillery, started from Meerut, and took the high road to the imperial city. Three days afterwards General Wilson encountered a formidable body of the mutineers, strongly posted at the village of Ghazee-ood-deen Nuggur, near the suspension-bridge across the Hindun. The enemy at once opened fire with some heavy guns, but the artillerymen, being much annoyed by the rifles, fired with greater rapidity than precision. After a brief cannonading on both sides, the British infantry advanced at the double, and carried the enemy's position in the most gallant style. Their principal loss was occasioned by the blowing up of an ammunition-waggon, by which Capt. Andrews and four men were killed. On the following afternoon the insurgents again approached in great force, and took up a position on a high ridge in front of the bridge, and about a mile from the advanced pickets. From this point they commenced a harmless fire, which was speedily responded to by the British artillery. In little more than two hours the enemy's fire sensibly slackened, upon which the rifles advanced to the charge and soon crowned the ridge. The mutineers, however, were already in full retreat, and the men were too much exhausted by the heat to pursue them any further. Lieut. Perkins, of the horse artillery, was killed in this action. In the night of the 7th of June, General Wilson effected a junction with the Umballa force, under General Barnard, at Alipore, and before daylight on the morrow the little army of retribution was advancing towards Delhi. Its numerical force did not exceed 3,000 Europeans, with one battalion of Ghoorkas; but the paucity of numbers was counterbalanced by superior discipline and a burning thirst for revenge. On reaching Badlee-ke Serai, the insurgents were found strongly posted and prepared to oppose their further advance. Two brigades, under Generals Grant and Graves, were despatched to turn the flanks of the position, but a headlong charge of the 75th foot anticipated the slower movements of strategy, and the enemy retreated, leaving his guns on the ground. Notwithstanding the extreme heat of an almost vertical sun, General Barnard wisely determined to push on, lest more formidable obstacles might be opposed to his progress. The army was therefore divided into two columns, one of which, under General Wilson, kept to the main trunk-road, fighting its way through gardens and walled inclosures. The other, commanded by General Barnard in person, took the left road, through the cantonments, and, overcoming all opposition, swept the entire ridge, from the flagstaff to the large brick-built house formerly occupied by the Mahratta chief, Hindoo Rao. The British army then took up a position in front of the Cashmere gate, occupying the old cantonments, the grounds about Metcalfe-house, and the low ridge of rocks impending the city. In short, it encamped on precisely the same spot that had been occupied centuries before by Timour Shah and his Tartar hordes, when advancing to the attack of old Delhi. Horrible was the aspect of the cantonments, only a few weeks before so smiling and cheerful. Unsightly heaps of rubbish marked the site of commodious bungalows, the happy homes of many a British family. The broken furniture was strewn about the compounds, hacked by swords or broken to pieces. The horses had been stolen, the carriages taken into the city, the gardens devastated, the servants dispersed, and desolation substituted in the place of peace and contentment. Within the city itself, lawlessness and rapine stalked unchecked through its once busy streets. All trade had ceased. The shops were closed, until compelled by force to be opened. Ancient animosities were now expiated by bloodshed. Neither life nor property was secure: the only safety was in arms and personal prowess.

The effete old king was nominally the ruler, but the real power was vested in his sons, acting in co-operation with the insurgent leaders. At the commencement, the rebel force probably did not exceed 8,000 men; but reinforcements were continually arriving, and, notwithstanding the incessant loss by death or desertion, double that number of fighting men is estimated to have been within the walls at the time of the final assault.

Owing to its great inferiority in men and guns, the British army for many weeks could barely hold the ground on which it was encamped. It was simply an army of observation, perpetually harassed by a numerous and desperate enemy. The first sortie was made on the afternoon of the 9th, and was directed against the main picket at Hindoo Rao's house, but was repulsed, after some hard fighting among the rocks, in which Lieut. Quentin Battye, of the Guides, was mortally wounded. "Well, old fellow!" said the dying hero to a comrade—" dulce et decorum est pro patria mori: you see it's my case." Two more sorties took place, with similar result, on the 12th and 15th; but on the 19th a serious action was fought, which lasted from sunrise to sunset. At one time the insurgents very nearly succeeded in getting to the rear of the British position, and horse, foot, and artillery were for some time mixed together in inextricable confusion. Finally, however, the dogged resolution of the men, and the brilliant courage of the regimental officers, supplied the deficiency of military science on the part of their leaders, and the enemy was repulsed at every point, though not without the loss of Col. Yule, of the 9th lancers. At daylight on the 23rd, the centenary of the battle of Plassy, the rebels again sallied forth in considerable numbers, and, under the cover of gardens and buildings, made a furious assault on the outposts. After a severe struggle, they were driven back into the city, leaving some hundreds of corpses on the field of battle. They then remained quiet until the 26th, when a futile attempt was made to get to the rear, which was frustrated by the demolition of two bridges over the canal on the previous evening. The outposts were again assailed on the 30th, and Lieut. Yorke, 3rd N.I., was killed; but the usual result was obtained. Thus far, if the enemy could boast of no success, the British could boast of no progress. Better things, however, were now expected, in consequence of the supersession of Major Laughton, the officer in command of the engineers, by Col. Baird Smith, and the arrival in camp of Brigadier Neville Chamberlain, as Adjutant-General of the Bengal army, in succession to Col. Chester, killed by a cannon-ball at the affair of Badlee-ke-Serai.

The month of July was inaugurated with heavy rains, which cooled the air, while they rendered active operations almost impossible. The artillery, indeed, ceased not to hurl shot and shell into the doomed city; but the walls remained uninjured. On the 9th the enemy resumed the offensive, and some of their cavalry, through the connivance of a picket of irregular horse, contrived to steal round to the rear; but their true character being speedily discovered, they were driven out of camp with considerable loss. Lieut. Hills, of the horse artillery, narrowly escaped being cut to pieces on this occasion, through the misconduct of a squadron of the carabineers, but was rescued from imminent danger by the chivalrous gallantry of his superior officer, Major Tombs. In the Subzee Munde, or vegetable-market, the fighting was very severe. Two hundred of the enemy were left dead upon the spot; but the British loss was by no means insignificant, consisting of 1 officer and 42 rank-and-file killed, and 8 officers and 160 rank-and-file wounded. Notwithstanding the rough handling they experienced on the 9th, the mutineers again issued forth on the 14th, and in great force attacked the right flank. But the reception they met with was not calculated to encourage them to persevere, and after some heavy skirmishing they fell back in confusion. The British troops were unhappily led too near the walls by the ardour of pursuit, and sustained a terrible fire of grape and musketry. Sixteen officers and 230 men were put hors de combat by their ill-advised impetuosity; and among the wounded was the new Adjutant-General of the army. On the 18th and 23rd two more sorties were repulsed: Lieut. Crozier, of H.M.'s 75th, being slain on the former, and Lieut. Law, 10th N.I., on the latter occasion. About this time General Barnard was compelled by ill-health to relinquish the command to General Reed, who was actually his senior officer, but had left the conduct of the siege to his more active and vigorous junior.

Up to the morning of the 31st, the rebels refrained from offering any molestation even to the outposts; but on that day they issued forth in two massive columns from the Cashmere and Ajmere gates. The former column moved rapidly towards the right, and turned two 9-pounder guns on the centre battery. After cannonading for some hours, they returned to the city. The other column, passing behind the Eed Gah, took the road to Rohtuck, with the intention of getting to the rear of the camp. Their movement, however, was rendered nugatory by the demolition of the bridges by which they had proposed to cross the canal. Consequently, they also were obliged to beat a retreat. All night long a tremendous cannonading was kept up, the bugles continually sounding the advance, and the sepoys shouting to one another words of encouragement. This noisy demonstration was occasioned by the arrival of the Mahommedan festival of the Eed, or commemoration of Abraham's offering up of Ishmael, and was maintained without intermission until midday on the 2nd of August. At times small parties of sepoys, under the influence of intoxicating drugs, would make a desperate rush at the breastworks, from behind which they were shot down by the British soldiers. On the part of the latter only twenty-two men were placed hors de combat, while ten times that number of the mutineers were strewn upon the ground. Three days then intervened before the next sally, which cost the life of Lieut. Brown, 3rd N.I.; but was as fruitless as its predecessors. On the 10th Brigadier Showers performed a gallant exploit in capturing four guns established outside the walls, and which played upon the picket at Metcalfe House. This important service, however, was not effected without the loss of 113 men and officers killed and wounded; among the former was Lieut. Sheriff, 2nd European Fusiliers. An unsuccessful attempt was made about the same time to destroy the bridge of boats; but this disappointment was forgotten in the arrival of Brigadier-General John Nicholson, one of the most dashing officers in the Indian armies. Nor did he arrive single-handed. With him came the movable column of 2,500 men, Europeans and Sikhs, with which he had destroyed the Sealkote mutineers on the Ravee. The British army now exceeded 9,000 men, of whom one-half were Europeans, and the actual siege was about to be instituted in earnest.

On the morning of the 25th a strong body of the enemy was again observed to issue from the Ajmere Gate and take the road to Rohtuck. Lieut. Hodson, formerly of the Guides, was therefore despatched with 300 irregular horsemen to watch their movements. Pushing forward a little too incautiously, he was surrounded by a superior force. From this critical position he was speedily rescued by a body of the Jheend Rajah's levies, with whose aid he attacked and routed the enemy. A far more serious contest, however, came off on the 25th at Nujffghur. Nearly 7,000 mutineers with eighteen guns quietly proceeded from the city in order to intercept the siege-train of heavy guns shortly expected from Ferozepore. No sooner was this known in camp, than Brigadier Nicholson was instructed to march with a movable column of 1,000 Europeans and 2,000 natives, and overtake the enemy. At five o'clock in the afternoon he came up with them, after a march of twenty miles, and at once advanced to the attack. A serai with four guns in position was carried by a brilliant charge of the 61st and 1st European Fusiliers, and four more guns were captured at a bridge a little further on. With their remaining guns the rebels fired grape and round shot upon the bridge, and blew up an ammunition-wagon, but were finally compelled to retire. After destroying the bridge, the troops bivouacked all night upon the ground, and next day returned to camp with thirteen guns. Their loss, however, had been considerable—120 killed and wounded, most of whom fell in an attack upon a handful of sepoy who had occupied a small village. Capt. Lumsden, of the Guides, and Lieutenants Elkington and Gabbet, of the Fusiliers, were among the slain. The enemy made another attempt on the outposts on the 26th, but were repulsed by a volley of grape from the centre battery.

The engineers were now assiduously engaged in clearing the ground for the breaching batteries, and on the 4th of September above thirty pieces of heavy ordnance, with ample supplies of ammunition, arrived in camp. From this date until that of the grand assault reinforcements were continually pouring in. Europeans, Cashmerians, and Sikhs, followed one another in rapid succession, until at last an army of respectable magnitude was encamped before the long-beleaguered city. Strange to say, the enemy made no attempt to disturb the men while constructing the first parallel, nor once fired upon them until their labours were completed and the guns in position. It is said, indeed, that their attention was diverted by a heavy fire from the ridge, and that the first intimation they received of the existence of this new battery of ten guns, was in the shape of a huge missile. They then opened upon it from the bastions; but it was already too late: the distance from the walls was only 650 yards. This battery was known as Brind's, and was mainly instrumental in silencing the Cashmere and Moree bastions. All the batteries were completed by the night of the 10th, one of them being within 400 yards of the curtain. On the morning of the 11th, the cannonading commenced with a salvo of nine 24-pounders, which immediately brought down large fragments of masonry. The second battery opened soon afterwards, knocking to pieces the curtain between the Cashmere and Water bastions. Next morning the third battery came into play, and from that moment until the morning of the 14th, fifty heavy guns and mortars poured an incessant storm of shot and shell upon the walls and city. The rebels, however, stood bravely by their crumbling walls, keeping up a continuous roll of musketry. At night of the 13th, the engineers reported two practicable breaches near the Cashmere and Water bastions, and arrangements were made for an assault at daybreak of the 14th.

The attack was made by four columns, with a fifth one in reserve. The first was commanded by Brigadier-General Nicholson, and consisted of H.M.'s 75th, the 1st Bengal Fusiliers, and 2nd Punjab infantry. The second was under Brigadier Jones, C.B., and included H.M.'s 8th and 61st regiments, and the 4th Sikh infantry. The third, consisting of H.M.'s 52nd, the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers, and 1st Punjab infantry, was under the command of Colonel Campbell. The fourth, under Major Reid, was made up of detachments of European regiments,—the Sirmoor battalion of Ghoorkas, the Guide infantry, and the Cashmerian levies. Brigadier Longfield commanded the reserve, which was composed of H.M.'s 60th Rifles, the Kumaon battalion of Ghoorkas, and the 4th Punjab infantry. The fourth column was the first to advance. It was directed against the Kishengunge and Pahareepore suburbs, but probably was merely intended to make a diversion in favour of the real attacks. This, at least, was all it succeeded in doing; for, notwithstanding the gallantry displayed by the Ghoorkas, it failed to dislodge the enemy. The three other columns were more successful. Up to the moment of their advance into "the open," the batteries kept up a tremendous fire, and swept the wall of its defenders. The Rifles were the first to rush forward, skirmishing along the front. The first column was under orders to storm the breach near the Cashmere bastion, the second that in the Water bastion, and the third to assault by the Cashmere gate so soon as it should be blown open. With a fierce exultant shout, the first and second dashed onward, scrambled into the ditch, applied their ladders to the scarp of the wall, and swarmed up into the breach under a murderous fire of musketry. General Nicholson quickly effected a lodgment in the main-guard, and swept the ramparts as far as the Moree bastion. Brigadier Jones also made good his hold of the Water bastion, and proceeded to give the hand to the other columns; the third likewise having poured into the city through the Cashmere gate. The blowing open that gate was the most perilous exploit of the day. The explosion party, under Lieutenants Home and Salkeld, was composed of Sergeant John Smith, Sergeant A. B. Carmichael, and Corporal F. Burgess, all of the Sappers and Miners; Bugler Hawthorne, H.M.'s 52nd foot, and twenty-four nativesappers and miners. As the foremost hastily advanced with the powder-bags, the rebels partially opened the wicket, and fired at them from under secure shelter. The bags, nevertheless, were attached to the iron spikes with which the gate was studded. Sergeant Carmichael was the first slain, as he laid the train; Lieutenant Salkeld then stepped forward to fire it, but was shot in the arm and leg, and fell into the ditch. As he was falling, however, he threw the match to

Corporal Burgess, who was mortally wounded, but not before he had accomplished the dangerous feat. One of the natives also was killed, and two were wounded. Lieut. Home then made the bugle sound the advance three times. The column obeyed the call, and springing forward with a British cheer, rushed through the ruined gateway, trampling under-foot some twenty of the rebels who had been killed by the explosion. The first spectacle that met their eyes was the dead body of a European chained to a stake, at which he had evidently been roasted to death. Three other Europeans had been crucified, and an English gentlewoman, stripped stark naked and covered with sores, was chained to the bastion, gibbering and shrieking, a hopeless, helpless maniac. Nothing could withstand the fury of their onslaught. The church, the college, and Skinner's House, were soon in their possession; but as they diverged into the narrow streets, their progress was checked by double discharges of grape-shot from pieces of heavy artillery placed to bear upon every avenue. It was in cheering on his men to make a second rush at a gun that the heroic Nicholson received his mortal wound. Nor was this the most formidable danger the brave fellows encountered on that eventful day. With bitter sarcasm, the insurgents had placed quantities of beer, champagne, and brandy, in tempting propinquity. The men, maddened by thirst and excitement, succumbed without a struggle; and, from being heroes, were degraded to a drunken rabble. Their officers, however, finally succeeded, by almost superhuman exertions, in bringing them back to their ranks; though not before very many had fallen victims to their own folly. That night "St. George's banner, broad and gay," waved over the Cashmere gate, and head-quarters were established in Skinner's House. The next day was consumed in making good this position, and in battering the outer wall of the Magazine, in which a practicable breach was effected before sunset. At dawn of the following morning, a detachment of the 61st suddenly sprang forward with a ringing shout, and the terror-stricken artillerymen threw down their lighted portfires, and fled without discharging a single shot: six heavy guns, loaded with grape, frowned upon the breach. On the 17th, the Bank and its extensive gardens, together with the Jumma Musjid, fell into the hands of the victors, and guns were placed to bear upon the palace and the bridge of boats. Two hundred and six pieces of ordnance, besides a vast supply of ammunition, were the prize of conquest; and an immense amount of plunder was being gathered together. It was not, however, until the 20th that the city and palace were entirely evacuated by the enemy, and Delhi became the undisputed trophy of British pluck, perseverance, and prowess. On the following day, General Wilson and his gallant comrades pledged the health of our Sovereign Lady the Queen in the famous Dewan-i-Khas, and loud and prolonged cheering proclaimed the re-establishment of British supremacy. The aged monarch and his insensate sons had fled for refuge to Hoomayoon's tomb, where they were discovered and arrested by Capt. Hodson, at the head of a handful of troopers. His hoary head, though not found in the paths of righteousness, was duly revered, but the princes were led out and shot, and their dead bodies exposed to public gaze. In all, four sons and a grandson were put to death, and even the sanctity of four-score years and ten is deemed insufficient to spare the weak old man the degradation of a trial. It is thus that the most conservative people on the face of the earth break through and trample under-foot the divinity that hedgeth in royalty. Thus, too, expires the dynasty of Timour. Having lived by the sword, the foul race has perished by the sword. The earth has been sickened by the innocent blood that has been shed—the heavens have waxed wrath through the deeds of lust, rapine, and cruelty that have been perpetrated in broad daylight.

INDIA AND ITS ARMY.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—The editorial remarks contained in your number of the 16th inst., in reference to the desirableness of dividing British India into two Presidencies, have opened a question well worthy of attention.

As the opinions you have therein expressed have no inconsiderable bearing on those contained in the observations I addressed to you in your number of the 31st August last, regarding the re-constitution of the Bengal army, I am induced to add a few remarks on the subject.

In the view of the question taken by you, there can, I think, be little doubt that the formation of one army instead of three, or even of two, would be the plan best calculated to admit of such a distribution of the Native forces as would offer a check to mutiny or insubordination.

Your suggestion for the gathering together "an army recruited from all races and tongues,—Hindoos, Mahomedans, Panjabees, Sikhs, Beloochees, and Bheels," is precisely in accordance with that which I ventured to make in the letter referred to; and I am rejoiced to find that your powerful advocacy is directed to the promotion of a plan that has many elements of success, and one that deserves, and ought to receive, a dispassionate consideration.

Before seeking to remedy an evil, it is no doubt desirable to discover its origin; but the mystery that envelopes the mutiny as yet baffles all investigation,—and it is as much a matter of doubt as the day of the first outbreak, whether the trumpery cartridge question be indeed the real source of the massacres, or whether the spirits of Nadir Shah, Aurungzebe, and Tippoo Saib are animating their descendants to throw off the yoke of the detested "Feringhee."

In whatever way time may hereafter solve the doubt, our present duty is to adopt such measures as may appear best calculated to make a similar outbreak hereafter, humanly speaking, impossible.

Among the many suggestions submitted through the daily press for the better organization of the Indian army, I have yet seen none that appear to me to offer the facilities or the safeguards presented by the scheme for the amalgamation of the three armies into one, and the admixture in its materiel of all that at first sight appears incongruous and inconsistent—opposite sects, rival tribes, dissimilar castes, and foreign tongues.

Those who have never been in India call for a European army, not only to quell the mutiny, but to maintain our supremacy when it is again re-established, and are loud in their denunciations of the East India Company, from whom they would at once wrest the reins of government, placing the whole power and patronage in the hands of her Majesty's Ministers, and raising a second royal army to garrison our Eastern possessions. "Her Majesty's Opposition" has indeed sadly deteriorated from its salutary vigilance since the days of Fox and Pitt, if such a result can be easily achieved!

The substitution of an European army to replace exclusively the one just dispersed is, however, as anyone acquainted with the climate of India must know, an impossibility.

That a large proportion of European troops is imperatively called for, and that the proportion hitherto allowed has been much below the requisite standard, are positions which few will be found to dispute; but there is a wide difference between having a strong European element in the constitution of the Indian army and having it exclusively composed of soldiers who, in addition to their inaptitude as a class for general service under a tropical sun, can only be transplanted to the soil at a cost too ruinous to be encountered. It is a well-known fact that each of the Company's European soldiers landed in India costs them 100*l.*! The late Bengal army, for which a substitute must be found, numbered some 140,000 men of all arms, regular and irregular.

It is true that Her Majesty's regiments serving in India have ever done their duty nobly,—it is equally true that the Company's European regiments have always vied with them in valour and efficiency; but it is also no less true that both are under the special protection of the quartermaster-general, and that they have the pick of the healthiest stations in India, due regard being always had in the distribution of the European portion of the army to considerations of climate.

There are many stations in India to which it would be insanity to send a European corps for permanent duty, and there are many duties at most stations for which the European soldier is wholly unfitted by health or habits. The native sepoy can mount guard where no European soldier could show his nose!

In time of war—on a march, or before an enemy—there is neither hardship nor danger that the European soldier is not prepared to face at the call of duty. Exposure to the rigours of the climate on such occasions, however, forms the exception, and not the daily practice of his service; and the exigency which rendered such exposure necessary being once passed, he returns to the luxuries which every European soldier may be said to enjoy in India. The casualties in an Indian army in the field are not always classified with scrupulous exactitude, and once before the enemy, it matters little whether the sword or the sun be the "messenger of death." In garrison or cantonments it is, however, far different, and the half-yearly rolls of casualties from the adjutant-general's department in peace time would soon show at what a cost of life and treasure our Indian empire could alone be exclusively maintained by European bayonets. The absurdity, however, of a scheme for substituting an English for a native army, is too patent to justify much discussion.

Two things are necessary in the constitution of the army.

1st. The material of which it is formed should be such that all unity of action among the various classes composing it should, for purposes hostile to the interests of the state, be effectually guarded against,—it should in fact consist of elements so opposite in their nature, and so antagonistic in their sympathies, as to render any amalgamation for mutinous purposes highly improbable.

2nd. The army should, when so formed, be distributed with judgment, in such manner as by its presence to offer the best security against disaffection on the part of the people. It should be as far as possible a foreign army, in a foreign territory.

The expediency of enforcing the first of these points is shown by the course of the mutiny. Had the interests of the mutineers been less identical, or their feelings less in unison, the spread of disaffection had been far less rapid.

That the second point is of the highest importance is also shown by recent events. Had the people of India generally, with a mutinous army at their back, made common cause with the troops, like the population of Oude, what would now be our hold of India, and who of the European community would have survived to tell the tale of our disasters?

I have in my former letter alluded to Austria as affording a precedent worthy of imitation, by the judicious manner in which an army composed of Germans, Italians, Bohemians, Croats, Magyars, and Poles, is distributed throughout her tessellated territory; and the analogy between our Indian possessions and the outlying provinces belonging to Austria is in no way forced. The variety of creed and diversity of language which are to be found among the Hindoos, Mahomedans, Punjabees, Sikhs, Beloochees, and Bheels of the East, will readily find a parallel among the "oppressed nationalities" of the North and South.

The practicability of the plan I advocate may be said to be already partially proved by the staunch loyalty displayed by some of the Sikh and Ghoorka corps at the present crisis, when acting in distant provinces, and by their readiness to march against the rebels. The success which has attended the substitution, by the late Sir C. Napier, of the Ghoorka regiment for the 66th Native Infantry, disbanded by him with such fearless decision, is also strong evidence of its feasibility. That regiment has stood to its colours when all around were false.

The address of Sir John Lawrence to the Hindustanee Sepoys in the Punjab, on the 1st of June, shows how entirely that officer relies for the maintenance of the British rule in India on the power possessed by us to raise a foreign native force that would have little sympathy with the mutineers; and with such high authority in support of my views, I feel I need no excuse for urging them on your attention.

I remain, Sir, your obedient Servant,

Nov. 25, 1857.

THE NEW MAIL COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.

According to the new regulations for the improved mail communication with India, mails will be made up in the General Post-office for Bombay, viâ Marseilles, on the 2nd and 17th of the month, and for Calcutta, viâ Marseilles, on the 9th and 25th of the month. The packet will leave Bombay with mails for London, viâ Marseilles, on the 9th and 24th of the month; and from Calcutta, with mails for London, viâ Marseilles, on the 8th and 22nd of the month. The Mediterranean packets will leave Alexandria for Marseilles with the Indian mails on the 7th, 11th, 22nd, and 27th of the month, and arrive at Marseilles on the 2nd, 12th, 16th, and 27th, and such mails will reach London on the 4th, 14th, 18th, and 29th of the month. The mail will reach Bombay from London, viâ Marseilles, in twenty-six days, and Calcutta from London, viâ Marseilles, in thirty-six days. Nearly the same periods of time respectively will be occupied in the mails reaching London, viâ Marseilles, from Bombay and Calcutta. The new arrangements will commence at Bombay on the 24th proximo. The Calcutta packets will touch at Kedgerie on the homeward passage. There can be no doubt that the Trieste steamers will run in connection with each arrival at Alexandria, and according to the present speed of those steamers, we should get telegrams of Indian news from Trieste on the 1st, 12th, 16th, and 27th of the month. But as the telegrams of Indian news, viâ Marseilles, will reach us on the 2nd, 12th, 26th, and 27th, the former telegrams will often be superseded, unless the speed of the Trieste boats is improved. When the telegraphic communication between Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay is uninterrupted, we shall have telegraphic news from all parts of India by every arrival at Marseilles, that is, four times a month—viz., on the 2nd, 12th, 16th, and 27th of the month, as before stated. This news will be alternately twenty-four and thirty-four days old. The only additional work which will devolve on the Peninsular and Oriental Company, in consequence of this modification of their contract, will be the running of a steamer to and from Alexandria and Marseilles viâ Malta four times a month instead of twice, and the calling at Kedgerie from Calcutta. According to the old contract the packets left Bombay on the 3rd and 17th of the month, and Calcutta on the 10th and 24th of the month. It was arranged for the 3rd and 24th boats to arrive together at Suez, and for the 10th and 17th boats to arrive at that port also at the same time. Calcutta being nearly 2,000 miles further from Suez than Bombay, this difference of time in leaving the two Indian ports was absolutely necessary, in order to time the two packets together at Suez. But to carry out the new arrangements and bring the Bombay and Calcutta packets to Suez at different times, it is necessary to despatch the packets from the two Indian ports almost at the same time. Thus, instead of leaving Bombay or Calcutta on the 3rd, 10th, 17th, and 24th of the month, as has hitherto been the case, by which a week intervenes conveniently between each departure, the packets will for the future have to leave Bombay or Calcutta on the 8th, 9th, 22nd, and 24th of the month, as has been before observed. Now, these are certainly not such convenient times for departure from the Indian ports as the former ones, especially considering that Calcutta can be united by telegraph to Bombay; but there is no help for it. A disadvantage of the old plan was, that the packets, owing to the length of the sea route, the difference in the speed of the steamers, and casualties, scarcely ever arrived at Suez together; and then one mail was kept waiting for the other at Alexandria. The advantage of the new plan is, that as soon as a mail arrives at Alexandria, no matter whether it is from Bombay or Calcutta, it will be immediately sent off to Marseilles. It will be seen from the above statement that there will be only two mail packets a month to and from Suez and Bombay, and two to and from Suez and Calcutta, the same as at present. There will also be only two communications a month for the present to and from Southampton and Alexandria, and to and from Point de Galle and Hong-Kong. The following are the mail route tables, according to the new arrangements, viz.:—

OUTWARD INDIA MAILS.

Bombay Despatch.—Leaves London on the 2nd and 17th of the month. Arrives at Marseilles 4th and 19th ditto; at Malta, 7th and 22nd ditto; at Alexandria, 10th and 25th ditto; at Suez, 12th and 27th ditto; at Aden, 18th and 3rd ditto; at Bombay, 28th and 12th ditto.

Calcutta Despatch.—Leaves London on the 9th and 25th of the month. Arrives at Marseilles 11th and 27th ditto; and Malta, 15th and 31st ditto; at Alexandria, 17th and 2nd ditto; at Suez, 20th and 5th ditto; at Aden, 26th and 12th ditto; at Galle, 7th and 23rd ditto; at Madras, 11th and 27th ditto; at Calcutta, 14th and 30th ditto.

HOMEWARD INDIA MAIL.

Bombay Despatch.—Leaves Bombay on the 9th and 24th of the month. Arrives at Aden 18th and 2nd ditto; at Suez 24th and 8th ditto; at Alexandria, 27th and 11th ditto; at Malta, 30th and 14th ditto; at Marseilles, 2nd and 16th ditto; at London, 4th and 18th ditto.

Calcutta Despatch.—Leaves Calcutta on the 8th and 22nd of the month. Arrives at Kedgerie 10th and 24th ditto; at Madras, 13th and 24th ditto; at Galle, 17th and 2nd ditto; at Aden, 28th and 13th ditto; at Suez, 5th and 12th ditto; at Alexandria, 7th and 22nd ditto; at Malta, 19th and 25th ditto; at Marseilles, 12th and 27th ditto; at London, 14th and 29th ditto.—Examiner.

THE SIAMESE AMBASSADORS.

WINDSOR, Nov. 19.—Her Majesty the Queen held this day a Court for the reception of the ambassadors from the Kings of Siam. The ambassadors arrived at Windsor Castle shortly before one o'clock, attended by Mr. Fowle and Captain Clavering, R.N. Phya Mantri Suriywanse and Chau Mun Serbbedh Bhacry were the representatives of the First or Major King of Siam. Cha-mun Mondir Bidacks was the representative of the Second King of Siam. Their Excellencies were passed up the grand staircase and into the guard-chamber (which were lined by the Yeomen of the Guard under the command of Captain Morton Herbert, the Exon in Waiting), and were conducted into the tapestry-room. Soon after one o'clock the Queen was conducted by the Lord Steward and the other officers of State to the Throne-room. Her Majesty was accompanied by his Royal Highness the Prince Consort and her Royal Highness the Princess Royal, and was attended by the Duchess of Atholl and Lady Caroline Barrington, Ladies in Waiting, and the Gentlemen in Waiting. His Royal Highness Prince William of Prussia, attended by the gentlemen of his suite, was present at the reception in the Throne-room. The earl of Clarendon, K.G., the Queen's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, stood in attendance near her Majesty at the audience. Phya Mantri Suriywanse, one of the representatives of the First or Major King of Siam, bore autograph letters from the kings, written in gold. The presents from the two kings of Siam to her Majesty the Queen were arranged on either side of the room. They comprised an eastern crown of gold and enamel, enriched with diamonds, emeralds, and rubies,—a gold collar, thickly studded with rubies,—a large star,—a massive ring, set with diamonds, and a variety of precious stones,—a golden belt, enriched with rubies,—a chair of state or throne,—a rare and valuable white shell, having a number of jewels inserted,—a cup and saucer of agate,—a state palanquin,—a state saddle and bridle,—a number of umbrellas covered with gold embroidery,—boxes and cups of solid gold,—silver salvers with gilt embossed edges; a metal drum, and a variety of other articles of rarity and curious workmanship, together with a painting of the court of the Kings of Siam. The ambassadors having been introduced, the first ambassador delivered the address, to which her Majesty was pleased to return a most gracious answer. At the termination of the audience their Excellencies returned to St. George's-hall, and were afterwards ushered into the Waterloo Gallery, where luncheon was served. A guard of honour of the Scots Fusilier Guards mounted guard in the quadrangle of the castle. The band of the regiment played the national anthem as the Queen entered the Audience-room. The guard of honour remained at the castle during the stay of the visitors, the band and Scotch pipers playing alternately, until the former took their departure, which was at three o'clock. On arriving at the station, and before entering the state carriages, they all lighted their cigars, in defiance of the rule "No smoking allowed," and one of them laughed and bowed to the ladies, who, through the courtesy of Mr. Salter, were admitted to the platform.

THE INDIAN GENERALS.

WAR-OFFICE, Nov. 11.—The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of Sir John Laird Mair Lawrence, K.C.B., chief commissioner and agent to the Governor-General of India for the affairs of the Punjab, to be an Ordinary Member of the Civil Division of the First Class, or Knights Grand Cross of the Most Hon. Order of the Bath; and of Major-General Henry Havelock, C.B., to be an Ordinary Member of the Military Division of the Second Class, or Knights Commanders of the said Most Hon. Order.

Her Majesty has also been graciously pleased to make and ordain a special statute of the said Most Hon. Order for appointing the following officers to be Extra Members of the Military Division of the Third Class, or Companions of the said Order; viz. :—

Col. Archdale Wilson, of the Bengal art.;
Col. Henry Charles Van Cortlandt, commanding a corps of irregular levies in the East Indies; and Lieut.-Col. Neville Bowles Chamberlain, of the 16th Bengal N.I.

Nov. 14.—The Queen has been graciously pleased to give further orders for the appointment of Col. Archdale Wilson, C.B., of the Bengal art., to be an Ordinary Member of the Military Division of the Second Class, or Knights Commanders of the Most Hon. Order of the Bath. A memorandum added to the Gazette mentions that Colonel James George Neill, of the Madras fusiliers, and Lieut.-Col. John Nicholson, of the 27th Bengal N.I., would have been recommended for the dignity of Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath had they survived.

WHITEHALL, Nov. 26.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto Major-General Archdale Wilson, of Delhi, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Lieut.-Colonel of the Bengal artillery, and to the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten. The Queen has also been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of a baronet of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto Major-General Henry Havelock, of Lucknow, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, and to the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten. The Queen has been pleased to ordain and declare that Isabella Neill, the widow of the late Colonel James George Neill, of the Madras fusiliers, shall have, hold, and enjoy the same style, title, place, and precedence to which she would have been entitled had her husband, who fell in the gallant discharge of his duty in India, survived, and been invested with the insignia of a Knight Commander of the Most Hon. Order of the Bath, for which honour he would have been recommended to her Majesty, as notified in the London Gazette of the 17th instant, had he survived. And also to command that the said royal order and declaration be registered in her Majesty's College of Arms.

DIRECT INFANTRY CADETS.—The following gentlemen passed their examination on the 17th of November:—J. D. Macpherson, W. G. Sharp, N. Alexander, G. Batley, A. D. C. Inglis, and R. Atkins.

ARTILLERY CADETS.—The following gentlemen, having obtained nominations as artillery cadets, passed the required examination on the 12th of Nov.:—R. F. Hammond, A. T. B. Stephenson, J. H. Lloyd, A. T. Wallace, N. D. Garratt, W. H. Wilkins, H. H. Murray, W. A. Liot, T. A. C. A. Studdy, A. R. T. Chilton, E. G. Battiscombe, C. E. Pritchard, H. L. Armstrong, T. H. Ochterlony, G. H. W. Ewbank.

THE BOMBAY MEDICAL RETIRING FUND.—Much dissatisfaction has been expressed in this country at the reduction of the annuities which have hitherto been allowed by this fund. Without expressing any opinion upon the merits of the question, we cannot but think that notice should at least have been given to the present annuitants to have enabled them to provide as far as possible against the difficulties entailed by reduced incomes.—Home News.

LADY NEILL.—The widow of General Neill has been allowed, by the Hon. Court of Directors, a pension of 500*l.* in lieu of the usual Compassionate Grant, which, in her case, would have amounted to an annuity of 120*l.*, and a gratuity of one year's pay of her late husband's regimental rank. It is presumed that the children will have the usual grant of 20*l.* per annum, and one-third of a year's pay each; but nothing positive has been determined.

GEN. SIR A. WILSON.—In recognition of the brilliant services of this officer, we believe it is the intention of the Hon. Court to confer upon him a pension of 1,000*l.* per annum. Sir H. Havelock's claims will doubtless receive due consideration; but as he belongs to her Majesty's service, the duty of rewarding him will devolve upon Parliament, and as soon as practicable the question will be introduced.—Home News.

LIEUT. SALKELD.—At a meeting held at Sturminster Newton, in Dorsetshire, to subscribe to the Indian Relief Fund, the chairman, Mr. Ker Seymour, M.P. remarked that a Dorsetshire man was the hero in the assault on Delhi. There could be no question that of all the men who so signally distinguished themselves on that memorable occasion, Lieut. Salkeld was the first to enter the city. Lieut. Salkeld, the son of a neighbour of his (the chairman), was called upon, with the rest of the body of engineers, to perform the most arduous duty ever undertaken: they were to go in broad daylight across a plain exposed to a most tremendous fire of musketry, to blow up one of the gates of that city. Almost every one engaged in the work was killed or injured. Lieut. Salkeld was first struck with a ball in the arm; he still went on: he was then badly wounded in the leg; then it was he gave up the match to a sergeant to apply to the gunpowder which was to blow up the gate. He had since received, as he deserved to receive on the spot, the Victoria Cross; but the last accounts said that he was still in a precarious state. The Rev. G. F. St. John states that at the taking of Delhi, Philip Salkeld having escaped across the ditch of eighteen feet into which the soldier fell who jumped to save himself from being blown up, then, after he had scaled the wall, heard the cry of women; instantly he went back, saved the women, and it was into that very ditch he fell, being wounded by a ball. He afterwards was stripped of his clothes by a marauding party, and had not a single farthing left to bring him back to England to cure him of his wounds.

MAURITIUS.—APPOINTMENTS.—The Queen has appointed L. Céleourt Antelme, Esq. to be a Member of the Council of Government of Mauritius; and T. A. Finimore, esq. to be medical officer at Grand Port, in that island.

COMPASSIONATE FUND.—The children of the late Major Vibart have each been granted the regulated pensions and one-third of a year's pay of their late father's rank. The widow and child of the late Lieut. A. F. English have also been admitted, and to the former one year's pay has been allowed; to the latter one-third of a year's pay in addition to the ordinary pension.—Home News.

Opinions on the Indian Army. By Col. J. S. HODGSON.
Wm. H. Allen and Co.

THE assumed short-sightedness of Indian officers and civilians, and their alleged ignorance of the opinions and feelings of the people among whom they sojourned, have furnished materials for many a jibe and much pointless invective to Radical journalists in this country. It is recklessly asserted that no warning voice was ever raised, no intimation ever afforded of the under-current of discontent concealed beneath a calm and unruffled surface. The Government, we are told, had no reason to suppose that the sepoys, at least, were disaffected; and we are encouraged to draw the natural inference that this imperfect knowledge of the actual state of affairs was due to the culpable reticence or apathy of the subordinate officials, whose duties brought them into frequent and immediate contact with the natives. If these neglected to make known to the higher authorities that a restless and unquiet spirit was gradually pervading the entire army, and endangering the permanence of the British supremacy, it is obvious that on them must rest the moral responsibility of the frightful massacres that have recently been perpetrated. Had the Government been duly advised that for years past the sepoy has been degenerating into a mere hireling, actuated alone by greed, and dissatisfied with his lot, it seemed incredible that no precautions should have been taken to avert the impending evil, either by restoring the debased tone of the native soldier, or by strengthening the reliable portion of the army so as to overawe and control the evil-disposed; but as no preventive measures were adopted, it was fair to suppose that the perilous position of the British in India had been concealed by those who could not fail to be acquainted with the fact. The inference was logical, but the premises were unsound. It is certain that many officers, employed in different capacities and at various points of the empire, have for years past admonished the Government and the public that unless a radical reform was introduced into the native army, a terrible catastrophe was at hand. Among the ablest writers in that strain was Brigadier Hodgson, the organizer of the Punjab Irregular Force. So far back as the year 1850, that distinguished officer published a series of letters in an Indian journal, under the modest title of "Musings on Military Matters," in which the urgency of a large and liberal reform was insisted upon with emphatic earnestness. The debasing effects of idleness and want of employment were clearly pointed out, and the fatal consequences predicted of over-indulging and petting the sepoys. Valuable suggestions were thrown out for the re-organization of the native army, which have since been revived and appropriated by unscrupulous pamphleteers; and much excellent advice was given to regimental officers, the neglect of which may have contributed to the fury of the present outbreak. Indeed, a very high authority on Indian matters has expressed his opinion that a careful study of Col. Hodgson's "Musings" would be more serviceable to a young officer than that of the many Manuals of Instruction which are now placed in his hands as model textbooks. In another quarter an equally unmistakable compliment has been paid to the soundness of the brigadier's views, though it might have been enhanced by the acknowledgment of their appropriation. It will be seen, on the most casual comparison, that a pamphlet, bearing on its title-page the name of the Honourable Member for Weymouth, but which is usually attributed to the pen of a professional scribe, is in fact nothing more than a slightly varied edition of Col. Hodgson's "Musings." The present work embodies the substance of the letters written in 1850, together with additional suggestions arising out of the existing crisis. The Appendix also contains a paper on the amalgamation of Sikhs and Punjabees with the regular army, which will be read with great interest by all who take thought for the future constitution of the native army.

We have space only for one extract. The author is insisting on the necessity of employing the sepoys in time of peace on works of public utility:—

"A very erroneous idea obtains currency, that the Hindoo sepahce could object, with a show of justice, that it would be derogatory and contrary to his religion to obey such a requisition. Never was there a greater fallacy, or one better known to the sepahce himself. Does he not, in contempt of religious bigotry, wear the regimental cross shoulder-belts of bullock-hide, which, when saturated with rain or perspiration, impregnate his body with the very essence of bullock-hide? More than this, does he not know, when he dons the British uniform, and in the process of loading bites off the end of his cartridge, that that very cartridge (the paper of which is manufactured from the vilest rags) is made in the magazines of the State by the hands of the lowest castes in the scale of Hindoo creation, and whose very proximity is pollution? He does know it, and yet, like a sensible man, he still continues to perform this little feat of dental dexterity, and to appear at his post on pay day with a very commendable and rigid punctuality. Does he not follow the corpse of his European officer to its last resting-place, and even on some occasions, when the departed was respected and beloved, volunteer to carry it? Though to attend any funeral rites constitutes an obligatory act of three days' fasting and purifications by the Dhurum Shastar, or Hindoo moral and social formulary. * * * It may appear ungracious to say so, but I have long been of opinion that it is the European officer himself who has mainly contributed to foster this false pride of caste frequently affected by some sepahces. Instead of endeavouring to elevate the mind and character of the native soldier to a British standard of manliness, the officer too often yields to his ridiculous vagaries and unjustifiable scruples, erroneously conceiving that they are the peculiarities and privileges of race. Whereas that which some officers are apt to view as a decided evidence of high caste, is merely the palpable betrayal of a lazy, ungrateful, and ignoble disposition; indeed, the lower the caste the greater the fastidiousness simulated on such occasions."

We have no hesitation in recommending Col. Hodgson's "Opinions" to the serious consideration of all who are interested in the stability and duration of the British empire in the East. From his lengthened and manifold experience, he is enabled to offer the most valuable suggestions for the future, and to warn the ignorant or incautious of the treacherous rocks that lie close beneath the surface.

Memorandum on the Mutiny of the Bengal Native Army. By Lieut.-Col. A. S. WAUGH.

THIS minute, but excellent, pamphlet by the surveyor-general of India is a reprint from the columns of the Montrose Standard. The causes of the mutiny are stated to be eleven in number, and are thus described:—

- "1st. The want of sufficient European force to awe and control the native army—to command its respect—and to enforce true discipline.
- "2nd. Neglect of all precautions to secure our magazines and arms.
- "3rd. The want of citadels and small forts in which a small European garrison could hold out and protect magazines, treasure, women and children, records and supplies, whereby the bulk of the European troops might be left free to take the field.
- "4th. The fatal abandonment of the old policy, insisted on in former days by the Court of Directors, viz., of keeping our artillery entirely in European hands.
- "5th. The overgrown size of the Bengal native army, and its homogeneous character and constitution, rendering it peculiarly liable to be actuated by the same influence and inspired by one spirit, whether for good or for evil, and therefore peculiarly formidable from its size.
- "6th. The abuse of the system of centralization, which is the true cause of the decadence of nations.
- "7th. The system of appointing commanders-in-chief and general officers of little English and no Indian experience, and further incapacitated by age.
- "8th. The staff system, which makes regimental duty not a proper object of pride and ambition.
- "9th. The native-officer system, which will only work well under a few European officers, thereby rendering all the rest redundant and idle, and leaving the management of companies entirely in the hands of natives.
- "10th. Sending raw, untrained lads as officers to native regiments, without any previous military knowledge, training, or true feeling of discipline.
- "11th. The want of a detective military police, and of efficient police generally."

Starting with these propositions, Col. Waugh proceeds to make some useful suggestions, and to advocate the re-organization of the Indian army on a wider and more practical basis than heretofore. His views appear to be generally wise and judicious, especially on the subject of introducing a paper currency. There can be no doubt that it would greatly tend to strengthen the British position in India, by interesting the entire population in the preservation of internal peace and tranquillity.

A Popular Account of the Thugs and Dacoits, the Hereditary Garotters and Gang-Robbers of India. By JAMES HUTTON.
Wm. H. Allen and Co.

THE popular notion of the mildness of the Hindoo character was, even previous to the recent massacres, so utterly fallacious, that it is strange how it could ever have originated. It is almost incredible that the cringing servility of the race should have been mistaken for real gentleness of disposition. It certainly appears to be an extraordinary confusion of ideas, when we remember that, for upwards of two centuries, thousands of professional murderers lived and flourished in the most settled provinces of Hindostan, and brought up their children to the same horrible traffic in blood. At the same time, small armies of hereditary robbers were wont to sally forth in small parties from their forest strongholds, rendezvous in the streets of a populous city, plunder the house of some opulent banker or tradesman, and hasten off with their booty before the terrified neighbours could be roused to arms. Both of these strange brotherhoods invoked the aid of heaven before committing their most nefarious deeds. Both were guided by omens and "voices of the night," and considered themselves under the especial protection of the great goddess Bhovane. The Thugs were particularly strict in their observance of the outward forms of religion, and are described as mild, peaceable, inoffensive villagers, unimpeachable in their domestic relations, and respected rather than feared by the people of the district in which they lived. They themselves would have shrunk with horror from an ordinary murder. It was only when the will of the goddess was manifested by certain signs that they took the life of the unsuspecting travellers whom she had placed in their power for that express purpose. If the sign was withheld, there was no danger even for the wealthy and unarmed. Their religious ceremonies were trivial, and void of all solemnity, except in being the certain prelude to wholesale murder. There were Thugs who had been present at hundreds of murders. The Dacoits, on the other hand, avoided bloodshed unless in self-defence, and complacently spoke of their lawless calling as an "imperial trade." The religious and social institutions of these two specimens of the "gentle Hindoo" are described by Mr. Hutton on the authority of official records, and afford a curious insight into human character. It is, of course, impossible, in the limited space accorded to literature in these columns, to give even an outline of their chief characteristics, for which we must refer our readers to the little volume itself; but the following extract will suffice to illustrate the systematic manner in which the Thugs fulfilled their vocation:—

"They preferred committing murder in the evening, when the travellers would be seated on the ground, mingled with themselves, talking, smoking, singing, and playing the sitar. When it could be done without suspicion, three Thugs were allotted to every victim. So soon as the fatal signal was given, one seized hold of his hands, the second grasped his legs and held him down, while the strangler tightened the roomal (handkerchief) round his neck, and only relaxed the strain when life was extinct. Then the bearers of the daggers slashed the dead bodies, the grave-diggers quickly excavated a deep trench, the corpses were stripped and thrown in, the earth was hastily shovelled in and trampled down, and in an incredibly short space of time all traces were completely effaced of the terrible tragedy. When the ground was too hard to admit of a grave being dug, or any other cause intervened to prevent the burial, the bodies were flung into a ravine, or well, or water-course, or were concealed in the jungle. Not unfrequently it happened that no convenient opportunity was presented for murdering the travellers while seated. In that case an experienced Thug would be sent forward to select a beyl, or suitable spot, on arriving at which, if the scouts reported a clear coast, the gang would close upon their unsuspecting companions, and speedily put them to death. It was more difficult when the travellers were mounted, though the fleetest charger could not avail to save his rider. A horseman was always attacked by three men; one walked at his horse's head, a second a little way in the rear, and a third by his side, pleasantly conversing with him until the signal was given, when he suddenly dragged him out of the saddle, and, with the assistance of his comrade, strangled him before he could recover his self-possession. It was thought a subject for just pride when a Thug pulled a traveller from his horse and murdered him without aid. Such an exploit was a patent of nobility, and conferred credit upon the third and fourth generation."

Review of the Measures which have been adopted in India for the improved Culture of Cotton. By J. FORBES ROYLE, M.D., F.R.S. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE high price of American cotton and the occasional uncertainty of its supply have naturally induced the manufacturers of Lancashire to turn their attention to the possibility of drawing their raw materials from the native land of the cotton-plant. The indigenous article, however, being found unsuitable for the purposes of home manufacture, various experiments were instituted with a view to promote the growth of American cotton in India. The result has so far disappointed general expectation, though it would be premature to despair of ultimate success. The climate appears to be unfavourable, except in a few districts; but even in these the cotton of India is inferior in softness and length of staple to that of America. On the other hand, it can be produced at so much less expense, that it can be delivered in Liverpool, at a fair profit, for 3½d. per lb. A pound of Surat cotton, however, yields only 12 oz. of yarn, while from the same quantity of American 13½ oz. are obtained; and the waste on the latter is exactly one-half that of the former. The Indian cotton has, therefore, no chance of competing with its western rival, save only when the price rules unusually high. This uncertainty of sale has exercised a most prejudicial influence on the quality of the article. The merchant at Bombay has no inducement to devote much consideration to the selection of his shipments, when he knows that an inferior article has precisely the same chance of being sold as a superior and higher-priced one. In like manner the middleman gives little thought to the cleanness of the cotton-wool he purchases from the cultivators, and even increases its adulteration by the intermixture of seed, sand, or salt, to add to its weight. The poor ryot is naturally the most heedless of all, and takes no pains to preserve the wool clear of leaves and dirt; and yet freedom from impurities is indispensable to its worth in the home markets. The only remedy appears to be the employment of machinery under European superintendence, and of commissioned agents to travel through the country and purchase directly from the producers. By this means any quantity of cotton, sufficiently good for ordinary purposes, may be regularly supplied to our English manufacturers.

The Sepoy Rebellion. Reprinted from the London Quarterly Review, No. XVII. Alexander Heylin.

THIS article contains an admirable bird's-eye view of Hindostan, together with some interesting extracts from Arthur's Mission to the Mysore, on the subject of caste. The causes of the mutiny and its chief incidents are told with considerable power; but the narrative is in many places disfigured by an acerbity of expression calculated to lessen confidence in the writer's impartiality. Indeed he hardly professes to be unbiassed, and much of his invective is suggestive of a diseased liver. These blemishes apart, the article will amply repay the trouble of perusal.

Outram and Havelock's Persian Campaign. By Capt. G. H. HUNT, 78th Highlanders. With a Summary of Persian History. By GEORGE TOWNSEND. G. Routledge and Co.

A MELANCHOLY interest attaches itself to this simple but lucid narrative of the late Persian expedition. Its gallant and accomplished author has since succumbed to cholera, while marching under General Havelock to the relief of Lucknow. Independently, however, of this recommendation to the sympathies of the British public, Capt. Hunt's manly and unaffected story of the Persian campaign is entitled, by its intrinsic merits, to a large popularity. His pencil, likewise, has been called in to the aid of his pen, and thus we are enabled to form a more correct notion of the various scenes which are described in the letter-press. Nor is it the campaign alone that Capt. Hunt has illustrated. On the conclusion of the armistice he visited the once famous city of Bagdad, and gathered many interesting notes on the social characteristics of the Persians. As if this were not sufficient to render this agreeable volume a necessary addition to every family library, it has been enriched with a particularly clear and useful summary of Persian history, from the pen of Mr. George Townsend, together with a succinct narrative of the political relations of the Court of Tehran with that of St. James's. In short, the public is indebted to Messrs. Routledge and Co. for the most intelligible compendium of all that relates to Persia that has ever yet been published.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS, with QUINQUENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE of PREMIUM without participation of profits.

The next division of profits will be declared in June, 1860, when all participating policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1859, will be allowed to share in the profits.

At the five divisions of profits made by this Company, the total reversionary bonuses added to the policies have exceeded 913,000*l*.

At the last valuation, at Christmas, 1854, the assurances in force amounted to upwards of 4,240,000*l*., the income from the Life branch in 1854 was more than 200,000*l*., and the Life Assurance Fund (independent of the guarantee capital) exceeded 1,700,000*l*.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The extra premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their lives at the tabular premiums, may have their lives insured at extra premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50*l*.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES.—Written notices of, received and registered.

MEDICAL FEES paid by the Company, and no charge will be made for policy stamps.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.—Insurances are effected upon every description of property, at moderate rates.

Losses caused by Explosion of Gas are admitted by this Company.

SECRETARY—THOMAS BURNELL, Esq.

THE commercial prospects of this important undertaking, and the official grant of a guaranteed rate of interest on the capital by the Honourable East-India Company, will be seen in the following extracts from official correspondence:—

From W. P. ANDREW, Esq., to Sir JAMES C. MELVILL, K.C.B., &c. &c. &c.
(EXTRACT.)

The distance proposed to be traversed by the steamers, that is from Hydrabad, the upper terminus of the Scinde Railway, to Mooltan, the lower terminus of the Punjaub Railway, is 570 miles.

Providing Five Steamers for three successive years, the prospective expenditure would be as follows, viz.:—

1st year:—Five Steamers, with Ten Supplemental Barges	£72,000
Workshops, Machinery, and River Stations	20,000
		£92,000
2nd year:—Five Steamers, with Ten Supplemental Barges	72,000
3rd year:—Five Steamers, with Ten Supplemental Barges	72,000
		144,000
Contingencies		14,000
Entire Capital for Fifteen Steamers, with Thirty Supplemental Barges and necessary appliances		£250,000

The return of 20 per cent. (mentioned in the Report of the Consulting Engineer) may appear large; but the communications I have had on this subject with Mr. Frere, the Commissioner in Scinde, Major Hamilton, the Commissioner at Mooltan, Colonel Napier, Chief Engineer of the Punjaub, Mr. Temple, late Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of the Punjaub, and other local authorities, lead me to conclude that the pecuniary result cannot but be of a highly favourable character.

(Signed) W. P. ANDREW.

From Sir JAMES C. MELVILL, K.C.B., to W. P. ANDREW, Esq., Chairman of the Scinde Railway Company, &c. &c. &c.
(Extract.)

SIR,—I am commanded to acquaint you that the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, having considered the proposition submitted by the Directors of the Scinde Railway,—for the navigation of the Indus between Kotree (port of Hydrabad), the terminus of the Scinde Railway, and Mooltan, the terminus of the proposed Punjaub Railway—have resolved to allow the Scinde Railway Company to issue Shares, representing a capital of two hundred and fifty thousand pounds (£250,000) for that purpose,—an agreement being entered into between the Company and the East-India Company, upon the same terms as those which are included in the Railway contract.

W. P. Andrew, Esq., &c. &c. &c.

(Signed) JAMES C. MELVILL.

The effect of the contract above alluded to is, that the East-India Company, besides guaranteeing a minimum rate of interest on the capital of 5 per cent. per annum for 99 years, agree to divide equally all net profits exceeding the guaranteed rate of interest, until all advances for interest shall have been repaid, when the entire surplus profits go to the Shareholders.

In the allotment of Shares in the Indus Steam Flotilla, a preference will be given to Shareholders in the Scinde Railway Company.

All applications must be addressed to the Directors on or before the 5th DECEMBER, 1857.

FORM OF APPLICATION FOR SHARES.

TO THE DIRECTORS OF THE SCINDE RAILWAY COMPANY.

I request you will allot me Shares, of £20 each, in the capital of the INDUS STEAM FLOTILLA; and I hereby engage to accept the same, or any less number, and to pay the amount thereof, as and when required by the Directors, and subject to their rules and regulations.

THACKER'S OVERLAND NEWS, FOR INDIA AND THE COLONIES;

A fortnightly Summary of British and Foreign Intelligence, published on the 10th and 26th of each month, in time for despatch to India via Marseilles. A uniform system is preserved throughout the Paper, and the information is so epitomized and arranged as to present a perfect and comprehensive view of the history of the fortnight, with special reference to those subjects most interesting to Anglo-Indians.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

THE CALCUTTA "ENGLISHMAN."

"Pains have been taken with the arrangement. It is evidently got up with a knowledge of what information Indian readers require, and will therefore, we expect, soon attain a considerable circulation."

THE CALCUTTA "DAILY NEWS."

"Fully bears out the assurance given in the prospectus that it should 'be all that the Overland Papers are, and something more.' We do not think that a single item of news or fact of interest which had transpired during the fortnight can possibly have been omitted, and the power of condensation displayed in this Paper is much beyond what we had expected."

"THE MOFUSSILITE."

"It is well written, and carefully compiled. It is not so diffuse in its information as the 'Home News,' and does not reprint long articles from the London journals; but it will probably not be the less acceptable on this account to a large portion of the public."

"BENGAL HURKARU."

"We gladly pronounce this first number an extremely good one, and we think the periodical is full of promise of something still better. The Editor has contrived to condense into a comparatively small space a vast quantity of miscellaneous information, of a character interesting to his readers here. This superior condensation of his materials is perhaps the leading character of the Newspaper,—and a very important one it is, especially for those Indian readers who may receive this one London Paper only."

Orders to be addressed to Messrs. W. THACKER and Co., 87, Newgate Street, London; Messrs. THACKER, SPINK, and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Calcutta; Messrs. THACKER and Co., St. Andrew's Library, Bombay; and Mr. JAMES HILL, Lucknow.

On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectorates, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP OF INDIA;

engaged in preparing Candidates for admission to Haileybury College, RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS under sixteen years of age, to be educated for the Universities, the Public Schools, and Indian Appointments.
Edgware, Middlesex.

TO INDIAN PARENTS AND OTHERS.

THE widow of an Indian Officer will be happy to receive ONE or TWO LITTLE GIRLS to be EDUCATED with her own, for whom she has a Governess. The Children would have the benefit of careful and religious training, and change of air in the Autumn. A Lady with One or Two Children, who would share the same bed-room, not objected to.
Address, X. Y. Z., care of Mr. Edmonds, News Agent, Polygon, Clapham, of whom full particulars may be had.

TO PARENTS IN INDIA AND OTHERS.

THE Wife of a medical man, residing in a healthy village in Buckinghamshire, wishes to take the entire CHARGE of TWO or THREE LITTLE GIRLS, to educate—with the assistance of a resident French Governess—with her own children.
Apply by letter, or personally, to C. C., 42, Bedford Square, London.

TO INDIAN FAMILIES AND OTHERS.

A LADY of highly respectable position in society, residing near the Parks, would be glad to RECEIVE into her family TWO LITTLE BOYS or GIRLS, to be EDUCATED with maternal tenderness and care, and with the most scrupulous attention to their health and morals. Children of colour would not be objected to.

Apply by letter, p.p., to B. C. D., at Lee's Library, 440, Strand.

MRS. O'BRIEN, 20, Buckingham Place, Brighton, RECEIVES a limited number of YOUNG LADIES to BOARD and EDUCATE. She has had great experience in the management of Children from India, and can give satisfactory Reference to Gentlemen (in the Military and Civil Service of the Hon. E. I. Co.) whose daughters are at present under her care. The situation is one of the most salubrious in England.

THE PRINCIPALS of the FRENCH and ENGLISH
MOSLEY EDUCATIONAL ESTABLISHMENT RECEIVE
CHILDREN from a very early age, supplying the place of Parents as far as that relation can be replaced. The situation is excellent, the air pure, and, from being in a pastoral district, they are enabled to supply food of all kinds of the most wholesome description, and wholly free from adulteration.
Where personal supervision is not possible, arrangements will be made to furnish Clothing, &c., for one moderate sum, avoiding all extras. To those having the charge of Orphan Children, or to Parents about to proceed to or returning from the East or West-Indies, this Establishment offers great and peculiar advantages.

For Particulars and References address Mesdames FREFONTAINE,
6, Trafalgar Terrace, Mosely, Worcestershire.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & CO., in addition to their business as Publishers and Book-sellers, beg to remind their Friends and Correspondents in India, that they continue to undertake AGENCY of every description, as well as the execution of Orders from Regimental Messes, Book-Clubs, &c.

Messrs. ALLEN & Co., from their long experience in the East-India Trade, and knowledge of the requirements of residents in India, feel confidence in executing all commissions entrusted to them; and as their mode of business is, to give personal attention to all orders, and to charge the same at the lowest remunerative prices, they must request to be favoured with a remittance (or reference for payment in London) from those parties who may desire to avail themselves of their services, and who have not, at present, accounts with the house.

SIR JAMES MURRAY'S FLUID MAGNESIA. Prepared under the immediate care of the Inventor, and established for upwards of thirty years by the PROFESSION, for removing BILE, ACIDITIES, and INDIGESTION, restoring APPETITE, preserving a moderate state of the bowels, and dissolving uric acid in GRAVEL and GOUT; also as an easy remedy for SEA SICKNESS, and for the febrile affection incident to childhood it is invaluable.—On the value of Magnesia as a remedial agent it is unnecessary to enlarge; but the Fluid Preparation of Sir James Murray is now the most valued by the Profession, as it entirely avoids the possibility of those dangerous concretions usually resulting from the use of the article in powder.

Sold by the sole consignees, Messrs. BAILEY and WILLS, of Horsley Fields Chemical Works, Wolverhampton, and by all wholesale and retail Druggists and Medicine Agents throughout the British Empire, in bottles, 1s., 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 11s., and 21s. each.

☞ The Acidulated Syrup in bottles 2s. each.

N.B.—Be sure to ask for "Sir James Murray's Preparation," and to see that his name is stamped on each label, in GREEN INK, as follows:—"James Murray, Physician to the Lord Lieutenant."

IMPORTANT WORKS ON INDIA.

In One large Volume, with Map, price £1. 1s.,

MR. THORNTON'S GAZETTEER OF INDIA.

A GAZETTEER OF THE TERRITORIES UNDER THE GOVERNMENT OF THE EAST-INDIA COMPANY, AND OF THE NATIVE STATES ON THE CONTINENT OF INDIA.

By EDWARD THORNTON, Esq., Author of the "History of the British Empire in India."

The work has been compiled by the authority of the Court of Directors, and though comprised within a single volume, it will be found to contain the great mass of information comprehended in the four volumes of the "Gazetteer of India," published by the same author in 1854. This result has been obtained by retrenching some few redundancies, and by adopting an enlarged page and distributing the matter into two separate columns. By these means space has been also acquired for the insertion of much new matter, rendered necessary by the political and territorial changes which have more recently taken place within our Eastern Possessions.

On the character of the work a few remarks will be sufficient. Its chief objects are,—

1st. To fix the relative position of the various cities, towns, and villages with as much precision as possible, and to exhibit with the greatest practicable brevity all that is known respecting them; and 2ndly. To note the various countries, provinces, or territorial divisions, and to describe the physical characteristics of each, together with their statistical, social, and political circumstances.

To these are added minute descriptions of the principal rivers and chains of mountains; thus presenting to the reader, within a brief compass, a mass of information which can not otherwise be obtained, except from a multiplicity of volumes and manuscript records. The volume, in short, may be regarded as an epitome of all that has yet been written and published respecting the territories under the government or political superintendence of the British power in India. Its merits have been frequently discussed in the General Courts of the East-India Company, where successive Chairmen have borne ample testimony to the utility of the publication, and where it has been characterized by the best-informed among the Proprietors as "a complete history of India, untainted in any degree by political bias."

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE chief interest of the intelligence conveyed by the present mail is centred round Lucknow. The original garrison, it will be remembered, was relieved on the 25th of September; but as the mutineers immediately afterwards closed round in overwhelming numbers, it was judged unwise to attempt to cut a way through to Cawnpore, while encumbered with so many women and children, so many wounded and inefficient persons. An attempt, indeed, appears to have been subsequently made, for it is reported that some terrible fighting in the streets of Lucknow took place on the 19th October. The result was evidently discouraging, as Sir James Outram was compelled to retreat into the Residency, which is situated on the further side of the city of Lucknow. Three miles thence, on the Cawnpore side, with a spacious plain three miles wide and intersected by a canal intervening, stands the royal retreat of Alumbagh, surrounded by walls with bastions at each corner. Within this inclosure were left the sick and wounded men on the advance of Havelock's force, defended by a sufficient guard and some heavy guns. Between Alumbagh and Cawnpore the communication is scarcely, if at all, interrupted. Large convoys of provisions and several hundred effective men have been poured in at different times, and, more recently, Brigadier Hope Grant's force of 3,500 men is known to have arrived. This column is better known to English readers by the name of its first gallant young commander, Colonel Greathed. After the brilliant repulse of the mutineers at Agra on the 10th, Colonel Greathed was engaged in making preparations for his advance into Oude. On the 14th he crossed the Jumna, but was superseded by his senior officer, Brigadier Grant, before he could reach Mynpooree. The rajah of that place howed to circumstances and submitted without firing a shot. His fort, however, was dismantled, and his few guns captured. Leaving Furruckabad for a future demonstration, the column pushed on towards Cawnpore, and at the ancient city of Canouj came up with four or five hundred Delhi fugitives, whom it utterly routed with great slaughter, taking their five guns. Five days later—on the 28th of October—Brigadier Grant marched into Cawnpore, and on the 30th crossed the Ganges and set his face towards Lucknow. By the 8th of November he had reached Alumbagh, and there halted, awaiting the arrival of the Commander-in-Chief. In the mean time there is no reason—unless unforeseen accidents intervene—to apprehend any very imminent danger on the part of the beleaguered garrison at the Residency. If Col. Inglis with his handful of worn-out men could so long maintain his position, we may not doubt that Generals Outram and Havelock, with the far greater means at their disposal, will be able to hold their own until the heart-stirring notes of the pibroch again pierce through the din of battle and the roar of artillery. Nor would they have long to wait; for on the 9th—the day after Grant reached Alumbagh—Sir Colin Campbell set foot in Oude. The force under the immediate command of that gallant chief probably did not exceed 1,500 men; but the junction with the troops at Alumbagh would give him 5,000 foot and 800 horse. Sir Colin had lost no time on the road up from Calcutta, though his journey narrowly missed becoming an apt illustration of the venerable adage that speed does not always attend upon haste. Between Sherghotty and Benares the Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's forces in India escaped by a hair's-breadth from falling into the hands of the mutineers of the 32nd N.I., who crossed the trunk road a little in advance of the general and his suite, travelling in palkee gharries without any escort. The mutineers were riding on elephants, with horsemen on their flanks. Sir Colin, wise after the event, drove back to a dāk bungalow where some European soldiers were resting after a march, and only resumed his journey when the coast was clear. It is said that it is not his Excellency's intention to march straight across the plain and through the city to the Residency, but to introduce the innovation of strategy into English—at least, into Anglo-Indian—warfare. The Calcutta journalists have decided that Sir Colin will cross the Goomtee, and shell the mutineers out of the city, and thus relieve the Residency without loss or risk. It may be so; but it is far more likely that the tactics actually pursued will be those of the Gough school. The Oude rebels, however, have not been altogether unmolested. Colonel Wroughton, at the head of a small body of Jung Bahadour's Ghoorkas, came upon a vastly superior force of the enemy in Juanpore, and speedily put them to flight, with the loss of six or seven hundred men and four guns. A portion of the Dinapore mutineers have also been roughly handled on the grand trunk road, near Futtehpore, between Allahabad and Cawnpore. They were met by a detachment of five hundred men, with three guns, under Colonel Powell, of the 53rd, and Captain Peel. Two of their guns were captured and themselves temporarily dispersed; but Colonel Powell was killed, with many more of less note.

From Delhi the news is meagre and devoid of point. Brigadier Showers, indeed, appears to have been scouring the adjacent country to some purpose; but Delhi itself remains desolate and unoccupied. The king was about to be despatched to Allahabad to stand his trial, and will probably be sentenced to transportation—no slight punishment for a monarch aged nearly fourscore years and ten. The Nawab of Jhujjar had likewise surrendered, and will most likely be able to prove that he has acted feebly, under strong coercion. The district around Agra was also gradually subsiding into its usual routine, and there is every reason to expect a full payment of revenue. No doubt extraordinary efforts will be made to acquit all demands, lest inquiries should be made into the conduct of the defaulters during the recent disturbances. The Punjab continued faithful and peaceable, except between Mooltan and Lahore, where the marauders were still hovering about, evading pursuit, and plundering the defenceless. Less satisfactory, however, was the state of Central India. The Malwa contingent mutinied at Mehidpore on the 8th November, and murdered Capt. Mills, Dr. Cary, and two European sergeant-majors. Their triumph, however, was of brief duration. The Mhow column fell in with them on the 19th, took their guns, and inflicted on them severe loss. At Saugor the garrison was still safe, though earnestly praying for succours.

At the three Presidencies all was quiet and hopeful, except that the Bank of Bombay had been compelled to raise its rate of discount three per cent.,—which might have happened irrespective of the mutiny. Reinforcements were daily arriving. The Alma spoke thirty-six transport-ships off the Sandheads, in addition to those which had already arrived; such as the Sydney, with 320 men of the royal artillery; Ulysses and Surrey, with 652 men of her Majesty's 88th regiment; Australian, with 306 men of her Majesty's 42nd regiment; Lady Jocelyn, with 766 of her Majesty's 54th, rifle brigade, and royal artillery; Candia, with 692 of her Majesty's 19th, 20th, and 34th regiments; Sulej, with 281 of the rifle brigade, and her Majesty's 97th regiment; Adelaide, with 236 of the Hon. East-India Company's recruits. In all, not fewer than ten to twelve thousand men had reached Calcutta by the middle of November, and others were arriving fast at Bombay, Galle, and Madras.

From China the news is expectant. It was believed that an attack would be made upon Canton in the early part of December, and marines had been sent over from Calcutta to co-operate in this grand dénouement of the Lorcha question.

THE MUTINY.

AGRA, Sept. 25.—“The graves of most of our illustrious men are mere heaps of rubbish, lying out of the fort gate. It is difficult to get workmen to shape them respectably, and, in these troublous times, people think it unwise to lay out money in anything that they know is apt to be destroyed, for the budmashas here have not omitted to enter graveyards and rob the dead even. Neatly erected monuments, and slabs of stones, have been walked away with; and, in one instance, a grave was dug up, with some sinister motive, within the inclosure of a church, and the bones of the departed raked up. The grave of our Governor is a pukka one, with a kutchia inclosure 12 feet by 12. It was prudent burying him within the walls of the fort, for we know not what insult would be offered to him, were he buried out of it, by rebels walking away with his body, considering that a lakh was offered for his head only.”

By a private letter from Agra, dated the 23rd October, we are glad to learn that order has been re-established, and confidence in the minds of the ryots has also in a great measure been restored in the districts of Delhi, Agra, Rotuck, Paneeput, Goorgaon, Saharunpore, Allyghur, Meerut, Muzaffernuggur, Boolundshuhur, Hissar, and Mynpooree; but the road from the last-mentioned district to Cawnpore, however, is not quite clear. Troops have been sent that side to make it so, and then, it is hoped, the dawks from Agra to Calcutta will be more regular. Arrangements are now being made at those places for the transaction of public business, and officers are being appointed for that purpose.

ALLAHABAD.—The following is from Allahabad, dated Oct. 18.—“At Sarun, distant about fourteen miles from our fort across the Ganges, Mehndee Allee Khan, styling himself Nazim of the Ganges, and Baney Allahabad, Sungur, and Nussurtpore, are encamped with a Bahadur Sing, zemindar of Nussurtpore, and six guns. They force of from 4,000 to 6,000 armed men. They are laying the district waste, robbing, murdering, and abusing the ryots, and exacting from all a tax of four annas in the rupee. A large body of Moslems, in force at Kote Mhokur, about sixteen miles (inland, on the Oude side) from Futtehpore, are committing depredation and havoc.”

A letter from Allahabad reports that the wealthy natives are stirring up the lower classes to rebellion by telling them that the soldiers have orders to treat their women and children as ours were treated at Delhi and Cawnpore.

ALLYGHUR.—On the 31st Oct., a party of European and Sikh infantry and Jat horse, set out very early in the morning for Adhaura, a village about nine miles from Allyghur, notorious for harbouring some of the most hostile of the Mahomedan faction. They reached this village at daybreak; and, by pushing on the cavalry, took it so entirely by surprise that very few shots were fired. The greater part of the disaffected inhabitants were either captured or killed. Three of the chief rebels were among the killed, and three amongst the wounded. About fifty altogether were killed, and the same number taken captive. Five hundred head of cattle were also captured. The effect of this necessary severity will be excellent throughout the district.

A message has just been received from Allyghur, to the effect that Capt. Gowan, 18th N.I., Serjeant-Major Belcham, of the same regiment, Mrs. Belcham and four children, had just reached that place. They had escaped from their hiding-place in Rohilcund, and were brought in by the aid of Mr. J. C. Wilson.

BANDA.—Koorer Singh's regiment of mutineers were attacked and defeated by some zemindars of the Banda district, near Kapsa, on the side of the Punna, himself having, it is said, made away for Gwalior. The regiment, under the command of a soubadar, crossed the Jumna at Chilla Tara, taking with them three guns, two belonging to Nagode and one to Ajeeghur, 200 wounded men being, it is said, all that are left of the large body of the mutineers that were collected at Banda.

BENARES, Oct. 18.—Two companies of H.M.'s 53rd regt. proceeded to Allahabad on the morning of the 16th, giving escort to remount horses. Eighty-four men of H.M.'s 93rd regt., under Capt. Cornwall, came on the 15th and left this the next evening. The detachment of royal engineers and H.M.'s 93rd Highlanders, consisting of 185 men, who arrived here on the 8th and 9th, under Capt. Clarke, have proceeded towards Allahabad. Colonel Fisher's column reached this place on the 13th. The 17th M.N.I. have marched towards Rewah for the protection of that town. The Rajah of Rewah is still loyal. Col. Hinde has accompanied the troops. The officers of the 50th N.I., which mutinied at Nagode, have come in to this station.

Byrab-pershad, the great Benares banker, with his jemadar and eight peons, were hanged at Jaunpore for high treason, corresponding with people in Oude. He offered, it is said, four lakhs of rupees as a bribe for his life being spared; but no one ventured to accept such a bribe.

Oct. 29.—This morning a detachment, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Longden, H.M.'s 10th regiment, consisting of four companies of that regiment, two guns of the Bengal artillery, and two companies of the 27th M.N.I., marched for Jaunpore. The eventual destination of the force, when joined by the Goorkhas, will be doubtless Goruckpore.

The day before yesterday the 2nd battalion military train, consisting of 240 men, and a company of Madras sappers, marched for Allahabad. Shortly after their departure two guns of the Madras horse artillery, under Lieut. Bridges, and seventy-one remount horses, proceeded to join Col. Berkley, who was ordered to reach Allahabad as speedily as possible. Col. Crawford's detachment of the royal artillery left this by steam early on the 25th, consisting of 270 men and fourteen officers. Brigadier Carthew's column of Madras troops was on the right bank of the Ganges the day before yesterday, and was to be at Gopeeunge yesterday, where it was to wait till some Government horses and bullocks arrived.

October 31.—The Commander-in-Chief has come and gone. He arrived to-day at 9 A.M., and put up at Colonel Gordon's, where he breakfasted, and saw some officers, whence he paid a visit to the Lieutenant-Governor. He started for Allahabad at 1 P.M. On this side of Shergotty, the Commander-in-Chief's party came across, most unexpectedly, a detachment of the fugitive and mutinous 32nd, and were very nearly caught by them. Had the garries been five hundred yards further on the road, the whole party would have been cut off to a man, for they were proceeding without an escort of any kind. These gallant sepoys were seen travelling like gentlemen on elephants, of which fourteen were counted, and were also escorted by twenty-five sowars, who hovered some time about the carriages. As soon as this cavalcade was perceived, the carriages turned back, and retraced their steps for ten miles, till they came up with a bullock-train party.

A private letter, dated the 4th November, contains the following passages:—"Ladies are still travelling up here, in spite of the Government order to the contrary. However, after the first of this month no one will be able to move from Calcutta, as Government have taken possession for two months of every means of transport by road or by river. I hear from Englishmen, who have just come down from Delhi, that the place is not nearly so much injured as might have been expected. The Jumma Musjid and the palace have received scarcely any damage. The portion of the city that suffered most severely was the quarter adjacent to the Cashmere-gate. This place is tolerably quiet at present, but we anticipate a visit from the routed mutineers in their dispersion over the country after being driven out of Oude. It is almost incredible, but the total force to overawe this important and turbulent city does not exceed 350 men, of whom less than 100 are Europeans. Every man sleeps with his pistols beneath his pillow, and years must elapse before we recover our ancient feeling of security."

A traveller, just arrived at Benares from Calcutta, writes as follows, dating 2nd November:—

"I got here yesterday afternoon, and should have been here in the morning of yesterday, but was obliged to return to Dehree, on this side of the Soane, on account of the crossing over the Trunk-road of the four companies of the 32nd. I left Raneegunge on Thursday evening, and the next evening caught up General Windham's party, that had left the morning of the same day. I kept on with them for some time, but shot ahead during the night, and was a long way from them; in fact, some seven miles on my way on the Benares road, before they had arrived on the Calcutta side of the Soane, determined to go on alone. When I arrived at Kurrowndiah, the first stage from Dehree, the dak coachman gave me notice that the Commander-in-Chief had had a most narrow escape from these fellows, whom he was quite close to—so close that he could count some twenty-five sowars with them and fourteen elephants. The old gentleman retreated to the Jehanabad dak bungalow, at which was a company of Europeans, but subsequently went on unscathed. Knowing that if I returned to Dehree I should be able to go on the same evening with General Windham's party, I did so, and arrived just as the general had crossed. We went on soon after, determined to keep together; and though we saw a large fire at a distance, met with no impediment, the mutineers having crossed to the hills to the left of the road. Between the Jehanabad and Mohunah bungalows, we came across their track as the burning of the stables and other houses proved. We were brought to a stand-still, as there were no horses for us and only a few coolies, which had been got together by the exertions of Captain Stewart, superintendent of telegraphs, who had gone ahead of us to rectify some damage the rebels had done to the electric wire, accompanied by Major Hatch, Judge Advocate General, and twenty-five of Rattray's Sowars; we, however, pressed some labourers on the road to assist (they were well paid) and met, as we went on, other coolies, and for two stages could get on slowly, but, as it proved, surely."

CABUL.—The old correspondent of the Delhi Gazette writes as follows, on the 26th Sept.:—

"Since the mutiny and disbandment of the sepoys at Peshawur, Sirdar Sooltan Mahomed Khan has been telling the Ameer that the British Government had not many troops now to spare, and it would be highly proper if he were permitted to recover his lost territory of Peshawur. To this his highness distinctly answered that he would not violate the conditions of the treaty now existing between him and the English, but ruin the thinker of such folly, as there were sufficient troops for the preservation of Peshawur; adding that shortly the news will arrive of the fresh arrivals of the British troops and of the total annihilation of the miscreants. So it came as the Ameer had anticipated. He and all the well-wishers of this English were delighted to hear of the capture of Delhi.

"The agent of the King of Bokhara, who had lately arrived in Cabul with a few horses and furs for the Ameer, has been dismissed by his highness. The latter assured the king that as long as he is alive he will never abandon the friendship of the English, even if his majesty were to offer him four times more than the money he receives from the Government of India. He has, however, sent the King of Bokhara a few shawls in return for his presents.

"There was a rumour at Candahar that the King of Bokhara was arranging to have an interview with the Shah of Persia at Meru; but I believe it to be impossible.

"One of the sons of Sirdar Ramdjl Khan was returning from Taihran to Heerat at the head of about 300 horsemen. He encountered the plundering Alamaras, and was killed in the fight, with thirty of his followers; the rest escaped. The Alamaras have committed great depredations over the subjects of Persia lately, between Mushid and Heerat. The shah is very much exasperated, and has cut up several hundreds of these marauders.

"Some say that Heerat has been abandoned by the Persian force under Morad Mirza, and others add that he keeps his hold still of that place.

"The Persian merchants have come to Heerat. They state that an alliance has been established between the Sooltan of Room and the King of Persia; and an exchange of the most valuable presents has taken place amongst them.

"Major Lumsden is going on very well at Candahar. Since his stay in that place the grain has been cheap, and oppression has ceased, and confidence been restored amongst the inhabitants of the country."

CANNANORE, Nov. 4.—The steamer Robert Lowe, having on board the head-quarters of H.M.'s 1st Royals, arrived here yesterday. The regiment was destined to garrison this station, but a detachment of this corps having reached Calcutta, the Governor-General ordered it over to Masulipatam, where the head-quarters were also directed to follow (to march to Secunderabad, or to be attached to the Nagpore movable column, is not known); owing to which, instructions reached here by electric telegraph, not to land the 1st Royals here, but send them on to Masulipatam, and that another regiment will be sent here. Having put fresh supplies on board, the vessel leaves this evening for Masulipatam.

CHUPRAH.—A letter from Chuprah, bearing date the 29th October, states:—

"Captain Sotheby's naval brigade came in last Saturday evening with six guns, a 68-pounder among the number to boot. They occupied the government school-house, no other suitable building being available for their accommodation, and have this morning been pushed on to the frontier to check the advance of the Goruckpore rebels who are reported to be coming to close quarters. Colonel Templar, of the late 7th N.I. of Dinapore, is appointed to command our field-force composed of a Goorkah regiment and 75 Sikhs at Sewan, and another of our Nepaul ally's regiments in the adjoining district of Champaran. And, what is not least, though last, the two armed steamers, Palma and Jumna, are also at our service, the one plying in the Gogra, and the other lying off the station."

CAWNPORE, Oct. 23.—We hear that the rebels at Lucknow have destroyed the iron bridge over the Goomtee. Reinforcements are going off sharp; part belonging to Peel's naval brigade have gone to day by morning and evening train. The railway extends forty-four miles, and they then proceed by bullock-train. Nana Sahib has again bolted; his last advice to his men is rich:—"Keep out of the way of the Blue Caps (Madras fusiliers); they hit without firing [in allusion to the long range of the Enfield rifles, the report of which was often not heard], and when the Highlanders get near any village, kill all the women, for these are the men sent out by the queen to avenge the deaths of their women and children, and that is the reason they go into action with kills!"

Oct. 25.—Last evening we heard by express, that there had been at Lucknow, on the 19th, a most murderous street fight, in which we lost many men, and Outram and one of the Havelocks are mentioned amongst the wounded! The attack originated with us, and had for its object to take possession of the town, and to effect a junction with our party at Alumbagh; but our losses having been too great, the success has been but trifling, for it seems that we have possession of but a very small portion of the town towards the Balee Guard. Broken down as they now are in every sense of the expression, Outram and Havelock will no longer be able to act on the offensive. They can't procure provisions, and the cattle are without fodder! The troops at present in the Alumbagh cannot march to their aid before they are at least 4,000 strong, and in the mean time the others may be in want of food. This is indeed a sad state of affairs, and the position, although not yet desperate, is nevertheless becoming more critical, for the enemy is increasing daily. The 3,000 men who came from Delhi, and whom our garrison put to flight the other day at Bithoor, have succeeded in crossing the Ganges and are at Lucknow, whither many more are wending their way; in fact, that seems to be the spot where the rebellion will be nourished until entirely smothered. Colonel Greathed's brigade, we are told, is to be here to-morrow, and will be pushed on towards Lucknow, as soon as another convoy of provisions, &c., can be assembled. The exertions of the commissariat are incredible, and the indents enormous, for, besides our own garrison, the Lucknow garrison has also to be fed, and a sufficient number of hackeries have to be provided for the baggage.

Here we are informed that a regiment of 1,000 men, and forming the advance guard of a body of Gwalior rebels, was at Calpee the day before yesterday, and marching upon Cawnpore. At Muckanpore, about twenty miles from this, there is a battalion and 300 troopers of the 2nd cavalry. A party of the latter, six in number, went, the day before yesterday, to the Maharajpore Chowkey, with the intention of paying a visit to Griffiths, but who very fortunately had already left that place, as he never sleeps away from his post.

Oct. 26th.—Bands of rebels are crossing into Oude between us and Futtehpore, and every commandant of a detachment has orders to drive on to meet them. Trains from here to Lohonda sometimes twice a day. Havelock has many sick with him; our force there is in a bad state, surrounded and divided, and cannot communicate: this is all real pukka news. Colonel O'Brien, late commandant here, has shot himself; General Outram wounded. Field-pieces, marine brigade, &c. &c., left this morning.

Oct. 28.—Brigadier Grant's, or, as it is more popularly termed, Colonel Greathed's column, arrived here on the 25th. It consists of two companies of sappers and miners, three batteries of horse artillery, two regiments of Sikh cavalry, two regiments of Sikh infantry, two 18-pounder guns, 600 of H.M.'s 9th lancers, and H.M.'s 8th and 75th foot, besides some few volunteers from Agra.

Marching down from Agra, these brave fellows inflicted summary vengeance on every rascally villager convicted of having shared in the late disturbances. At Mynpooree, they discovered and secured an immense amount of treasure, together with guns and ammunition, many of the guns being of native make. The brother of the Rajah of Mynpooree, it appears, has been true to our Government throughout, and pointed out to our people the whereabouts of the concealed guns and treasure, and has, I am informed, been consequently rewarded. Coming onwards towards Cawnpore, they fell in at Kanouj with the rascals, whom we drove out of Sheorajpore on the 8th. Of these they made a clean sweep, taking every gun they had, and sabring almost every cowardly wretch among them. The result of this fight is doubly satisfactory. It is not only another proof to the native of how swift and terrible is British vengeance when once aroused, but the annihilation of this body of mutineers, who were en route for Lucknow, renders our convoys to Alum Bagh less liable to attack, and weakens and disheartens the horde gathered round the residency.

31st Oct.—The Delhi column under Brigadier Grant, 9th lancers, crossed the river yesterday, and marched towards Lucknow this morning. Artillery, 391 men and 18 guns; lancers, 250 men; engineers, 206; 5th fusiliers, 92; 8th regt. 327; 53rd, 156; 75th, 349; 93rd, 382; Punjab cavalry, 361; Punjab infantry, 1,003; total, 3,517. Besides these he will pick up some 700 Europeans at Alumbagh.

We have had letters from Alumbagh. Major Burnston had arrived there safely with an immense convoy of provisions and abundance of ammunition. They are all right there, and so is Outram at the Balee Guard. The only officer of the 64th reported killed, is Bateman. Shutes and Hudson were not killed. We are quite busy here, troops coming in daily, and supplies also.

A friend at Cawnpore under date 31st October, writes as follows:—

"Colonel Greathed's force marched this morning to relieve General Havelock at Lucknow. I saw the men of the 75th yesterday: they look like their work, but as if they had been at it some time; they are dressed in mud-coloured cloth and are not easily seen at even a short distance. The 9th lancers look very well, but we hear that the Sikh cavalry are the boys who never come back from a charge without their tulwars being blooded to the hilt; they are very light, and you know the way a native can shove a rip of a horse along if so inclined. I fancy the force that started this morning consisted of about three thousand men if not more, and the best part of them Europeans. The Gwalior force, said to be six thousand men, with forty guns and no end of ammunition, was reported to be crossing the Jumna, twenty-five miles from this."

Another Cawnpore correspondent of the Hurkaru, writing on the 2nd of November, says:—

"With the column went a vast quantity of provisions, carried partly in carts and partly on camels, so that by this time there is little doubt that our brave fellows have fed their fill. On the evening of the 31st I received a letter from Alumbagh, from which I extract the following:—'We are still situated as when I last wrote to you, on the 10th of October. Surrounded on all sides, continual firing day and night, no communication yet open between us and General Outram's force at Lucknow, though we are but three miles apart. The detachment of Europeans, with commissariat stores from Cawnpore, are just now coming in to this place. They came along all right until they got within a few miles of us, when they were attacked by the rebels. They are now firing away at our party just beyond range of our guns. Captain Guise, a Crimean Officer, who has arrived with this detachment, and who had lost an arm previously, has again been wounded in that arm. He is, I believe, the only one hurt, with the exception of one man slightly wounded.'

"Here our position is daily becoming stronger. We have some 800 men in garrison, plenty of guns mounted, sufficiency of gunners, loads of ammunition, and, thanks to the unwearied exertions of our commissariat officers, provisions galore. Daily troops are pouring in—yesterday came 106 men of Captain Peel's naval brigade; 200 men of H.M.'s 93rd Foot, and 200 men, details of other regiments. Peel's Jacks are roaming about camp in a remarkably free and easy manner. Queer fish these amphibious gentlemen are. One, Crusoe-like, has quite a menagerie in his 'cabin,' as he calls his pâli. Rough and ready rollicking boys they are, and present a striking contrast to the prim dragoons you now and then meet striding majestically along. I hear that the 'nagurs' have a horrible dread of them, having been told by some inventive individual that they were cannibals, and that it was their habit to eat their fill of the slain, and salt the remainder down for future use! and that accounted for each man carrying a clasp knife by his side. Next to the Jacks, such of the Highlanders as wear kilts seem to stand highest in the fear and reverence of the natives."

From Brigadier Campbell from Allahabad to Secretary to Government, Home Department.

Extract from two despatches from Captain Peel:—

"Camp, Bindkee, Nov. 1, 1857.

"A battle was fought this afternoon near the village of Kudjnia, between the Dinapore mutineers and a detachment of 500 men with two 9-pounder guns, under the command of Colonel Powell. The enemy had three guns, were in a strong position, and had a numerous force. Their position was carried, two guns captured, and their camp plundered. I regret to state that Colonel Powell was killed. The object in view having been accomplished, I shall return to Futtehpore.

(Signed) "W. PEEL, Capt. R.N."

"Camp, Cawnpore, Nov. 2, 1857, 11 A.M.

"We have two captured guns, with limbers and ammunition-waggons. The enemy were prepared for our attack, and the sepoys were in uniform. Our success was complete. In consequence of forced marches we were unable to pursue them. We destroyed their camp, and left with cheers. Collected the wounded, and encamped near Bindkee. Our loss is severe. We buried Colonel Powell here and the other dead.

(Signed) "W. PEEL, Capt. R.N."

DECCAN.—We learn from our Aurungabad correspondent, that a detachment of the 24th Bombay N.I., under the command of Capt. Montrieu, consisting of two companies, with two European and four native officers, ten havildars and one hundred and fifty rank and file, left that station on the 22nd Oct. en route to Boargaum, where they will relieve a similar detachment escorting tents for the use of the Deccan field force. We are further informed that so soon as the 6th regiment infantry Hyderabad contingent, which left Bolarum on the 18th en route for Aurungabad, reaches the latter station, the whole of the Deccan field force will move towards Mhow, leaving perhaps a company of Europeans to aid in protecting Aurungabad, and a similar party will, it is said, move on to Jaulnah for the same purpose. We learn from North Berar, that six carts containing prisoners left Booldanah on the 22nd, en route for Nuldroog, the great central jail in the Hyderabad assigned districts.

DELHI.—Extract from a despatch, dated Kunoond, 20th of October, from Brigadier Showers, enclosed in letter to Agra from C. B. Saunders, Esq., C.S., dated 23rd of October:—

"A cavalry force, which, when advancing from Dadree on Jhujjur, Brigadier Showers sent forward to cut off fugitives, from Jhujjur towards Kunoond, was eminently successful. From 300 to 400 were destroyed, and the Jhujjur forces are believed to have been irretrievably dispersed.

"In continuation of this movement, Showers sent on another cavalry detachment, consisting of a wing of the 6th Dragoon Guards, and Hodson's Horse, to proceed by forced marches to Kunoond, under command of Col. Custance, of the 6th Dragoons. The movement was executed with ability and marked success.

"The cavalry detachment reached Kunoond on the morning of the 19th. Col. Custance, finding the gates closed, called upon the place to surrender, on which they were opened, and the fort taken possession of, with eighteen guns (eight of which were mounted on the bastion), a quantity of military stores, and nearly 5 lakhs of treasure. About sixty men (who laid down their arms) were found in the fort. About 500, said to be Poorbeas, fled in the night, some of whom were cut up by Hodson."

"The trial of the pseudo-king of Delhi is not to take place at the seat of his late atrocities, as stated by a Lahore contemporary, but he is to be forthwith removed under a strong escort from Delhi to Allahabad. General Penny has received orders to that effect from Calcutta under date the 22nd October.

The nawab of Jhujjur, and some of his friends, have also been sent into Delhi by Brigadier Showers, to be tried in due form by Mr. C. B. Saunders, the Officiating Commissioner.

A correspondent writes:—"Delhi is nearly in ruins from the effect of the heavy artillery fire. The church is riddled with shot-holes, and the college and magazine as well. The ground outside the city bears unmistakable marks of the conflict. Hindoo Rao's house is a shell, as well as many of the houses in Subzee Munde and Kishen Gunge. The boughs of the trees are lopped off, and many of them are wholly felled by round shot, and the ground from the glacis to the ridge is strewn with shot, grape, and pieces of shell. Large quantities of treasure are being daily dug from the walls of houses and tykhanahs. It is expected the amount of prize money will be very large. The Jhujjur Nawab came in two days ago to stand his trial. The city is deserted by the inhabitants, and at night is silent as a grave-yard. The military governor is judiciously strict in allowing no one to enter without a pass. I hear some Europeans, as well as natives, have been creeping into the city through a drain or watercourse, the iron bars of which were broken. They were soon caught, and will probably be severely punished. Their object was to loot, no doubt. They say there are many sepoys still hidden in the city."

Inquiries having been made as to the fate of Mr. Heatly, editor of the Delhi Gazette, the following answer was received from a lady, who was fortunate enough to escape from the city:—"All I can tell you about the poor Heatlys is, that they were with us in the magazine, and left at the same time we did; but the confusion at the time the magazine was blown up was so great, that we lost sight of each other. Mrs. Heatly's mother-(Mrs. Harton) had a black dress on. We saw her on the sandbank, running with several others who had crossed the river, and could tell it was her by the dress; but I cannot say whether Mr. and Mrs. Heatly and the little girl were with those who had crossed."

Mr. Heatly had been in Delhi for several months; but his family only arrived there from Calcutta a week before the massacre.

DIHAR.—We learn from Dhar that a portion of the force lately before that place marched, on the morning of Nov. 5, upon Umjhura, the rajah of which is said to have fled to Mundesore. The remainder of Brigadier Stuart's column proceeded to Kuchrode, a town midway between Rutlam and Mehidpore, to chase from thence the remnant of the Mehidpore Contingent Horse, under Heera Sing.

A letter of a later date informs us that Brigadier Stuart's force marched, on Nov. 8, against Heera Sing, formerly a jemadar in the Nagpore cavalry. He and his ruffians had taken up a position at Kuchrode, to the westward of Mehidpore, and half way betwixt this place and Rutlam. The belief was that he would scarcely stand to be attacked. He is said to have been at Augur on the 6th, having just before made a dash upon Mehidpore, where he captured the guns and murdered a number of the Europeans. It was the troopers commanded by Heera Sing who murdered their officers, Captains Brodie and Hunt, at Indore. The Gwalior Contingent have left the dominions of the maharajah, and were last heard of at Baitool. They are said to have withdrawn in apprehension of the approach of Greathed's column, which handled their friends so roughly at Agra on October 10.

DINAPORE.—The following is an extract of a letter from Dinapore, dated H. Co.'s steam gun-boat Jumna, October 30th, 1857:—

"On the 28th instant the Commissioner of Patna sent us orders, and in consequence the officers of the Indian navy with their seamen, embarked for the third time. We were to proceed with the least possible delay to about fifteen or twenty miles beyond the Gogra river, and communicate with the people on the Arrah side of the Ganges. Should we learn that the mutinous detachment of the 32nd regiment was approaching the banks of the Ganges, with the intention of crossing into Goruckpore or Ghazepore, we were to proceed on and do everything in our power to intercept them. They were reported as being at Shapore factory, sixteen miles west of Arrah, and were likely to be on the banks of the Ganges the next day north of Shapore. After doing this service we were to proceed to the mouth of the Gogra and survey it carefully. If able to enter it without fear of being shut in by the fall of the river, we were to proceed and report ourselves to Captain Sotheby, R.N. (H.M.'s Pearl) who would avail himself of our services on the Gogra. If unable to enter, to return and report the circumstances to him. Early on the 29th the Jumna started to execute her favourite kind of work. We passed by Shapore the same evening at four o'clock, and saw nothing whatsoever on the banks to excite our suspicions; proceeded on to Perbutpore and anchored for the night. Sent for the burkundaze of the station, and learnt from him that everything at that place was quiet as before, and that there was even no rumour about the crossing of the 32nd regiment. This morning we ran down for the purpose of surveying the Gogra, received two pilots at Chuprah, and proceeded up the river. At Revelgunge we went over only four feet of water. The steam ferry Patna is doing guard-ship at this place, and if not quick in coming down, her fate will be like the Berhampootee. At a village called Monging, we anchored, and the commander (Williamson) of the vessel went with the pilots to survey the bar. There were only three feet six inches water over it. This depth of water was sufficient to go over with, but with the certainty of being shut in, as the pilots informed us the river was falling steadily four inches per day. In consequence we have returned to Dinapore for further orders, and arrived at sunset."

FURRUCKABAD.—The bankers and merchants of Furruckabad complain bitterly of the oppression to which they have been subjected for some months past by that miscreant who derives his title from their city. Within six months it appears that he has compelled the principal inhabitants of Furruckabad to deliver into his treasury three heavy forced contributions, amounting, in the aggregate, to several lakhs of rupees. It is to be hoped that this scoundrel will, before long, be made to disgorge these exactions preparatory to undergoing the process of suspension.

GOPEEGUNGE, Oct. 19.—"A detachment of H.M.'s 53rd, about 140 men, with 200 remounts for the artillery, left this to-day en route for Allahabad; eight officers and about 180 men of H.M.'s 93rd passed up yesterday in the bullock train. Teuraj Singh, the man who ordered the death of poor Moore, of the civil service, and who, it is said, cut off his head with his own hands, is with about 400 men, about twenty-five miles off; and a man calling himself the Nazir of Allahabad is, with a large body of men and seventeen guns, collecting the revenue somewhere in the district. This place is thirty-six miles from Benares. Ninety-six Sikhs of the Loodianah regiment are here at Sydebad, twenty-one miles nearer Allahabad. Sixty Sikhs of the Ferozepore regiment are stationed opposite to Allahabad; at the Ferry, sixty more of the Ferozepore regiment are placed, so the road is pretty well protected. Mr. Mayne, with 250 of the new police levy, forty of whom only are armed with muskets, is in this district; and Captain Mathison, with fifty Sikhs and Afghan Sowars, are with him. The Goorkhas, who were marching up this way, have been recalled to Juanpore, as they expected an attack from Oude. About eighty sepoy returning from leave passed this place yesterday, most of them were going to the Punjab; they ought, in my opinion, all to be turned out of the service."

"Oct. 24.—The Europeans pass this place steadily, at the rate of about 100 a day. The last company but one of H.M.'s 93rd, with some of the 65th, have just arrived in the bullock train. The immediate vicinity of this place is quiet enough, but thirty miles off, the rebels are collecting revenue in the name of the king of Lucknow and the nephew of Koorer Sing, with about 1,700 followers, as I understand, in the Arrah district. 200 of H.M.'s 10th, 180 Madrassees, and two guns, have passed through Buxar, and gone on to Goruckpore."

"Nov. 2.—Portions of two Madras regiments, with a battery of guns, passed this on the 30th; they came from Mirzapore, and were going to Cawnpore. We made a dow the day before yesterday after some rebels who were collected near here, and amongst whom were the murderers of poor Moore, of the civil service; the scoundrels fired on us from about 600 yards, but retreated as soon as we came near them, and kept on retreating and firing for about three miles; however, two were caught and hung, and their villages burnt, but Jung Sing, their leader, escaped: however, I don't think that they will venture near us again. I understand that a few sepoy of the 37th were with them, who are paid by Jung Sing eight annas a day. The rebels numbered about 300; we had fifty Sikhs and 150 of Captain Catania's new Police levy, who behaved very well indeed; advancing in line steadily in the face of the fire of the rebels: 160 Europeans and nine officers of the 23rd have just arrived by bullock train."

GWALIOR.—"The undermentioned ladies and children reported missing after the outbreak at Gwalior, have since arrived at Agra in safety:—

"Mrs. Blake, widow of Major Blake; Mrs. Proctor, widow of Lieut. Proctor; Mrs. Kirke, widow of Dr. Kirke, and one child; Mrs. Hawkins, widow of Capt. Hawkins, and three children; Capt. Stewart's child; Mrs. Coopland, widow of Rev. Mr. Coopland; Mrs. Raikes, wife of Major R. N. Raikes, and one child; Mrs. Twitchen, widow of Serg. Twitchen, and five children; Mrs. Webb, widow of Serg. Webb; Mrs. Hill, widow of Gunner Hill; Mrs. Cronan, widow of Serg. Cronan; Mrs. Colleies, widow of Drummer Colleies, and six children."

"The following officers and others are reported as having been killed by the mutineers, during the outbreak at Gwalior:—

"Major Blake, commanding 2nd regt.; Major Sheriff, commanding 4th regt.; Capt. Hawkins, 1st comp. artillery, and two of his children; Capt. Stewart, commanding 2nd comp. artillery; Mrs. Stewart, and one child; Lieut. Proctor, adj. 4th regt.; Superint. Surg. Kirke; the Rev. Mr. Coopland; Serg. Major Twitchen, 4th regt.; Serg. Major Pike, 2nd regt.; Mrs. Pike, wife of the above; Quart.-Mast.-Serg. Webb, 4th regt.; Drummer Colleies and Gunner Hill, both of the veterinary establishment; Park Serg. Cronan, Gwalior Magazine; Staff Serg. Kelly, No. 1 comp. artillery; Mrs. Burrows, wife of the late A Burrows, dep. as-ist. com. of ord.; Mrs. Quick, wife of Serg. Quick, died en route to Agra from fatigue and exposure."

HOOSHUNGABAD.—Our cantonment is not so tranquil at present as we could wish. A considerable body of rebels have arrived at a village near Purdah, on the opposite bank of the Ner-buddah, about fifty-six miles from Hooshungabad, and have planted the Mahomedan standard in the name of the King of Delhi. A small force consisting of one company of our regiment (the 28th Madras N.I.), and 150 sowars and burkendauzes, with two guns, have gone up to meet and repel their further advance.

INDORE.—We learn from Indore that the people are in a state of considerable disquietude, either from the circumstance of Heera Sing being in their neighbourhood, or of the Malwa brigade proposing to visit them and exact an account of the misdeeds of the evil-doers. The return of Sir Robert Hamilton is looked forward to with the utmost anxiety. Such is the influence of his name, that his presence in Central India would be more valuable than that of a brigade.

JOUDPORE.—CAPTAIN MONK MASON.—We have already mentioned the unfortunate death of Captain Monk Mason, Political Agent at Joudpore. The Delhi Gazette says he was to have joined General Lawrence's camp with a portion of the Maharajah's force, but that on nearing the general's position he mounted a camel, and taking two or three attendants with him, advanced ahead. After having gone some distance, he enquired of some people on the road the direction of the British force. A man offered to show him, upon which Captain Mason, having alighted from his camel, mounted a horse and followed the scoundrel, who led him into the camp of the enemy, where they opened fire upon him, shot him through the stomach, and hacked his body to pieces. Captain Mason was one of the most promising officers in the service. While yet a subaltern he had distinguished himself in the political department, which had he lived would have proved a fine field for the exercise of his talents and attainments.

KANOIJ.—The following is the official account of Brigadier Grant's brilliant victory over the rebels at Kanouj:—

This force has achieved another brilliant success, though upon a smaller scale, at Kanouj, on the 23rd of October. A portion of the forces discomfited by the Cawnpore troops, composed apparently, in part at least, of the Delhi fugitives, were making for Futtehghur as our column was advancing from Goorsuhagunge. Some of their guns were left in the hurry of their flight with the Nawab's Tehseeldar at Kanouj, and these we took possession of. On learning the approach of our column, a body of about 300 of the enemy with five guns endeavoured to effect an escape towards Oude. Two hundred of the lancers and native cavalry were sent in pursuit; and a smart firing being immediately heard, Brigadier Grant followed with a second squadron of the lancers and two guns of Bourchier's battery. The enemy attempted to form on crossing the Kalee Nuddee, and fired on our cavalry. They soon gave way before the guns, when our cavalry at once crossed and followed them up. The fugitives were now hemmed in between the Kalee Nuddee and the Ganges, and but few of them escaped. Some, both cavalry and sepoy, were drowned in attempting to swim across the Ganges. Nearly 200 were cut up, the remainder taking refuge in the fields. We captured their five guns, of which two (a 24-pounder howitzer and a 6-pounder gun) turned out to be our own. The cavalry were the 15th Irregulars. On our side, Lieutenant Watson received a slight injury in the hand, and two sowars were wounded. The rapidity and the completeness of this affair will produce the best results on both banks of the Ganges.

MEHIDPORE.—On the morning of the 8th Nov. the United Malwa Contingent was attacked at Mehidpore by the Vellaitees, Rohillas, and Mekranes, along with the budmashes of the city. They were headed by the amildar, or native police-officer at Mehidpore, and amounted to about 4,000 or 5,000 men, armed with matchlocks, swords, and spears. The force opposed to this consisted of 250 men of the Contingent, commanded by Major Timins and Captain Mills. They maintained a gallant but unequal fight of nearly eight hours, from 7 A.M. till 3 P.M., when they were compelled to retire with the loss of their guns. The Mussulmans of the Contingent now joined the enemy. Captain Mills, commander of the infantry, was shot while leading on a gallant charge of the Gwalior cavalry. Dr. Cary, with Sergeant-Majors O'Connell and Manson, were shot in retiring. Major Timins, escorted by the remnant of the 2nd cavalry, Gwalior Contingent, took the direction in which the Malwa field force, under Brigadier Stuart, was supposed to be advancing. The fate of Mrs. Timins is unknown. The leg of her horse was broken by a shot as she retreated. About 150 of the Contingent are said to have fallen, and about 400 of the enemy.

MOOLTAN.—A Mooltan correspondent writes:—"The detachment under Capt. Tronson has been very successful, repulsing close upon 2,000 of the insurgents in two most determined night attacks, with little or no loss to the detachment, the enemy losing upwards of eighty, including their leader and his son."

"Many of the insurgents' villages and granaries have been burnt. The resalah of the mounted police made a brilliant charge through a deep and wide nullah, doing considerable execution on their arrival on the opposite side. As a finale to the morning's operations, the detachment marched into Pak Puttun, fifty odd miles, without drawing rein, except to burn a hostile village now and then en route. By this march the enemy's arrangements were frustrated, and the ancient city of Pak Puttan saved. Having rested for a few hours, the resalah scoured the country for miles round, bringing in many headmen of villages, &c., upon whom Government arms were found. These men were summarily tried, found guilty, and executed by our energetic deputy commissioner, Major Voyle, who is with the detachment. In fact, the whole of the country bordering upon the Sutlej has been saved by the presence of this small force, combined with the energy displayed by its officers."

Oct. 26.—The Commissioner, Major Hamilton, left Mooltan on the 5th, and proceeded as far as Mahomedpoor, a village situated on the Lahore road on the left bank of the Ravee, where he remained till the 21st. He joined there the Lahore column, under the command of Colonel Paton, who were at the time encamped on the banks of the river. The column had endeavoured to cross the river, but, owing to their being unable to recover boats which the enemy held in possession, they could not effect it. It became therefore necessary to construct rafts, by which to accomplish the crossing of the river, and while so employed, the rebels from the opposite bank opened a fire on the column. Captain Snow, commanding the Lahore Light Horse, was wounded, also a Resaldar, and Major Marsden, Deputy Commissioner, had a horse shot under him. The column eventually effected the passage of the river on rafts, and under cover of two guns which had been sent for from Googaira, manned by European artillerymen, for the purpose. The high grass jungle around the camp was cut down to prevent the rebels from making an attack under cover of it. The rebels have now dispersed, and are making their way to Pak Puttun. The position they had taken up in the Bar was naturally strong, being surrounded by thick grass jungle and brushwood, which they have voluntarily quitted, with the object, it is said, of mustering in force at the above-named place, where others of their tribe are believed to be ready to swell their ranks. Pak Puttun is situated on the right bank of the Sutlej, and is a town of some importance. It contains a shrine of Bhawa Furreed, a Mahomedan priest, who is held in great veneration by the Juts.

MOORSHEDEBAD.—The following is from a native letter, dated the 3rd of October :—

"I have much pleasure in informing you that the Nawab Nazim of Moorshebad, on hearing from the Governor-General the fall of Delhi and the success of the British force at Lucknow, made great rejoicings in his palace on Thursday last. The whole of his troops, including the mace-bearers, were drawn in lines of a beautiful and military form, accompanied by the English band and other native music, the play of which drew a large number of spectators in the fort. When all was in full array, the Nawab with all his officers and a large retinue of attendants, made his royal appearance, and the scene was very pleasing to the sight, more so when the sepoys presented their arms and received him with great cheers, the band playing 'God save the Queen.'"

MUTTRA.—Colonel Cotton's column was at Muttra on November 2, having inflicted merited punishment on Beyree and some other refractory villages near their route. At Beyree, about 150 armed men were cut up; and a considerable number of matchlocks, with ammunition, swords, &c., and a small brass cannon, were taken. The party was received with every demonstration of pleasure at Muttra, and a general illumination of the city followed.

MYNPOORIE, Oct. 20.—"The movable column now commanded by Brigadier Hope Grant, marched 24 miles into this place yesterday, and re-occupied it without opposition. The rajah fled a few hours before our arrival, leaving behind him a good deal of property, a brass 6-pounder, several small native guns, and about 14,000 lbs. of gunpowder, together with two lakhs thirty thousand rupees, the treasure left here when the outbreak first took place. We march on Bewar to-morrow, and if all goes well, undertake to reach Cawnpore on the 28th instant. A body of mutineers, with eight guns, were reported to have taken up a position at Bewar; but are now said to have fled. The Gwalior troops are believed to be making for Jhansi, and a large number of Delhi fugitive mutineers were at Meerum.

NYNEE TAL.—A letter from Major Ramsay, dated the 20th Oct., states that three companies had been sent down towards Huldwanee, on which the entire Bareilly force, said to number some 5,000 men, again ran away.

OUDE.—"The Jounpoor Goorkhas had an action with 1,200 of the Oude rebels under Hussan Yar Khan on the 19th October, at a place called Koodwah, twenty-six miles west of Jounpoor. The fight was of short duration; the enemy were followed up for three miles, and about 250 of them cut up. Some Foujdarry sowars, who were accompanied by Messrs. Lind, Jenkinson, and Carnegie, did good service. The two latter gentlemen swam a nullah, and cut down seven of the enemy; the horse of the last-named gentleman was wounded. The Goorkhas were accompanied by Colonel Wroughton, Captains Steel and Clark, and Dr. Paske, all of whom were distinguished for their coolness and courage on the occasion. The Azimghur Goorkhas have also been doing good service, and have retaken all the boats which had been carried off by Mahomed Hussan Nazim to the Goruckpoor side of the Gograh at Dearee Burhul."

RAJPOOTANA.—We regret to learn that matters are getting more and more unsettled around Ajmere, as the mutineers begin to pour down through Rajpootana. Ahwa has been evacuated by the Joudpoor mutineers, but there seems to have been a good deal of skirmishing in the neighbourhood.

RANEENGUNGE.—Oct. 22.—"The six companies of the 32nd Regiment N.I., under the immediate command of Colonel Burney, reached the encampment at about 8 a.m., to-day. These men have marched from Bowsee, and not a single complaint has been made against any one. The men, to prove their fidelity, brought their arms and accoutrements to the commanding officer's tent."

REWAH.—Lieut. Osborne telegraphed to Government on the 25th Oct. :—

"The Rewah territory is now quiet. The sirdars have thrown themselves on the mercy of Government. This has been brought about by the presence of the force at the Kuttra Pass."

SHERGHOTTY.—The following is an extract of a letter from Sherghotty, dated the 30th Oct. :—

"This station is perfectly quiet, for the present, at least; for, so long as Umar Sing remains secure in his fastness in the Rhotas Hills, he may, when chance falls in his way, yet do a great deal of mischief to the surrounding villages and districts, and Sherghotty will then be the first place of attack. The Commander-in-Chief with his suite, arrived here yesterday afternoon, and after a few hours, started again for the North-west Provinces. The 32nd N.I. were expected yesterday at Sasseram, and Captain Rattray, with a party of Sikhs, went out to meet them, but I have not yet heard the result of his trip. It is rumoured that the mutinous 32nd N.I. are on their way to join Kooer Sing, for he is in the nearest and safest place."

THE LONDON MAIL of Sept. 26 arrived at Calcutta Oct. 31 (per Alma).

THE 32ND N.I.—We learn that the head-quarters of the 32nd N.I., at Soorie, have been marched down to Raneengunge, where they laid down their arms, in consequence of the mutiny of the detachments of that regiment at Deoghur and Rampore Haut. It is said, that a letter has been found on one of the native officers, written in Persian, and dated from Calcutta, informing them that a European force had been sent up to cut them in pieces, and that the time had arrived for them to take the same course that had been taken by their brother soldiers in other parts of the country.

EXPLOSION OF GAS.—One of the out-offices attached to the gas-building at Narkaldangah blew up on the 3rd of November, at 3 p.m. Two natives, it seems, went under the floor with a light, and the gas exploded. Both are burnt very much, and were sent to hospital. The sircar who gave the order is in custody. All the doors and windows of the building were smashed, and the walls and roofs split in a thousand places, and will all fall in if not at once removed.

LORD CANNING.—We hear that the native gentlemen of Calcutta are preparing an address to the Governor-General, complimenting him on his public conduct during these difficult times.

THE BENGAL YEOMANRY.—Three troops of this gallant cavalry corps left Raneengunge for the Upper Provinces on Tuesday morning, the 3rd November, the first troop having left some days before.

THE MARINE BRIGADE.—For some time past, the men recruited for this corps have been diligently and actively employed in learning their business. Those who are now located at the police appear to be well up to their drill, both in the musket, and, it is to be hoped, in the Enfield rifle; also the great-gun drill.

CALCUTTA GRENADIERS.—It is, we are told, in contemplation to effect a change in the organization of the Calcutta Volunteer Infantry Guards, as at present constituted, by forming another company out of the five companies already in existence; they will be picked men, and be called the Grenadier company.

EUROPEAN MOUNTED POLICE CORPS.—The Lieutenant-Governor has sanctioned the establishment of a European mounted police corps. It is for the present limited to twenty-five men, and will be stationed at Gyah. The men were engaged the day before yesterday, had measures taken for their uniform, and will proceed in the course of a few days to Raneengunge, from whence they are to continue by slow marches their way to Gyah.

THE INDIAN MUTINY.—The news of the Indian mutiny has reached every part of the world. A letter received from Mecca states, that the insurrection of the native soldiery in Upper Bengal, and the wholesale massacre of the Christians by the sepoys had formed the prominent part of the conversation both at table and at the Holy Mosque. The chief hadjee is said to have expressed his disgust and abhorrence at these occurrences.

SIR ROBERT HAMILTON.—The Lahore Chronicle hears from an influential source at Agra that Sir Robert Hamilton is to get the lieut.-governorship of the North-West Provinces.

LIEUT.-COLONEL NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN.—The Punjabee of October 30 announces that Lieut.-Colonel Neville Chamberlain has sent in his resignation, through the chief commissioner, of his appointment of adjutant-general of the army, as he prefers retaining the command of the frontier brigade.

THE EX-KING OF OUDE.—The ex-king of Oude, we hear, had a petition drawn up and forwarded to the Governor-General in Council, during the past week, wherein he solicited of the authorities to inform him of the nature of the charges brought against him which detain him a prisoner, and the length of time he is likely to be so detained. The reply he received was very laconic, for he was informed in a very few words that he would know all about the affair within a very short time.—Hurkaru, Nov. 3.

THE KING OF DELHI.—The Friend of India proposes that the lower floating light at the Sandheads should be made the future residence of the king of Delhi till his death takes place. Considering that an attack of sea-sickness might carry his villainous majesty off, we (the Hurkaru) think the best plan would be to send him to Pitcairn's Island, and leave him there, or let him loose in Nova Zembla upon a floating iceberg. No punishment is too bad for the old monster, who should have been hanged first and his body burnt afterwards. We are of opinion that burning him after his death will have a great moral effect on the Mussulmans of India, as, according to their creed, such a proceeding destroys all chance of the individual going to paradise, as well as his crown of martyrdom.

MONUMENT TO SIR HENRY LAWRENCE.—"Having been requested by several gentlemen, as a friend and brother officer of the late much-lamented Major-General Sir H. M. Lawrence, K.C.B., to raise a subscription for the purpose of erecting a suitable monument to his memory, I willingly accede to their wishes, in so far as to solicit subscriptions; but I would suggest that the amount realized should be appropriated rather to the support of the Lawrence Asylum than to a monument, feeling satisfied in my own mind that this would be most in accordance with the wishes of the lamented deceased, could they be consulted. Sir H. M. Lawrence needs no other monument than the noble institution he raised at Sunawur, near Kussowlee, an institution worthy of so good a man, and I hereby solicit his friends and the public in general, to come forward in support of a charity in which he took so great an interest; a lasting stigma would attach to us if we allowed the admirable asylum which bears his name to languish or fail through want of funds, and I confidently hope this my appeal will be nobly and generously responded to by his friends, the public, and the army at large. Subscriptions will be thankfully acknowledged by me, and by Mr. Bailey, the agent of the A. and U.S. Bank at Lahore."—G. E. GOWAN, Major-General.

ARRIVAL OF REINFORCEMENTS.—We subjoin a list of the troops lately landed. Much credit is due to Capt. Evans, H.M.'s 29th regiment, the newly-appointed disembarking officer, as everything is conducted with the greatest regularity and order. Not a single accident of any sort has occurred in this difficult undertaking in a dangerous river with but few facilities, the steamers being mostly engaged otherwise. This day, Nov. 3rd, we have in the river some 1,800 men, the head-quarters of the 42nd Highlanders, a portion of the rifle brigade, the 88th regiment, some of the royal artillery and royal engineers,—a goodly accession; 13th light infantry, 440 men; 23rd fusiliers, 650; 34th foot, 750; 38th foot, 240; 42nd Highlanders, 550; 82nd regiment, 1,000; 88th regiment, 627; 93rd Highlanders, 1,050; royal artillery, 712; royal engineers, 102; transport train, 250; Queen's service recruits, 221; Company's service recruits, 216.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

DUM DUM DEPOT OF MUSKETRY.

Head Quarters, Calcutta, Oct. 22, 1857.—With the sanction of Government, the depot of musketry at Dum Dum will be broken up from the 1st proximo.

2. The European officers and native details will join their respective regiments. The officers and men of corps that have mutinied will be sent to Barrackpore, to be disposed of under the orders of the officer commanding the presidency division.

3. The unposted officers attached to the depot will be appointed to do duty with regiments of H.M.'s service, as may be found convenient. The superintendent of cadets is requested to carry out this arrangement, and to forward to the adjutant-general's office a memorandum, for publication in general orders.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR ROBERT GARRETT, K.C.B.

Head-Quarters, Calcutta, October 26, 1857.—The Commander-in-Chief being about to proceed to Cawnpore, his Excellency, with the sanction of government, deposes Major-General Sir Robert Garrett, K.C.B., to exercise a special duty at the presidency.

2. On this officer, assisted by the deputy adjutant and quarter-master-generals of the army, will devolve the duty of quartering and forwarding the troops expected to arrive immediately.

3. As the locum tenens of the Commander-in-Chief for the time being, in Calcutta, he will act irrespectively of the divisional command; and the directions issued by him for the quartering, movement, and progress of troops expected from England, in and from the presidency, under the orders of Government, will be final.

4. The command in all other matters will proceed as usual in the division; and the correspondence of the army will be forwarded for the present to heads of departments at the presidency. Subjects requiring the immediate orders of the Commander-in-Chief may be addressed to the chief of the staff, at army headquarters, camp.

5. This order to have effect from the 27th instant.

Officers in command of divisions, brigades, regiments, and detachments, are informed that the office of the chief of the staff is not on any account to interfere with the routine of correspondence, as hitherto pursued in this army.

2. The chief of the staff will only be addressed directly in cases where the service is emergent, and it is considered that the business in hand may suffer for want of immediate communication with the Commander-in-Chief.

3. Telegraphic communications therefore of such nature should be addressed to the chief of the staff; but all ordinary correspondence, to the chiefs of the respective departments.

OFFICERS' RATIONS.

Fort William, Oct. 30.—The Right Honourable the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to direct, that all officers attached to European troops shall, when on service in the field, or en route with any portion of their corps from one station to another, be entitled, whenever the soldiers are rationed, to draw rations of provisions for themselves at the rate of one ration for each officer.

The cost of the rations so supplied is to be paid by the officers, and commanding officers of corps and detachments are to see that the bills of the commissariat department are regularly adjusted.

IMPORTS (Calcutta, Nov. 9).—A fair amount of business was done for about a week after the departure of the mail of 22nd ult.; but since the early part of last week a rumour in the bazaar of some disturbance at Furruckabad, has rather depressed the market, and less disposition has been shown by buyers to operate; prices generally have slightly declined; but as importers are firm, the present lull is likely to be of a temporary duration. Metals of all descriptions have improved, consequent on some favourable advices from Mirzapore; but operations have not been large, owing to the existing difficulty in the transmission of goods to the Upper Provinces. Coloured Yarns.—The demand for Turkey Red, both German and English dye, has been fair, and prices have been influenced by the rise on White Twist. The transactions have been principally speculative. Orange and Green have also been sold to a fair extent for the Burmese market, at an advance of about 2 annas per lb. on the former, and 1 anna per lb. on the latter. Coloured Cottons have lately engaged inquiry, consequent on some favourable advices from Mirzapore, and demand from Eastern Bengal. Sales have taken place at an advance of 1 to 2 pies per yard on Twills and Cambrics, and 4 annas per piece on Jaconets and Mulls. Madapollams, Grey.—The stocks are light, and there is a good demand at an advance of 1 anna per piece. The reported sales are at Rs. 2-0-6 to 2-4 per piece. White are neglected, and there are no transactions to report. Cambrics, Grey.—Stocks are also small. Importers are firm, and may succeed in obtaining higher prices. No sales have taken place. White are in limited request. A few sales are reported this week at Rs. 2-8 to 2-12 per piece. Jaconets, Grey.—40 and 45 inches, the reduced stocks have induced holders to show some firmness; higher prices being expected have caused a limited business, and as the season is nearly over, no great improvement in price is expected. White have been in good demand, and sales have been effected to a fair extent at a slight improvement in price. Lappets and Japan Spots are being taken for local requirement only, the lower qualities being sought for at a shade of improvement in price. Mull Mulls.—White of inferior qualities are inquired for. There has been a speculative demand, at a slight improvement in price. The reported sales are at Rs. 3-11 to 5-3 per piece. White Twills are saleable to a limited extent at Rs. 4-12 per piece. Grey Domestic are saleable to a limited extent at 1s. 6p. per yard. Flannel.—Woolen and cotton mixed has been sold at 10s. 6p. per yard. Ditto, printed, at 15s. 6p. per yard. Copper.—Sales of sheathing 16 to 32 oz. have been reported at Rs. 46-12 and 47, and Braziers 6 by 4 at Rs. 51-8 per factory maund. The assortments, consequent on some favourable advices from Mirzapore, and light stocks in our market have somewhat improved in price, and are at present. Spelter has advanced in price, and sales have taken place of soft Ct. Rs. 13-8 per fy. md. Imports in October, mds. 3,436. Tin Plates have been sold extent, at Co.'s Rs. 21-4 and 22 per single box. Imports in October, boxes 1,800. Quicksilver has slightly improved in price. A sale is reported at Ct. Rs. 2-4-6 per factory seer.

EXPORTS (Calcutta, Nov. 9, 1857).—The produce market has shown no great change since last week, excepting Saltpetre, which has risen, and Jute, Rice, and Seeds slightly fallen in price. Business in almost all staples has been moderate. Indigo.—The produce of the season is now coming down, and the market has opened with the first sale of the produce of Bansbarreah, Hanskolly, and Katlee concerns in Kishnaghur, at Rs. 217-8. Sugar.—A fair demand has sprung up for Bombay, and large transactions have taken place for that quarter; but there is very little doing for Great Britain and other places. The present stocks are estimated at about 10,000 bags, of which 5,000 bags are Benares, 1,000 bags Doma, and 4,000 bags Gurrpatta and Dullioah. Saltpetre.—At the departure of the mail of 22nd ultimo, supplies of this staple were also free, and stocks rather heavy, with a moderate business for Great Britain and America; but since the late advices from home, a fair amount of business has been done in our market for Great Britain, at an advance of 2s. to 3s. per md. Rice.—A moderate business in table sorts is going on for Great Britain. The qualities at present available are mixed old crop, a great portion being broken, and prices are 2 to 3 annas per maund lower. Seeta maintains its former price, but without any operation. Moonghy is arriving freely, and although a fair amount of business is going on for China, Mauritius, Bombay, and other places, price has slightly fallen. Shell Lac.—The market has improved since the arrival of the English mail, and fine quality and first marks have found buyers at Rs. 21. A parcel of Mirzapore, rather blocky, has been sold at Rs. 17-6 per maund. Native Beerbhoom is selling at Rs. 12 to 15 per maund. Oils.—Shipments of castor oil have lately taken place for Great Britain and America at full former prices. We quote present prices: Castor oil, Rs. 10-8 to 12; coconut oil, Rs. 11-8 to 12-8; mustard oil, Rs. 12-8 to 13; teal oil, Rs. 12-8 to 13; linseed oil Rs. 12-4 to 12-12 per maund. Hides and Skins.—Shipments of hides are going on actively for Great Britain, but to a moderate extent for the continent and America. Former prices are fully maintained. Skins continue to be shipped for America, but are in limited operation for Great Britain. Jute and Hemp.—There was a fair amount of business done in Jute since our last for Great Britain, but on receipt of last advices from home, operations have fallen off: a reduction of about 2 annas per maund has taken place. First quality is at present at Rs. 3-4 to 3-6, and good middling at Rs. 3 to 3-2 per maund. Scarcely anything doing in Hemp, which remains as last quoted.

MADRAS.

The LONDON MAIL of Oct. 10 arrived at Madras Nov. 8, and left Nov. 8 for Calcutta.

TREVANDRUM, Oct. 27.—The report about the mutiny here is quite unfounded. The Mohurum went off very quietly, rather unusually so, since that feast was always distinguished for hostile meetings here, as almost in every other place where the Crescent is perceptible, though dimly, over the horizon. His highness' troopers, the resident's escort, and the Quilon subsidiary force behaved most becomingly on the occasion. At Quilon a goodly number of suspicious Ghossais were apprehended, but they were liberated by order of the resident, though a few of them are natives of the Upper Provinces, where the tragedies have lately occurred. They were examined before the superintendent of police at Quilon, and most of them could give no satisfactory account of themselves. However, we may suppose there must have been good reasons for the liberation of these vagabonds, or the British resident would not have sanctioned such a measure.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.—The transport steamer Carthage left for Masulipatam late last evening, with instructions to take on from thence the detachment of H.M.'s regiment she lately conveyed there, to Calcutta. It was at first intended that this regiment should proceed to Secunderabad, when the 3rd European regiment would be pushed on to Kamptee; but the head-quarters of the 38th having proceeded direct to Calcutta, it was deemed expedient to have the whole regiment in Bengal. The Royals are to take the place of the 38th at Secunderabad; they were first allotted to Cannanore in order to relieve the wing of the 74th Highlanders, which was to be stationed at Bellary. A portion of the Royals have already reached Cannanore, and orders have been telegraphed directing them to proceed by ship to Masulipatam. The head-quarters of this regiment also went direct to Calcutta, but is now on its way to Masulipatam, from which latter station the regiment will proceed to Secunderabad.

BANGALORE NEW BARRACKS.—The long-talked-of new European cavalry barracks has at last been commenced in right earnest. The site on which it is to be built is the race-course. The foundation has been marked out, and coolies are actually cutting it. The plan and estimates for this building were framed some ten or twelve years ago, and after numerous amendments and references, it was reserved for the eventful year 1857 to see the beginning of this real desideratum for the health and comfort of our European soldiery. It is said that the building will be completed in three years. The barracks will be surrounded by a strong wall, capable of forming a good defence, should an attack be ever made upon it. We hear that when the new barracks is completed, the arsenal will be removed from the fort into the European infantry barracks, which will be improved and adapted for the purpose; while the European infantry corps stationed here will shift into the present lancer barracks.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—It is pretty generally understood that his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief will leave the presidency about the beginning of the year, on a tour of inspection, which will include all the military stations under his control, and that he will be absent on this account for a period of two years.

BELLARY.—The residents at Bellary have nobly subscribed Rs. 588 towards providing the Madras native troops now serving in Bengal with warm clothing. They intend this as a mark of how much the loyal services of our faithful sepoys are appreciated, and when it is added that those sepoys suffer much from the cold of the north-west, it is scarcely necessary to further recommend this fund to the attention of the public.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

TRANSFER OF CORNETS AND ENSIGNS.

Head-Quarters, Choultry Plain, Oct. 16, 1857.—The Commander-in-Chief directs the publication in General Orders of the subjoined extract from a despatch from the Hon. the Court of Directors to the Government of India, which has been communicated to the Government of this presidency.

Extract of military letter from the Hon. the Court of Directors to the Government of India, No. 126, dated 22nd July, 1857.*

Para. 2.—We approve of the purposed rules of which the following is a copy:—

1st. "That in the event of a vacancy in the grade of lieutenant in any corps of cavalry or infantry, in which there may be no cornet or ensign, a specified time, one month, shall be given to the cornets or ensigns in other corps to notify their wishes; and that the senior who, within that time expresses a wish to be removed, shall be transferred to the vacancy.

2d. "That every cornet or ensign proceeding on furlough shall be required to state, whether or not he desires transfer as a lieutenant to any other corps, should a vacancy occur during his absence, and that in case of his failing to register his wish to this effect the transfer shall be made independently of him, and as it would be made if the absent cornet or ensign had remained in India and had declined the option of transfer.

3rd. "That in the event of any unposted cornets or ensigns arriving after such a vacancy has taken place in any corps, their posting shall be suspended until the expiration of the month, which it is proposed to allow to cornets and ensigns of regiments in which to apply for transfer.

4th. "A printed copy of these rules should be given to every cadet on his arrival at the Presidency to which he is appointed."

ANNUITIES.—CIVIL SERVICE.

Fort St. George, Civil Fund Office, Nov. 5, 1856.—The four annuities available for the year 1857-58, have been assigned to the following gentlemen of the civil service, they being the senior applicants:—Mr. D. Eliot, Sir H. C. Montgomery, Bart., Messrs. P. B. Smollett, and T. Prendergast.

S. D. BIRCH, Secretary.

ADVANCES TO CORPS.

Fort St. George, Nov. 6, 1857.—It having been brought under the notice of Government that very great delay occurs in the adjustment of advances, the Right Honourable the Governor in Council deems it necessary to call the attention of all officers taking up advances on any account to the necessity of early adjustment of the same.

Officers are required to bear in mind that they are personally responsible for the amount, and liable to be called upon to refund any arrears remaining unadjusted, should it be proved that unaccountable or avoidable delay has taken place.

Where special advances to corps have been made for particular purposes unprovided for in the Pay and Audit Regulations, commanding officers are bound to make every arrangement for the early recovery and timely adjustment of the same.

Paymasters are, however, not absolved in any way from the responsibility attaching to them as to the necessity of using their utmost endeavours to secure the speedy settlement of outstanding advances.

* Letter dated 6th March, 1857, No. 71, Court's instructions directing that the transfer of Cornet Montgomery from the 9th to the 6th L.C. and that of Cornet Wake from the 1st to the 5th L.C. be cancelled, carried into effect, Government submit proposed rules for regulating transfers of cornets and ensigns in future.

BOMBAY.

THE LONDON MAIL of Oct. 10 arrived at Bombay Nov. 6 (per Pekin).

RELIGIOUS TOLERATION.—It having been brought to the notice of Commodore Wellesley that seamen of the Indian navy professing the Roman Catholic faith have been compelled to attend the service of the Church of England; and deeming such a practice at variance with the freedom of religious toleration, the Commander-in-Chief has directed whenever any seamen belonging to vessels of the Indian navy may object to attend the service of the Church of England, the person or persons be mustered in a separate part of the vessel during its performance.

KOLAPORE.—Ranjee Sirsoot, the ostensible leader of the mutiny here, was shot on the 6th Nov., in the Warree districts, whilst endeavouring to effect his escape, by a sepoy of the Warree corps. His body has been fully recognised.

BARODA.—We regret to hear that there has been a misunderstanding at Baroda between Brigadier Hobson and the resident, which has resulted in the removal of Brigadier Hobson from the command of the station. Colonel St. John has been appointed his successor.

SCINDE IRREGULAR HORSE.—A third regiment of Scinde irregular horse having been raised, under the authority of the Government of India, the Governor in Council has been pleased to direct that it be brought upon the strength of the returns of the army, with the same establishment as the others.

BANK OF BOMBAY.—The pressure on the money-market has again compelled the directors of the Bank of Bombay to raise their rate of discount by two per cent.; thus making the increase three per cent. within the short space of one week.

THE LATE CAPTAIN HENRY.—A subscription is at present being got up in Ahmednuggur, as a memorial to the late Captain Henry, entitled "Henry's Police Fund." It already amounts to Rs. 3,000, Mr. Tytler, the collector, heading the list with 1,000.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

ATTACK UPON THE ENEMY'S POSITION BEFORE DHAR.

Head-quarters, Bombay, Oct. 30.—From Adjutant-General of the army to Brigadier Stuart, commanding Malwa field force.

SIR,—The Commander-in-Chief has desired me to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch No. 172, dated the 23rd instant, and to thank you for the very excellent and soldier-like report therein made.

2. The result of the attack made upon the enemy's position before the town of Dhar, is highly creditable to all concerned in the operations of the day, and I am to request you will yourself accept, and also convey to the European and native commissioned, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the several arms serving under your orders, the approval of his Excellency for their zeal, gallantry, and good conduct on this occasion.

3. The Commander-in-Chief has noticed with much satisfaction the spirited charge made upon the enemy's guns by Captain Gall, with a party of the 14th light dragoons, and Lieutenant M'Donald, with a detachment of the 3rd regiment Hyderabad contingent; and has also been much gratified in perusing the statement of the energetic conduct of the sepoys of the 25th N.I. in turning and working upon the enemy's guns thus captured.

4. The practice of Captain Woolcombe's battery must have been excellent, as shown by the result; and altogether, the Commander-in-Chief has much reason to be highly pleased with this auspicious commencement of the field operations by the Malwa field force.—I have, &c.

(Signed) EDWARD GREEN,
Colonel, Adjutant-General.

NEW REGIMENT OF SCINDE IRREGULAR HORSE.

Head-quarters, Bombay, Nov. 12.—With reference to G. G. O. No. 1035 of the 4th instant, the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct that Col. J. Jacob, c.b., will be pleased to lose no time in organizing the new regiment of Scinde irregular horse. The native commissioned and non-commissioned officers are to be drawn from the 1st and 2nd regiments, the necessary promotions made to complete their number and such subsidiary orders issued and arrangements made as Col. Jacob may deem expedient, in order that the wishes of Government may be carried out without delay.

IMPORTS (Bombay, Nov. 16).—Cotton Piece Goods.—The market has remained steady during the fortnight. The stocks on hand are small; the business transacted has been limited; and, as the holders in no way show any particular anxiety to part with their goods, a favourable change may be anticipated. Grey Longcloths are in very favourable demand, and a rise in the prices may be looked for; Grey Domestic are in fair request; Grey Madapolams, 3 lbs. have advanced a little; and Grey Jaconets are scarce.

Bleached and Fancy Goods.—Bleached goods have continued to be in good demand at former prices. There has been a little inquiry for the lower sorts of Book Muslins; and Lappets are looking up. Coloured Lappets are scarce. Cotton Yarns.—These articles have improved in prices; and coloured articles of this sort have commanded very high rates. Mule Twist is in very excellent demand. Beer.—The demand continues very steady, and in wood and bottle a fair business is doing at full prices. The sales are 75 hlds. Allsopp beer, at Rs. 80 per hhd.; 16 hlds. Jeffries, at Rs. 68; 500 dozen quarts Friend's, Rs. 5½ per dozen; 250 ditto pints, Rs. 4½; 250 ditto pints, Rs. 3 per dozen.

EXPORTS (Bombay, Nov. 16, 1857).—Cotton Wool.—A further decline has taken place in the prices, which are subject to great fluctuations. The transactions during the fortnight have been to a fair extent. Oil Seeds.—The prices continue as last reported, and the demand has been unslackened. Opium.—The stock of late brought into the market has been very considerable, and the prices have gone down to Rs. 1,100 for both Indore and Mandlesir stuff.

CHINA.

The LONDON MAIL of Sept. 10 arrived at Hong Kong Oct. 26 (per Ganges).

SHANGHAI.—Information has reached us through Chinese sources that the Russians are collecting a large fleet in the Amoor, and that the letter transmitted to Pekin by H. E. Count Postiatine, as mentioned in our No. 371, contained an offer from the Emperor of Russia to put down the Chinese rebellion, by furnishing troops, provisions, &c., on condition that the Emperor of China would cede to Russia the provinces of Kirin and Helung-kwing in Manchuria, and a province supposed to be Shing-king. The possession of the two former would connect the Russian dominions with the sea-board; the western border of the first named being on the Russian empire, and the eastern boundary of Kirin being the Gulf of Tartary.—Friend of China.

CANTON.—Active preparations are being made for an attack on Canton, which, it was expected, would take place in the early part of December.

BURMAH.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT RANGOON.—On Friday, the 16th Oct., Rangoon was again visited by one of those fearful calamities with which time has unfortunately rendered us familiar enough, without abating aught of their horrors. At about two o'clock in the afternoon a fire broke out in the Strand road, and in the course of an hour or two the whole of the neighbouring portion of the town was wrapped in flames. Four blocks were almost utterly destroyed—B 1 and B 2, C 1 and C 2. In their destruction was involved that of property to a very large amount, and at least one human life was sacrificed, that of an unfortunate woman, who, environed by the flames in one of our ingeniously-constructed thirty-foot roads—along which nothing but an unusually tough salamander could pass during a fire—died a miserable death without the possibility of an effort being made to extricate her from her fearful position. To describe the origin of the fire, its progress, and its termination, would be simply to repeat the oft-told tale. It originated, it is said, through the drunken carelessness of an opium-smoker; it spread just as chance and the atmospheric currents directed it, and died away literally when it had nothing more to burn.

MAURITIUS.

His Excy. W. Stevenson, Esq., arrived at Port Louis, by the steamer Mascareignes, on the morning of the 20th September. That day being Sunday, he landed privately without the usual ceremony. The following day he took the usual oaths, and on the 22nd he announced that he had assumed the government of the colony in the following terms:—

“His Excellency William Stevenson, Esq., having this day assumed the government of Mauritius and its dependencies, in pursuance of her Most Gracious Majesty's Commission, takes the earliest opportunity of announcing to the inhabitants that it will be his earnest and continuous study to execute his Sovereign's commands with fidelity and honour, by securing the maintenance of peace and order, by upholding the rights and liberties of all classes of the people, and by promoting to the utmost of his ability their general contentment and prosperity.

“In the attainment of these important objects, his Excellency relies with all confidence in the loyalty and patriotism of her Majesty's Mauritian subjects; and it will invariably be his Excellency's anxious desire to consult and to respect their views and opinions on all measures affecting the public welfare.

“His Excellency feels assured of receiving from the servants of the Crown throughout the colony that cordial co-operation and support which it is at once their duty and their privilege to afford him.

“Given at Government House, Mauritius, this 21st day of September, 1857.

“God save the Queen!”

On the 29th his Excellency held a levee, which was very well attended; after the levee his Excellency received deputations from the Chambers of Commerce and Agriculture, and conversed a long time with the members on many various subjects which interested the two bodies. The impression he left was favourable. The Municipal Council also waited on his Excellency on the same day.—Overland Gazette.

A MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—We regret to have to mention that while the Candia was in the harbour of Port Louis, on the 12th ultimo, an accident, attended with a most unfortunate result, occurred. We learn that some passengers by the Candia—Dr. Shillito and Mrs. Shillito, Captain and Mrs. Hill, and Miss Matheson—went on shore to see the town and the cemetery. After remaining a short time, they took boat in order to rejoin their vessel, about seven o'clock in the evening. It was then quite dark, and they had not proceeded far before their boat was run into by the Government tug steamer, which, we understand, entered the harbour without lights. The boat was capsized, and before assistance could be rendered to the passengers, they remained for some time in the water, and two or three of them received severe bruises from the steamer and the boat. When at last they were rescued from their perilous situation, poor Miss Matheson was taken up senseless, and notwithstanding all that medical skill and attention could do for her, died at ten o'clock the same evening. After her death, it was found that she had been severely bruised in her side. This unfortunate event was most distressing to the whole body of the passengers, by whom Miss Matheson was held in high esteem and respect. She was only in her 22nd year. Her funeral took place the next day; and as a testimony of respect and sorrow to the young lady who had thus suddenly come to an untimely end, no less than eighty military officers attended in full uniform, as well as the whole of the passengers of the Candia. All the ships in the roads had their colours hoisted half-mast high. An inquiry was immediately made into the cause of this accident, and we learn that the commander of the tug steamer has, by order of the Governor, been suspended for six months.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

(From the London Gazette of Tuesday, Nov. 21.)

No. 1.

The Acting Adjutant-General of the Army to the Secretary to the Government of India.

Head-Quarters, Camp before Delhi, July 6.

Sir,—In forwarding, for submission to the Governor-General in Council, the inclosed copy of a report from Major-General Sir H. Barnard, K.C.B., dated the 28th ult., relative to the attacks of the mutineers on the outposts of the force on the 23rd idem, I am directed by the Provisional Commander-in-Chief to add his testimony to that of Sir H. Barnard as to the persevering gallantry and endurance of the troops engaged, both European and native, of which Major-General Reed was himself, for a portion of the day, a witness.

2. The endurance displayed by the troops throughout the whole day, under a scorching sun, and without food, the Provisional Commander-in-Chief considers to have been most praiseworthy, and well deserving the special commendation of the Government.

I have, &c.,

N. CHAMBERLAIN, Brigadier-General.

No. 2.

Major-General Sir H. Barnard to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the Commander-in-Chief, that on the 23rd instant the insurgents renewed their attack upon us; and, owing to some religious feeling, kept it up during the whole day. Knowing they had come out of the town the day before, and had not been seen returning at night, I became anxious for the safety of a valuable convoy which was to march into camp on the morning of the 23rd, and sent a strong escort to meet it. This was successful; but the convoy had scarcely arrived in camp ere my attention was called to the right or Hindoo Rao position, where, during the whole of the rest of the day, the combat was maintained. The enemy, having lodged themselves in some loop-holed houses and a serai mosque, occasioned some loss; and I regret to say Col. Welchman, of the 1st Bengal European Fusiliers, was severely wounded.

The loss on the part of the rebels was very serious.

I have, &c.

H. W. BARNARD.

No. 5.

The Acting Adjutant-General of the Army to the Secretary to the Government of India.

Head-Quarters, Camp before Delhi, July 9.

Sir,—I have the honour, by direction of the Provisional Commander-in-Chief, to forward for submission to the Governor-General in Council copy of a report, dated the 5th instant, from Brevet-Major J. Coke, 1st Punjab Infantry, who was employed on the 4th instant in command of a detachment against a body of mutineers from Delhi.

I have, &c.

N. CHAMBERLAIN, Brigadier-General.

No. 6.

Brevet-Major Coke to Major Ewart.

Camp before Delhi, July 5.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of Major-General Sir H. Barnard, K.C.B., commanding the force before Delhi, that in accordance with orders the force, as per margin,* marched at half-past two o'clock a.m. yesterday to attack the body of mutineers who had left Delhi on the previous evening.

On arriving at the junction of the roads from the city and cantonments it seemed very doubtful whether the rebels would return by the right or left bank of the canal from Allipore, I therefore sent on Lieut. Roberts by the main road to feel for the enemy, and Capt. Hodson, of the Guides, to the right bank of the canal.

I found the enemy were retiring by the Rohituck road to Delhi, but spread all over the country.

On crossing the canal a considerable body, with guns, were seen at a village about a mile from the bridge, when I at once proceeded to attack them. After a few rounds from their guns, they carried them off in the direction of the city before we could get up to them, which they were enabled to do, as they were on a road, whereas we had to advance over the open country, which was in many places a swamp, through which our guns and troops could only make their way with much difficulty.

A number of the enemy were killed who had thrown themselves into the village on our front; the rest fled in every direction. The cavalry of the Guides followed them with the greatest spirit, and succeeded in cutting up some more of the enemy.

It was useless to attempt any further pursuit, for the heat was great, and the European soldiers exhausted; I therefore returned to the banks of the canal, and allowed the men to rest under the shade of the trees.

While I was bringing the infantry back, the artillery, by some misconception, returned to camp.

During the time we were resting under the trees on the canal the enemy had collected their forces, and, coming up under cover of the canal, made an attack on the infantry. We beat them back, and pursued them for a considerable distance; but, seeing that there was a larger force collecting behind them, I withdrew the infantry and took up a position that commanded the bridge, and, as I expected they were bringing up guns, I sent into camp for artillery. Before the guns arrived, however, the enemy made a second attack, and were beaten back with considerable loss. Soon after the artillery and cavalry came up and followed the enemy, who again dispersed and fled in all directions.

* 2 guns 5th troop, 1st brigade Horse Artillery; 4 guns 2nd troop, 3rd brigade Horse Artillery; 3 companies 3rd Bengal Artillery, and No. 14 Light Field Battery; squadron of Her Majesty's 6th Dragoon Guards; squadron of Her Majesty's 9th Lancers; the Guide Cavalry; head-quarters wing of Her Majesty's 61st regiment; 1st Punjab Infantry.

I left the guns and cavalry at the canal bridge, and brought back the infantry to camp, where we arrived about four o'clock.

There were about 100 of the enemy killed in these attacks.

The Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army to the Secretary to the Government of India.

Head-Quarters, Camp before Delhi, July 17.

Sir,—I have the honour, by desire of the Provisional Commander-in-Chief, to inclose, for submission to the Governor-General in Council, copy of the order issued this day by Major-General Reed on quitting the Delhi field-force.

2. I am further to inclose, for his lordship's information, a state of the force, dated the 16th inst.

I have, &c.,

H. W. NORMAN, Lieutenant.

General Orders by Major-General Reed, Provisional Commander-in-Chief.

Head-Quarters, Camp before Delhi, July 17.

Lieutenant-General Sir P. Grant, K.C.B., having in a general order, dated the 17th of June, at Calcutta, announced his having assumed command of the Beugal army from that date, Major-General Reed has ceased to exercise the duties of Provisional Commander-in-Chief.

Major-General Reed having been recommended by his medical advisers to avail himself of a sick certificate to repair to the hills, as the only chance of recovering his shattered health, which has latterly prevented him from taking an active part in the field-operations, has made over the command and charge of this force to Brigadier-General A. Wilson.

It is with the greatest reluctance the Major-General has come to the determination to take this step, but his duty to his country must be paramount to any selfish consideration, and, being incapacitated himself for the post by disease and weakness, he has no alternative than to devolve his arduous duties upon another.

Of Brigadier-General Wilson's merits it is unnecessary for Major-General Reed to speak; his judgment, gallantry, and conduct have been conspicuous since he led his small but victorious band from Meerut up to this day.

It only remains for the Major-General to congratulate the forces before Delhi on being placed under so able a commander as Brigadier-General Wilson.

Major-General Reed takes this opportunity of requesting the head-quarters and divisional staff to accept his thanks for the great assistance received by him and by his lamented predecessor, Major-General Sir H. Barnard, K.C.B., not only in the exercise of their departmental duties, but also in the operations in the field.

To Brigadier-General Chamberlain, acting adjutant-general of the army; Colonel Congreve, C.B., acting adjutant-general, her Majesty's forces; Colonel Becher, quartermaster-general of the army; Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. R. W. P. Curzon, acting quartermaster-general, her Majesty's forces; Lieutenant-Colonel Young, judge advocate-general; Captain Norman, assistant adjutant-general of the army; Captains Garstein and Hodson, officiating deputy assistant quartermasters-general of the army; Major Ewart, deputy assistant adjutant-general, and Captain Stewart, officiating deputy assistant adjutant-general; Captain Maisey, deputy judge advocate-general; and Captain Slute, deputy assistant quartermaster-general of division,—his acknowledgments are eminently due.

The Major-General's warmest thanks are due to the whole artillery of the force, who have on all occasions behaved with conspicuous gallantry, and have ever maintained the reputation of their distinguished corps.

To Lieut.-Col. Baird Smith and the engineer department, Major-General Reed offers his most sincere acknowledgments for the valuable services they have rendered.

To Lieut.-Col. Thomson, deputy commissary-general and his assistants; to Superintending Surgeon Tritton and all the officers of the medical department, the Major-General's best thanks are due for their indefatigable and successful exertions.

To Brigadiers Grant, Longfield, Jones, and Showers, and to the gallant officers and troops, European and native, under their orders, the Major-general begs to award his tribute of admiration for their brilliant and distinguished conduct in a succession of attacks in which the enemy have on every occasion been repulsed. The behaviour of the troops has been beyond all praise.

Major-General Reed cannot forbear from recording the name of Major Reid, as having commanded the post which has been subjected to the most frequent and constant attacks of the enemy, from which they have always been driven with great loss by the able dispositions of that officer, so admirably seconded by the troops under his command, comprising parties of her Majesty's 60th Royal Rifles, and other corps with the gallant Simoor Battalion and Corps of Guides.

In conclusion, the Major-General desires to express his thanks to the officers of his personal staff for the uniform assistance he has received from them upon every occasion, and he only regrets he has not had more frequent opportunities of witnessing their distinguished conduct in the field; to Captains Lowe, Reed, and Turnbull, aides-de-camp; to Assistant-Surgeon W. F. Mactier; and to Lieut. R. C. Low, orderly officer, as well as to Lieut. W. H. Greathed, of the engineers, who acted as aide-de-camp to the General commanding from the 7th ult., besides performing the duty of field-engineer when his services were needed in that capacity.

No. 10.

Lieutenant-Colonel Macpherson, Military Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, Punjab, to the Secretary to the Government of India.

(Extract.)

Lahore, July 18.

By direction of the Chief Commissioner I have the honour to forward, for submission to the Governor-General in Council, a copy of a letter, of the 4th inst., from General Van Cortlandt, commanding Bhutteana field-force, detailing particulars of an engagement with a body of Bhutte rebels on the 19th of June.

The Chief Commissioner has already, in a letter dated (sic), referred to this affair, which is very honourable to General Van Cortlandt and the officers and men under him.

No. 11.

General Van Cortlandt, commanding the Bhutteana Irregular Force, to Colonel Macpherson, Military Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, Punjab.

Sirsah, July 4.

Sir,—With reference to my demi-official letter of the 19th of June, I have now the honour to report, for the information of the Chief Commissioner, that on the morning of that day I marched from Sohoowalla, en route for Sirsah.

2. When within a short distance of the village of Khyracka, through which the road runs, each portion forming a separate intrenched village, my suspicions of an attack were aroused by a large number of cattle being driven down on my line of march, so great that it was with difficulty the road could be kept clear. I immediately threw out cavalry skirmishers to the front and both flanks, and obtained intelligence that the village of Khyracka abovenamed, and the village of Saharun on the left, both of which are situated on the bank of the dry bed of the Guggur river, were both strongly occupied by the Bhutte rebels.

3. I accordingly detached the sowars of the Mounted Police, under Lieut. Pearce, to the left, to prevent that portion of the enemy which occupied the village of Saharun from entering and reinforcing the village of Khyracka, and formed my small force in order of battle as follows:—Jowahir Singh's troops, under Lieut. Sadleir, on the left; my two guns, under Lieut. Walcott, in the centre; and the new levies, under Capt. Bloomfield, with Lieut. Hunt, as second in command, on the right; with about twenty irregular horse entertained by me on the extreme right, and the baggage in the rear. Jowahir Singh's force was thus facing that portion of the village of Khyracka on the left of the road, my two guns were so placed as to keep the road clear and prevent the enemy going from one portion to the other; the new levies were opposite the right portion of the village, while the few irregular horse were ready to cut off any of the enemy attempting to escape across the low bed of the Guggur river to the village of Mirpore on the further bank.

4. Khyracka, like all villages in this part of the country, is very strong, each portion being surrounded by a deep ditch, with a strong embankment, and having but one gateway.

5. Having made the disposition of my force as above described, I advanced on the village. When about 350 yards from it the enemy opened fire upon me with their matchlocks from under cover of their embankments. I then directed Lieut. Sadleir to take half Jowahir Singh's force and enter the extreme left of the left portion of the village, and Lieut. Hunt, with a company of the new levies, to attack, in a like manner, the right flank of that on the right. Both officers carried out my instructions with the most praiseworthy zeal and ability.

6. The main body advanced simultaneously with those detached, a portion of Jowahir Singh's troops and the new levies protecting the guns, and the remainder, under Capt. Bloomfield, advancing directly on the portions of the village to which they were respectively opposed.

7. The embankments of both villages were taken possession of at once, the enemy, though fighting bravely, being driven back into the villages; they fought from house to house, and fired from every available cover, and in many instances our men had to remove the roofs of the houses to enable them to get at those of the enemy who were firing on us from the interior. Some of the houses, too, were fired to drive them out. Twice the men from the left village made a rush into that on the right, and were fired into with canister from the artillery under Lieut. Walcott with good effect, several being killed.

8. There was a good deal of hand-to-hand hard fighting, but after the lapse of about two hours from the first shot being fired we had gained possession of both portions of the village. Only nine men managed to escape over the village embankment towards the village of Mirpore; these were immediately pursued by the irregular cavalry on the right, five killed and four taken prisoners.

9. When both officers and men behaved alike as well and bravely, it is difficult to specify the services of any particularly; suffice it to say of the officers that they fully realized the expectations I had formed of them in selecting them, and that Capt. Robertson, superintendent of Sirsah, who was with me throughout the day, assisted me both with his advice, which his long residence here rendered particularly valuable, and by carrying instructions during the engagement.

10. Jowahir Singh's Dogras behaved most admirably, and to three of them, who most particularly distinguished themselves by acts of bravery, I gave rewards of Rs. 20 each, while the spirit and dash of the new levies would have done credit to the most experienced troops.

11. Not a man of the rebels escaped; about 250 were killed, and 18, all of whom were wounded, made prisoners.

12. My own loss, considering the position, was slight, consisting of 6 killed and 33 wounded.

13. I burnt the village on the right, and encamped on the left of the left village, facing Sarahun, so as to attend to my wounded, and, if necessary, attack that village, and others which Lieut. Pearce had been watching.

14. Subsequent to the engagement I found that between 2,000 and 3,000 men of the surrounding villages had collected, and were coming on the village of Khyracka. These arrangements were, however, disconcerted by the want of success of their use of driving cattle in our way, which they thought we would have plundered, and by the alacrity of our subsequent movements and the promptitude with which the villages were gained, notwithstanding the obstinate resistance offered by their picked men.

15. The moral effect of their complete destruction was great; the lumberdars of all the surrounding villages came in, and the villagers vied with each other in bringing water and supplies for the force.

16. In conclusion, I beg to recommend for favourable consideration of Government that pensions should be granted to the families of those men who have fallen, who, though but newly raised and quite undisciplined, fell fighting bravely for the Government whose service they had but just entered.

I have, &c.,

W. VAN CORTLANDT,
General Commanding Bhutteana Irregular Force.

No. 12.

Major-General Lloyd to the Deputy Adjutant-General of the Army.

Dinapore, Aug. 1.

Sir,—In continuation of the postscript to my despatch of the 27th ult. I have the honour to report, for the information of his Exc. the Acting Commander-in-Chief, as follows, in connection with the expedition then stated to be in the course of preparation for moving to Arrah, in view of dispersing the mutineers there assembled, as also to rescuing the European community hemmed in by them.

2. Unfortunately, the Horungotta steamer, conveying the detachments of the 37th Foot (previously reported as having been ordered upon the afternoon of the 27th inst. to land the men and a party of 50 sick within 10 miles of Arrah, for the purpose of effecting the above object), grounded after three hours' steaming, without any prospect of getting off, unless by a rise of the water, which frustrated the first-formed plan.

3. On the evening of the 28th the steamer Bombay arrived off the station on her downward passage, when it was determined to send up her and flat attached 250 men and the head-quarters 10th Foot, to be joined by the 37th detachment and Sikhs, on the Horungotta, which was afloat; the united detachment afterwards proceeded up the river to the point and for the purpose already indicated, recent information having been obtained that the European residents still hold out. Part of this plan, however, was necessarily abandoned, in consequence of the commander of the Bombay, when the time of embarkation (morning of the 28th) arrived, objecting to tugging both flats; and as means were thus wanting for sending up more than 160 of the 10th, the detachment was reduced to that number, and Capt. Dunbar detailed to command it. This officer, as senior, eventually assumed command of the entire party* destined for Arrah.

4. The steamer took the flat in tow, according to arrangement abovementioned, and arrived in good time off the place of debarkation. The accompanying report, dated the 31st ult., by Capt. Harrison, the senior surviving officer of the party, will put his Excellency in possession of the very untoward events which attended the subsequent progress of the expedition.

5. From what is apparent on the face of the inclosed report, and from information I have derived, it seems to me that this disastrous affair may be attributed—

1st. To the men commencing the land journey without previously taking food, which evidently much impaired their efficiency during the harassing circumstances in which they were placed.

2d. From the late commanding officer of the detachment, when in the immediate vicinity of the mutineers, and with the knowledge that his movements were watched,* pushing on in the dark, against the strong representation of the second in command and others of the party, and thus allowing himself to be entrapped in an ambuscade, the effects of which quite disheartened and demoralized the troops, and, combined with their physical exhaustion, led to a complete rout, defying the endeavours of the officers to restore order in progressing back to the ghaut.

I have, &c.,

G. W. A. LLOYD, Major-General, Commanding Dinapore Division.

P.S.—A report from Lieut. Waller, late acting deputy, with a party of the Bengal police battalion attached to the European detachment, likewise accompanies, for submission.

No. 13.

Capt. Harrison to the Assistant Adjutant-General, Dinapore.
Dinapore, July 31.

Sir,—It is with much concern that I have to report, for the information of the Major-General commanding Division, on the following occurrence connected with the expedition to Arrah for the purpose of relieving the European inhabitants at that station.

At 3 o'clock p.m. of the 29th inst. the steamer carrying detachments as per margin† arrived off the point of debarkation, about three miles from the main land. The party of Sikhs were detached, and shortly afterwards reached the shore for the purpose of seizing boats to enable the detachments to pass over. On arriving there, under the command of Lieut. Ingilby, 7th N.I., the party were fired upon by some of the rebels posted on the spot to prevent the seizure of the boats by us. These, however, we landed, after some shots were fired in our direction, and after about three hours and a-half the passage was accomplished.

Having formed, the detachments commenced their march towards Arrah at 7 o'clock p.m., and, with the exception of a few shots being fired at the Sikhs thrown out on our flanks, we reached without opposition a bridge distant from Arrah about one mile and a-half. This was the place where I had represented to Capt. Dunbar the expediency of halting until daylight; to which he replied he had heard from the magistrate of the improbability of our meeting with any opposition; he thought it was preferable to push on.

After advancing from the bridge about half an hour we were assailed from the embankment of a wood, on the right of the road, by a large body of the rebels firing about thirty yards' distance on the flank of the column, which at once did severe execution, and was followed up by a continued running fire that caused great destruction among officers and men. Here, I believe, Captain Dunbar fell.

The men endeavoured to gain shelter on the other side of the road, but, it being quite dark, they fell down a steep embankment (about six feet), and many men lost their firelocks. After straggling some distance the officers succeeded in re-forming the men in a field some 100 yards from the ambuscade, and took up a position for the night (it was then about midnight and very dark) in a field adjoining, which seemed to afford some protection. Here we remained until daylight, the rebels keeping up a fire during the night on our position.

We thence commenced our retreat towards the steamer, twelve miles distant. In consequence of the men of both regiments having fasted such a long time they were too exhausted and tired to act as skirmishers. However, our rear-guard and files on the flanks frequently kept up a fire until all their ammunition was expended, by which time we arrived at the bank of the river. We were compelled to march in column, the rebels pursuing us in large bodies the whole distance to the ghauts both on flank and rear; but their fire visibly slackened the last two miles. The rebels, it was supposed, were running short of ammunition and wished to reserve it.

On our arriving at the ghauts, notwithstanding the efforts of the officers, the men made a rush to the boats; immediately upon which the rebels advanced upon us, and commenced a heavy fire of musketry and two guns upon the boats, which were forsaken by the boatmen. This caused great loss, and fired one of the boats.

The remnants of the detachment gained the steamer, which I immediately ordered to Dinapore to gain assistance for the wounded.

The loss we inflicted on the rebels I believe to be small, on account of the darkness, and the men being too exhausted to fire.

The people of the country turned out against us.

I have, &c.

R. P. HARRISON, Captain,
Commanding detachment of H.M.'s 37th regt.

* 10th Foot—3 officers, 150 men. 37th Foot—7 officers, 190 men. Sikhs, Bengal Police Battalion—50 men. Sikhs, late attached to the 7th and 8th native infantry—15 men. Total, 405; 3 officers of the Company's service doing duty.

† Two sowars being seen in the distance on landing, who disappeared in the direction of Arrah.

† Her Majesty's 10th regt.—3 officers, 150 men. Her Majesty's 37th regt.—7 officers, 190 men. Sikhs—1 officer, 65 men. Total—11 officers, 405 men.

No. 14.

Lieut. Waller to the Assistant Adjutant-General, Dinapore.
Dinapore, July 31.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the Major-General commanding the station, that, hearing on the evening of the 29th that a party of her Majesty's 10th regiment was ordered to proceed to Arrah, I volunteered to accompany them. We started from here at daylight on the 30th in the steamer —, and proceeded up the river to where the flat attached to the Government steamer Horungotta was, and took her in tow, with a party of her Majesty's 37th regiment and fifty Sikhs of Capt. Rat-tray's police corps on board, the steamer Horungotta being aground.

We then proceeded to Beharee ghaut and anchored. Lieut. Ingilby, 7th N.I., then gave me command of the fifth Sikhs; Ens. Anderson, 22nd N.I., and Ens. Venour, of my own regiment, volunteering to do duty with me.

Lieut. Ingilby then proceeded with fifteen men, Sikhs of the 7th and 8th N.I., whom he had taken from here with him, to a nullah about two miles off, for the purpose of seizing the boats to cross the detachment. About twenty minutes after Lieut. Ingilby had left I heard shots in the direction of the nullah, and immediately started with my fifty men; but when I got up to the place the firing had stopped, except a few shots which were fired to stop a boat that was sailing up the river, although desired to stop. Lieut. Ingilby then crossed the nullah with his fifteen men, leaving me on the other side.

I then sent off one of my men to Capt. Dunbar, to tell him we needed no assistance, hoping I should be in time to prevent his coming with his detachment, who were cooking when I left; but they had got about half way before my messenger reached them. Upon the arrival of the 10th and 37th regiments at the nullah the order was given to cross, which took up a long time, as the current of the river was very strong, and the boats large and heavy; we had finished crossing by six o'clock p.m., and then commenced our march; except that the road was dreadfully uneven and very distressing to the feet, we had no difficulties of any kind; it was a moonlight night, and the only armed men we saw from the time we left the steamer until our arrival at Arrah were the few men who fired at Lieut. Ingilby, and who were left (so the villagers said) by Baboo Koowar Sing, to give him news as soon as we arrived, which showed, with what occurred afterwards, that they were well aware of the party having been sent against them. We arrived in Arrah about 11 o'clock (it was then quite dark, as the moon had gone down), and were proceeding quickly through the outskirts of the town in the following order:—Lieut. Ingilby a short way ahead of the column with his fifteen men; then her Majesty's 10th, followed by my Sikhs; and her Majesty's 37th brought up the rear; when, in passing by a large tope of mango trees, which Lieut. Ingilby had passed without seeing or hearing anything, we received a most dreadfully severe fire, which I heard killed a good number of our men, who, not being prepared, and the fire being so heavy and so very close to us, ran off the road into the fields on the other side, and thence commenced firing on the tope. I lost on the road the native officer, a first-rate fellow, who was shot close to me, and also some men, but how many I do not know, as we did not go near the place again. The men were dreadfully scattered, and there was great difficulty in collecting them; some did not join us till the next day, and others were dropping in all night. We then retreated to another road, and lay down behind a small "bund," which rose along both sides of the road facing the tope in which the rebels were, and which afforded a capital shelter from the fire, which was kept up at short intervals all night. It was after retreating to this bund that Ens. Anderson was killed; poor fellow; he was shot dead through the heart. We remained here during the whole night, and at daylight started back for the steamer, a distance of about thirteen miles. We were followed in large numbers by the rebels; the main body would not come within range, but they sent out a great number of sepoys (picked shots I fancy) right and left, who took advantage of every tree and inequality of the ground the whole way, and kept up, without the least cessation, a most severe fire on our column the whole march—nearly all, or a great part of their shot telling on us, whereas they were so much scattered and so well covered that they did not suffer much loss; however, although we lost a great number of men, we arrived at the ghaut with comparatively little loss to what we expected.

When we arrived at the nullah we found a number of large boats on this side, into which the men immediately rushed, and commenced trying to shove the boats across; but most of them were aground, and the others were so large that the men could not manage them, and all the boatmen had been driven away by the sepoys. Every time a man showed himself outside a boat he was fired at from the village, which was close by; and at last the men gave up altogether the idea of getting across in boats, and, taking off all their clothes, those that could swim across.

Upon getting down to the nullah Ens. Venour and I got into a boat with some of the men, and while I was shoving out the boat he tried with a rifle to shoot some of the fellows who were making a mark of me. He knocked over one, but, unfortunately, got shot himself immediately after through the thigh, and dropped. I tied up his leg as well as I could, and, getting some more help, I succeeded in getting the boat off; but the fire was so hot, as they saw a chance of our getting away from them, that I and four men left the boat and swam ashore, being fired at the whole way across. Ens. Venour also left the boat a short time afterwards, and, although wounded, managed to swim ashore. The fire from the village the whole time was most severe, killing and wounding a great number.

After those who could swim got away the sepoys first opened a most severe fire on the few who remained in the boats that were aground, and, after wounding most of the men in them, they all rushed down and set fire to the roof.

It was here that poor Lieut. Ingilby was killed, and a great number of wounded, who had been carried so far, were obliged to be left. A few escaped in a small boat, in which some Sikhs took some wounded officers across (Ens. Erskine among others), whom they brought for above five miles on a bed procured in a village. They returned a second time with the boat in despite of the fire.

Nothing could be better than the way in which the Sikhs behaved from the time I got command of them; they made themselves extremely useful in every way, and were always cool, steady, and under perfect control.

I am, &c.,

H. WALLER, Lieut., 40th N.I.

ERRATA.

In the narrative of the Siege of Delhi, published in our last issue, an unpardonable inaccuracy was committed in describing the columns of attack. The 2nd Bengal fusiliers were placed in the second column, and not in the third, as there stated; and the Kumaon battalion (250 strong), instead of being in the reserve, formed part of the third column. It was the Belooch battalion that served under Brigadier Longfield. A clerical error has also been made at p. 841: Brigadier Showers' exploit was performed on the 12th, not the 10th, of August.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON.

TUESDAY, December 15, 1857.

THE LATE PROFESSOR RAWLINSON.

THE late Rev. George Rawlinson was born on the 5th of January, 1823, and had thus barely entered on his thirtieth year, when death prematurely terminated his useful and promising career. His father was George Rawlinson, Esq., of Kurrachee, in Scinde, but formerly residing at Dan y Graig, near Bridgend, Glamorganshire. The education of the future professor was commenced at Chester under the Rev. R. W. Gleadowe, and afterwards continued at King's College. It was here that his talents, amiability of disposition, and general propriety of conduct pointed him out as the most fitting person to superintend the studies of some young Egyptians of high rank, who were at that time in London. He was accordingly selected for this honourable and responsible post by Lord Palmerston, on the recommendation of Dr. Jelf, and acquitted himself in a manner that conferred credit upon his patrons, while it secured for himself the warm and lasting esteem of his pupils. After thus winning golden opinions from all with whom he was associated at King's College, he went up to Cambridge and matriculated at Emanuel College. That he did not waste his time in idleness or dissipation, is apparent from the fact that he carried off one of the foundation scholarships, and came out in the mathematical tripos of 1854 as thirty-fifth wrangler. Though essentially a reading man, George Rawlinson was by no means, however, a mere book-worm. His heart was too large, his sympathies too human, to allow him to be petrified into a pedant. He did not live to read; but he read that he might increase his enjoyment of life, and distinguish himself from those who were content to grovel or vegetate. In all harmless and manly amusements he was ever ready to engage with a keen relish, though he never forgot that he was a Christian and a gentleman. Few men have ever been more respected by their seniors, or more beloved by those of their own age. A correct judgment, a well-regulated mind, a conscientious course of study, and a genial sympathetic disposition, could hardly fail to render him an accomplished scholar, an agreeable companion, a revered counsellor, and a universal confidant. On leaving Cambridge he was ordained, at Christmas, 1854, to the curacy of St. Mary's, Vincent-square. We know not if he was there able to devote as many hours to converse with "the mighty dead," as on the sedge banks of the contemplative Cam; but it is certain that he moved far more among living men, though chiefly among those who were in sickness, sorrow, and distress. His warm heart and open hand soon endeared him to his parishioners, and when he departed for his new sphere of utility in the East, he was accompanied by the genuine tears and blessings of those whom he had so often comforted and relieved. In the latter part of 1856, the Rev. George Rawlinson received the appointment of Professor of Applied Sciences at the Elphinstone College, Bombay. The year was about to close as he reached his destination, accompanied by his youthful bride—too soon doomed to widowhood—the daughter of W. J. Thoms, Esq., F.S.A. Hardly had he set foot on those fatal shores, when he began to direct his enlightened energy to the accomplishment of the work before him. There was no lack, indeed, of students; but of class-books there was an utter and lamentable deficiency. He therefore instantly applied himself to a compilation of a series of elementary works, and speedily produced an excellent text-book on Dynamics. At his death another was in type, and four others on various subjects in different stages of preparation. Nor, while he thus laboured for the advancement of others, did he neglect his own mental culture and improvement. In order to extend his usefulness, he became a student of the native languages, and had already made very considerable progress in the Hindustani and Malhatta tongues. The intense application, no doubt, hastened his death, which was occasioned by abscess of the liver. On the morning of the 23rd Sept. he breathed his last, and his remains were followed to the grave by a long train of mourners. If the heathen could say, "Whom the gods love, die young," far more reason have we to withhold our pity from the departed, and reserve it for his bereaved widow and sorrowing friends. Though his life was brief as men count years, he had found time to lay up treasure there where it can be neither diminished nor deteriorated. His old parishioners of St. Mary's will often render to his virtues the passing tribute of a sigh, as they sadly gaze upon the painted glass window in the east end of their church, presented by him before proceeding to the East, a memorial of mutual respect and kindness of feeling.

LORD CLIVE'S FUND.

Our readers will no doubt be glad to obtain from our columns the information respecting Lord Clive's Fund, which an expectant House of Commons was unable to extract from the President of the Board of Control. The nucleus of the fund was a legacy of five lakhs of rupees bequeathed to Lord Clive by Meer Mohammed Jaffir Khan, Nawab of Bengal. With rare disinterestedness, the "daring in war" paid this handsome bequest into the Calcutta Treasury, being credited in the books of account to the amount of £62,833. 6s. 8d. Having obtained the ready consent of the Court of Directors, Lord Clive vested this sum in trustees to constitute a fund for "the support of a certain number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and private men, in the service of the [East-India] Company, who, from wounds, length of service, or diseases contracted during their service, were unable or unfit to serve any longer, and whose fortunes might be too scanty to afford the officers a decent, and the private men a competent, subsistence in their native country; and also to make some provision for the widows of such officers and private men, as should have been entitled to the said bounty, or whose husbands should have lost their lives in the said United Company's service."

The original capital of this fund, which was named after its illustrious founder, was soon afterwards augmented by a donation of three lakhs of rupees, estimated at £37,700, from Sujah ul Dowlah, also Nawab of Bengal. The interest of this aggregate sum of £100,533 was fixed at £8,042. 13s. 4d. per annum. There was, however, another fund, known as the Contingent Fund, with a capital of £24,128, the accumulations of interest due by the Company upon cash-notes drawn from the deposits in the treasury. The interest upon this, amounting to £1,930. 4s. 9d., was appropriated to defraying all charges and expenses incident to carrying out the objects contemplated by the Clive Fund. A sum of money falling short of £10,000 was at that time actually sufficient to pay the annual pensions due to invalided officers and men, or to the widows of those who had died in the discharge of their duty. That circumstance alone will suffice to illustrate from what small beginnings the mighty Indian empire arose, and what great results may be brought about by the perseverance, sagacity, and valour of a handful of English gentlemen. It was not long, however, before these humble resources proved totally inadequate to meet the rapidly increasing demands made upon them. So early as the first year of the present century, the expenditure had already exceeded the income, and fifteen years later nothing remained of the fund but the name. Since that period the East-India Company has borne the charges arising from military-fund pensions and donations, which at the present time amount to very little less than one hundred thousand pounds a year; of which about £80,000 are paid in this country, and the balance in India. Such are the details twice asked for by Sir John Pakington, though for what purpose it is not so easy to determine. Probably the Conservative baronet hoped to pervert them into some sort of excuse for striving to subvert an ancient and honourable corporation.

HAILEYBURY COLLEGE.

It was on the 3rd of October, 1804, that the idea of a College for the special education of young men destined to the civil service of the East-India Company was first proposed by the Committee of Correspondence to the Court of Directors, by whom it was cordially approved, and referred to a Committee, consisting of the chairman, deputy-chairman, and seven directors. On the last day of February, 1805, a plan was submitted to the General Court, and accepted as to the broad outline. In June of the same year the duties and salaries of the Professors were marked out and regulated; and in September the sanction of the Board of Commissioners for the Affairs of India was finally obtained. In the following month fifty acres of land and a dwelling-house—afterwards converted into two residences for Professors—at Haileybury, in Hertfordshire, were purchased for £5,900, and in November the castle of Hertford was fitted up for the immediate and temporary reception of students. On the 15th January, 1806, the Court accepted the designs submitted by Mr. Wilkins, of Caius College, Cambridge, and—advertisements having been issued for the tender of contracts—that gentleman subsequently undertook to carry out his own plans for the sum of £50,855, to which £1,000 was afterwards added on account of the rise in the price of timber. The first stone of the future College was laid with due ceremony on the 12th of May, 1806, and the building entirely completed at midsummer, 1809, at which date the castle of Hertford was evacuated by its studious garrison. It may be observed that the present value of the property has been estimated at £93,700.

The College of Haileybury was first recognized by Parliament in 1807, but more fully in 1813, when it was ordained that the Bishop of London should ex officio be Visitor, and that no persons should be sent out to either of the three Presidencies in the capacity of "writer," who had not resided four terms in college. It was also enacted that the Board of Commissioners should always be consulted previous to the appointment of a Principal, and the Principal and Clerical Professors were exempted from residence on any benefice of which they might happen to be possessed. One of these provisions, however, was temporarily set aside in 1826, when an Act was passed, the preamble of which set forth that as a sufficient number of qualified persons to fill the vacancies on the civil establishment of the East-India Company was not otherwise obtainable, the Court of Directors was empowered to nominate to direct appointments the requisite number of young men, who should produce satisfactory testimonials as to character and conduct, and pass a certain examination before a duly-constituted Board of Examiners. Students who had resided one term at Haileybury, if they had completed their eighteenth year, were eligible for these appointments. The London Board of Examiners—as they were called—sat at Lady-day and Michaelmas, from March, 1827, to October, 1831, and passed seventy-nine candidates; 207 writers having gone out from Haileybury during the same time. The Board was composed of two Oxford and two Cambridge Professors, nominated by the Vice-Chancellor, with an annual allowance of £80 each to cover their expenses. The examinations were chiefly directed to the classics, mathematics, and history; and in 1829 a certain amount of proficiency in the Oriental languages was also required. The total number of nominations to the College since 1806, is 2,055; among whom have been the most distinguished servants of the Company, men who have achieved a European reputation. Every student was called upon to pay one hundred guineas a year; but this proved wholly inadequate to cover the expenses of the establishment, though the average annual number was eighty-two—ninety-seven being the maximum. The total annual excess of expenditure over income was upwards of £10,500, exclusive of the pension-list, which absorbed very nearly an additional thousand pounds. The salaries of the professors and assistant masters averaged £6,452. 10s. per annum, and the wages of the domestic establishment £1,838. 10s.—reduced by £250 since 1831. The Principal received £1,100 a year, besides a house and commons; the first mathematical professor, £700; the Persian professor, £600; and the others, £400 to £500 a year each, with similar advantages; the salaries of the assistant masters did not exceed £200 per annum. It is needless to observe that many of the professors of the College of Haileybury were men of pre-eminent attainments. Who is there that has not heard of Sir James Mackintosh, Professor of Law? of the Rev. T. R. Malthus, Professor of Political Economy? of William Empson, Professor of Law? of the Rev. J. A. Jeremie, Professor of Classical Literature? or of such Oriental scholars as Sir Graves Haughton, Maj. Stewart, and the Rev. R. Anderson? Under such teachers as these, it would be strange if the students failed to make considerable and substantial progress. Their minds would at least be directed into the proper channel for future application and improvement; and it is certain that no body of men of equal number have ever turned out so many excellent magistrates, administrators, and diplomatists. It may be true that a feeling of caste was induced by this peculiar system of training; but it conferred its obligations as well as its privileges. Every one felt that he had an interest in his neighbour's fame and prosperity, and in like manner feared to do aught that might bring discredit on those with whom he had been associated from his youth by the traditions of their common caste.

A new system, however, has now been introduced, but as yet it is premature to decide on their relative merits. In theory, nothing can be more plausible than the competitive system; but in actual life, theory is oftentimes proved to be far from infallible. Haileybury College has thus ceased to be an establishment for the special training of the administrators of our Indian empire. For nearly one half of a century, the practical rulers of that vast country and its myriads of inhabitants have there been educated and fitted for their future duties. From change to change the world runs on, ever experimentalizing and tentative, but usually disappointed. We trust, however, that such may not be the case with regard to the competitive system, though we cannot altogether dispel grave doubts as to its results, or refrain from regrets that a machinery which worked so well should so hastily be thrown aside.

THE "TIMES" AND THE COURT OF DIRECTORS.

THE journalistic world has been much scandalized by a fresh act of tergiversation on the part of the Times. Until very recently, that Leviathan of the press has been favourably distinguished from among the majority of its compeers by the exceedingly temperate and considerate tone in which it spoke of the Court of Directors and their general system of administration. It freely admitted the calm, dignified, and impartial line of conduct usually pursued by that intelligent and respectable body of men, and was ever ready to give due praise unto the civil and military officers employed in their service in the far East. Suddenly, however, and apparently without any sufficient cause, it assumed an antagonistic attitude, and threatened nothing short of instant and utter annihilation. It is not our purpose to investigate the causes of this strange and seemingly capricious palinodia: we merely state the fact, and do so with unfeigned regret. Fortunately, though formidable as an opponent, the Times is not infallible as a prophet. One morning its readers were electrified by the announcement—expressed without the slightest doubt or hesitation—that the double government was about to be abolished, and the Court of Directors swept into limbo. A few days later it was stated, with equal fearlessness of contradiction, that her Majesty's speech, on opening Parliament, would contain a paragraph recommending the immediate assumption of the direct government of India. The statement was made with such an oracular air, that scarcely any one questioned its authenticity. It was repeated on all sides, and believed, that a Minister for India was at once to be appointed, and a new secretariat added to the ministerial departments. The report, if not totally unfounded, was altogether premature. A ridiculous mouse has again proceeded from the parturient mountain, and the predicted earthquake has taken the form of a brief sentence, in which the affairs of India are commended to the serious consideration of the Legislature. Indeed, the principal effect of the Times' virulent opposition to the Court has been to produce a revulsion of feeling on the part of the public. The love of fair play inherent in Englishmen was shocked by the idea of condemning untried a body of men who had rendered such important services to the country. The mists of jealousy and prejudice were for the moment dispersed, and a desire to render ample justice to their patriotism and disinterestedness was very generally manifested. The most thoughtless were struck by the startling refutation of the opinions expressed by the Times during the war with Russia, which was afforded by its present attack on the magnates of Leadenhall Street. It was at that time strenuously asserted that the disasters of our army in the Crimea were caused by the incapacity of the governing classes, and the ancient aristocracy of the land was held up to ridicule, and almost to execration, as worn-out, imbecile, and frivolous. There was no hope for England, it was said, except in the middle classes; among them alone were to be found the sagacity, perseverance, and knowledge of men and things, indispensable to success in public as well as in private affairs. The acquisition and government of our Indian empire was a favourite example. There was a lasting monument of what could be achieved by industry, common sense, courage, and rectitude of purpose. That vast empire had been founded, and since then administered, by men of the middle classes. Now, however, it was proposed to take its government out of their hands and transfer it to the ranks of the very oligarchy so recently stigmatized as indolent and supercilious, sticklers for precedent, and adherents to routine. Besides, unless it could be brought home to the Court of Directors that the sepoy mutiny had originated through any neglect on their part, why should they be visited with such a summary and humiliating dismissal? If, with all their long and intimate acquaintance with Eastern affairs, they failed to prevent this unparalleled defection of their army, was it likely that a minister possessed of mere book knowledge would prove more successful for the future? It was no doubt true and unavoidable that some delay, and consequently inconvenience, might be caused by the system of double government, and the necessity of constant reference to Cannon Row; but might it not be advisable to remedy this evil by the abolition of the Board of Control, rather than by that of the India House? If some change, if some reform must be effected as a sop to popular clamour, the Constituency might very fairly be done away with, for to them is mainly attributable the vulgar notion that the natives of India are oppressed, in order that large dividends may be declared in favour of the holders of stock. The absurdity of this error has, indeed, been many a time demonstrated, but still it exists as an article of popular political faith. The only drawback to such a measure would be the consignment to insignificance and oblivion of such ingenuous, public-spirited, and large-minded men as Messrs. Jones and Malcolm Lewin. The loss of their oratorical displays might possibly disappoint and irritate themselves, but it is also possible that the nation would gradually learn to bear with the absence of their names from the daily papers.

These and such-like remarks have been called forth on all sides by the unfair and inconsiderate assertions of the Times. Never did an able advocate more damage his own cause, never did a preux chevalier more idly enter the lists, never was a more gratuitous insult offered to the common sense of a people. The conduct of Lord Ellenborough, the avowed enemy of the Court, stands out in honourable contrast to that of the leading journal. Like a true English gentleman, his lordship demands a suspension of judgment until all the facts of the case have been adduced and investigated, and refuses to condemn his old opponents until they have failed to justify themselves.

DESPATCH OF TROOPS TO INDIA.

LOOKING back from the vantage-ground we now occupy, it seems incredible that, immediately after the tidings of the Meerut mutiny reached this country, every available soldier was not instantly shipped off to the East on board the fastest steamers money could obtain. At first, however, the extent of the danger that menaced our Indian empire was very imperfectly perceived, and her Majesty's ministers confidently assured the House that the following mail would probably bring intelligence of the restoration of order and tranquillity. The same feeling of security pervaded all classes of the community, and the mighty Times patted the British lion on the mane, and bade the noble animal lay aside his kindling wrath. Everything, we were told, was done that the circumstances of the case required, and credit was taken for the prompt and vigorous action both of the Court of Directors and of the constitutional advisers of the Crown. Within the last few weeks, however, a change has come o'er the spirit of that dream. The Court of Directors are now fiercely assailed by the leading journal for having opposed the despatch of troops by the overland route, and for employing sailing ships in place of screw steamers. It little mattered to the Times that exactly the reverse was the real state of the case, and that whatever delay has occurred in sending off troops to India is entirely attributable to the Home Government. A popular clamour has been raised against the Court by persons wholly incompetent to form a correct opinion, or prejudiced in favour of an adverse one; and as Providence is said to be on the side of the gros bataillons, so is Printing-house Square always to be found in the ranks of the strongest party. In the present instance the Times has been guilty of an act of gross injustice, in the teeth of simple and ascertainable facts.

The sailing ships Arctia and Bucephalus, about which our contemporary waxeth so wrathful, were taken up on the 26th May for the ordinary relief service, though they did not actually leave the country until after news had been received of the mutiny at Meerut. That was surely no reason for cancelling previous charter-parties; and the seasonable arrival of those vessels in the Hooghly attests the wisdom of their being despatched. Immediately after the receipt of official information regarding the first successes of the rebels, the Court applied for four extra regiments of foot and some artillery, and advised that they should be sent out through Egypt. The Home Government, however, declined to act upon this suggestion for reasons of state policy, and because much time would be lost in diplomatic correspondence. More valid objections were found in the difficulty of transporting troops across the desert, in the extreme heat of the Red Sea, and in the absence of steamers to convey them from Suez to their respective destinations. Equally unsuccessful was the next proposition made by the Court—that some of H.M.'s screw steam-frigates should be employed on this urgent and special duty. State policy again interfered, on the ground that it would not be expedient to deprive the country of its "wooden walls;" and the screw steamers of the mercantile marine were recommended as better calculated for the conveyance of troops. Some difference of opinion then arose as to the superiority of steam over canvas, and it was alleged that the supply of coal at the different stations would be insufficient for the wants of a whole fleet of screw steamers; and, unless steam could be got up, it was obvious that the advantages were in favour of sailing vessels. It was therefore decided that tenders should be invited for the fastest ships of both denominations, and the greatest care was afterwards taken to select the best of each kind, without reference to cheapness. The first batch was composed of six screw steamers, and eleven ships reputed to be fast sailers. The second, intended for the transport of six regiments of infantry and eight companies of artillery, consisted also of six screw steamers, with five sailing ships; the Golden Fleece being one of the former, and the James Baines one of the latter. A third batch was taken up in August on the same principle of competition, and no time was lost in making the necessary preparations for the embarkation of troops. If, therefore, it be true that any avoidable delay has occurred in despatching reinforcements to India, the fault certainly does not rest with the Court of Directors.

SIEGE OF DELHI.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—As I perceive you have fallen into the same error as the Bombay correspondent of the Times, and—in your account of the siege of Delhi—not done justice to the Kemaon battalion of Goorkas, but placed it in reserve, I beg to point you to General Wilson's despatch, in which he mentions 230 men of that battalion as forming part of the third column, which merited his entire approbation: 50 of the Europeans, 50 Goorkas, and 50 Sikhs formed the advance, the rest following. I beg to inform you that on the 20th of last June a notice was out at Peshawar for two volunteers to take down the Kemaon battalion to Delhi, whereupon two young officers of the 51st B.N.I. rode over to Rawul Pindie, and were accepted. The battalion marched on the 22nd June, and arrived at Phillour on the 12th July, but on account of the Sealkote mutineers, they were ordered back to Jallundur, where they disarmed the 33rd B.N.I., although the Goorkas had not more than 400 men on the ground. They marched again on the 17th or 18th July, escorting eight lakhs of treasure, and arrived at Delhi Aug. 1st, being, I believe, the first reinforcements. On the 6th of August, out of three European officers with the battalion (excepting the commanding officer and the adjutant), two were hors de combat, and the subsequent services of the battalion are well known.—I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,
Dec. 7, 1857.

OBSERVER.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—DECEMBER 3.

For the third time this year Parliament has assembled for the despatch of business. The session was opened by her Majesty in person, with all accustomed pomp and ceremony. In the course of the royal speech the following allusions were made to the affairs of the British empire in the East :—

"While I deeply deplore the severe suffering to which many of my subjects in India have been exposed, and while I grieve for the extensive bereavements and sorrow which it has caused, I have derived the greatest satisfaction from the distinguished successes which have attended the heroic exertions of the comparatively small forces which have been opposed to greatly superior numbers, without the aid of the powerful reinforcements dispatched from this country to their assistance. The arrival of those reinforcements will, I trust, speedily complete the suppression of this widely-spread revolt.

"The gallantry of the troops employed against the mutineers, their courage in action, their endurance under privation, fatigue, and the effects of climate; the high spirit and self-devotion of the officers; the ability, skill, and persevering energy of the commanders, have excited my warmest admiration; and I have observed with equal gratification that many civilians, placed in extreme difficulty and danger, have displayed the highest qualities, including, in some instances, those that would do honour to veteran soldiers.

"It is satisfactory to know that the general mass of the population of India have taken no part in the rebellion, while the most considerable of the native princes have acted in the most friendly manner, and have rendered important services.

"I have given directions that papers relating to these matters shall be laid before you.

"The affairs of my East-Indian dominions will require your serious consideration, and I recommend them to your earnest attention."

The address to the throne was moved by Lord Portman, who remarked that the civil and military affairs of India were likely to engage the serious attention of their lordships, as some change in the form of government had become inevitable. With respect to Christianity, it was our bounden duty to diffuse its blessings, though the mode of such diffusion required much tact and discretion. A competent Hindoo ought, nevertheless, to be preferred to an incompetent Christian, for appointment to a vacant post. Having duly panegyrised the heroism of our fellow-countrymen in the East, and acknowledged the faithfulness of many of the native princes, his lordship vindicated the conduct of Lord Canning, and expressed his conviction that, when all the circumstances of the case were fully known, the Governor-General would be as much lauded as he has hitherto been censured.

Lord Derby complained that the Queen had not been made to allude with sufficient solemnity to the sore trials we had experienced in India. The whole of our empire there had been shaken, and for a time lost; but no words could do justice to the herculean labours and noble courage of the devoted band to whom we owe the salvation of our Eastern possessions. Lord Canning and his advisers, however, had not shown that vigour and promptitude which were absolutely required by the emergency. The Indian Government had seemed resolved to shut their eyes to the most patent facts; and the Government at home had not proved equal to the occasion. Sufficiently large reinforcements had not been sent out, the result of which has been a terrible enhancement of the loss of life. But the Government continued for a long time to assure the country that the mutiny would be crushed without difficulty, and acted with such confidence as to refuse to let our troops avail themselves of the facilities offered by the Emperor of the French and the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Packet Company for the transmission of troops to India. If, in consequence of this unnecessary delay, Lucknow should fall into the hands of the rebels, the responsibility of the butchery that would ensue would rest on the heads of her Majesty's Ministers. His lordship then proceeded to say, that in dealing with the mutineers we should consider justice and not revenge. "For every man taken with arms in his hands there ought to be a righteous punishment, and that punishment death. For those miscreants who have perpetrated unmentionable and unimaginable atrocities upon women, death is too mild a sentence. On them should be inflicted the heavier punishment—a life embittered by corporal punishment in the first instance, and afterwards doomed to the most degrading slavery. Be they Brahmins of the highest caste, they should be forced to undergo the lowest, most degrading, most hopeless slavery. But, while he would take this course, he earnestly deprecated the extension of a feeling of hostility to the whole native population. From letters which he had seen, he feared that every white man in India who had suffered in any way by the mutiny came to regard every man with a black face as his enemy.

Now, that was a feeling which should be restrained, if not by Christianity, at least by motives of sound policy. Measures should be taken to convince the natives that the English are their masters; but they must also be convinced that the English are their benefactors. We should not try to govern India by the sword alone. As to the future government of India, he could not understand what were the intentions of her Majesty's Ministers. Missionary enterprise in India should be encouraged; but any aid on the part of the Government would be a serious impediment.

Lord Granville denied that the Indian empire was in peril; but cordially agreed with Lord Derby in eulogising the conduct of both civil and military officers under most critical circumstances. His lordship defended the Governor-General from the imputations that had been cast upon him, and denied that he had ever taken any active or official part in missionary enterprises.

The Earl of Ellenborough reproached the Government with want of energy, and with the loss of time they had occasioned in sending out the troops to India.

The Duke of Argyll denied that any want of energy had been exhibited.

The Earl of Hardwicke remarked that none but steam-vessels should have been employed in transmitting troops to India.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

In the lower house the Address was moved by Mr. W. Martin, who paid an eloquent tribute of respect and admiration to the conduct of our Indian warriors, especial mention being made of General Wilson and his exploits before Delhi—of Sir Henry Havelock's judgment and determination at Lucknow—of the self-devotion and chivalrous feeling of Sir James Outram, and of the bravery of Lieuts. Willoughby, Home, and Salkeld, Sergeants Carmichael and Smith, Corporal Burgess, and the civil servants of the Government. He could not help thinking that the hand of an overruling Providence was conspicuous in all the events which had recently taken place, and that it was the consequent duty of this Government to conduct itself with such Christian energy and discretion, that at no great lapse of time—although many there might not live to see it—the whole of India might be brought under the influence of that blessed religion which prevailed in this country.

Mr. Disraeli concurred in the eulogies that had been passed upon both men and officers serving in India. That empire had been saved by the military alone. Neither the local Government nor her Majesty's Ministers were entitled to any credit for the recent successes that had attended our arms. There could be no longer any doubt that the annexation of Oude was the chief cause of the mutiny.

Lord Palmerston announced, amidst great applause, his intention, at an early day, to bring down a message from the Crown on the subject of making a provision for Sir Henry Havelock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—DECEMBER 4.

THE CARABINEERS AT MEERUT.

Lord Ellenborough read a letter from Col. Custance, commanding the 6th Dragoon Guards at Meerut, in which it was stated, that in half an hour after the first intimation of the mutiny three squadrons were ready to march, though the men were mostly recruits and inexperienced horsemen. Unfortunately, they lost their way through the misdirection of Major Waterfield, the assist. adj. gen., and did not reach the proper ground until it was dark. However, the rifles and the artillery preceded them by only a few minutes.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

BISHOPS AND CATHEDRAL ESTABLISHMENTS IN INDIA.

Col. Sykes moved for a return of the annual expenditure for ecclesiastical objects in India at the different presidencies from 1836-7 to the latest period, under the several heads of bishops and ecclesiastical establishments, number of regular chaplains, number of uncovenanted auxiliary chaplains, cost of building churches, cost of grants in aid of church-building, allowances to Roman Catholic chaplains, and miscellaneous expenditure.

EAST-INDIA MILITARY FORCE.

On the motion of Sir F. Smith there was ordered a return of the actual military force that was in India at the time of the outbreak of the mutiny at Meerut, distinguishing the several branches of the service—cavalry, artillery, engineers and sappers, and infantry, and distinguishing the troops of the Queen's service from those of the East-India Company; showing also, as far as can be ascertained from documents now in the hands of the Government and of the Board of Control or East-India Company, the stations at which the troops were, at the time of the outbreak of the mutiny, severally quartered.

TELEGRAPH TO INDIA.

In answer to Mr. Crauford, Lord Palmerston said that the Government had been in communication with that of Austria with regard to the establishment of a telegraph through Austria to India, but the terms proposed by Austria were such that they could not be acceded to, and the negotiation had come to an end. Still he had hopes that the Austrian Government would establish the proposed line, which might be used by this country. The Turkish Government proposed to establish a line from Constantinople to the Persian Gulf, which could be in communication with the Austrian line, if it was established.

EXPENSES OF MILITARY HONOURS.

In answer to Col. North, Mr. Wilson said that it was now a rule that all expenses caused by the conferring of honours on military officers should be paid by the public.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—DECEMBER 7.

ROYAL MESSAGE.—PROVISION FOR GENERAL HAVELOCK.

Lord Granville announced a message from the Crown, which was read by the Lord Chancellor as follows:—

"Victoria Regina.—Her Majesty being desirous of conferring a signal mark of her favour and approbation on Major-General Sir Henry Havelock, Bart., K.C.B., for the eminent and distinguished services rendered by him in command of a body of British and native troops in India, and particularly for the gallant and successful operations undertaken for the relief of the garrison of Lucknow, recommends to the House of Lords to concur in enabling her Majesty to make provision for securing to Major-General Sir Henry Havelock a provision of 1,000*l.* per annum for the term of his natural life."

On the motion of Earl Granville it was resolved that this message should be taken into consideration next day.

A similar communication was made to the lower House by Lord Palmerston.

THE ARMS AND PRESS ACTS.

The Earl of Ellenborough, in moving for a copy of the Arms Act lately passed by the Legislative Council of India, also a return of all licensed native and European Indian newspapers, and for copies of all letters of warning addressed to the editors of any such newspapers, said, the Arms Act, as he understood it, adhered to the principle, recently attempted to be introduced into India, of placing Europeans and natives on the same footing; of equally disarming both, when our position in India at this moment was like that of the Normans in Saxon England. We must be armed in order to protect ourselves, or, at least at times, be in a position to assume the appearance of an armed militia. His lordship then, after showing the vast difference which existed between the press of this country and the European press of India, and the necessity which drove the latter to advocate the interests of the governing classes, stated the provisions of the law restricting both. Upon the European portions of Indian journalism he considered it to be in a high degree severe and restrictive. Its penalties were excessive, and he thought that the Government would have acted more wisely in establishing a censorship which would have prevented the appearance of any objectionable articles, rather than in devising punishments which could not or ought not to be carried into effect when the mischief was done. The effect of the measure, if fully carried out, would be to deprive the English public of the Indian news, and, what was more to the purpose, prevent the Europeans in India from knowing what we thought of them here. His lordship, in conclusion, while condemning in the strongest terms the sepy atrocities, and the necessity for public vengeance on the perpetrators of those diabolical acts, said that, on the other hand, nothing should be neglected which could secure to us the confidence of the natives in India.

Lord Granville could not for a moment agree with the notion that we should keep such a position in India as in this country the Normans once held to the Saxons. Neither could he agree with the noble earl that the Arms Act was a grievance to Europeans, since the law simply required the Englishman to come forward and give notice to the magistrate of the arms he wanted to keep or carry, to enable him to do so legally. He vindicated the operation of the law restricting the Indian press from the censure which had been cast upon it, and stated that it was only owing to that law having been impartially enforced that Lord Canning and his administration of the affairs of India had been so recklessly attacked. Up to three weeks before that law came into operation there was scarcely a European in India who did not coincide with Lord Canning and sympathize with him. He quite agreed with the noble earl that no effort should be spared to secure the confidence of the natives, and he was sure that when history should pronounce its verdict upon these transactions in India its high eulogium would be passed upon Lord Canning for having resisted the pressure to put the Europeans and natives upon a different footing, a measure which would lead the whole mass of its population to regard the Government as a partisan and a violent hater of their race.

Lord Grey cordially agreed with the impartial policy of the Arms Act, which he intimated had been resorted to from sheer necessity, and to prevent a trade which might, and there was no doubt would, have been carried on between the natives and some bad Europeans, had the latter been allowed to possess arms to any extent. It was a paramount necessity that the Government should be so conducted as to secure the confidence of the natives of India, for the days of our empire there would be numbered if ever its vast population should know that our rule was inconsistent with their interests.

The Marquis of Clanricarde expressed his approval both of the Arms Act and the restrictions on the Indian press. The free sale of arms to all persons and a free press were totally incompatible with carrying on properly a civil war of such magnitude as that in India.

The Duke of Argyll deprecated further debate upon the subject at the present time, and made an eloquent defence of Lord Canning, whose leniency had more tended to check the spread of mutiny than the most severe sentence had done at the outset.

DECEMBER 8.

PENSION TO SIR H. HAVELOCK.

Lord Granville moved an address in answer to her Majesty's message, recommending the grant of a pension of 1,000*l.* a-year to Sir Henry Havelock.

After some observations from Lord Derby, who, without disparaging the services of General Havelock, called the attention of the House to the way in which Colonel Inglis had fulfilled his duties as commandant of Lucknow, the address was agreed to unanimously.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THE CALCUTTA MEMORIAL.

In reply to Sir J. Pakington, Mr. V. Smith stated that it was not intended to include in the papers on Indian affairs, promised in her Majesty's Speech, a memorial from Calcutta praying for the recall of the Governor-General, that memorial not having been transmitted through the usual channel.

PENSION TO SIR H. HAVELOCK.

Lord Palmerston, after paying a tribute to the distinguished services of the gallant officer, and a passing eulogium upon the merits of other members of both services in India, moved a resolution granting Sir Henry Havelock an annuity of 1,000*l.* during his natural life.

The motion was warmly seconded by Sir J. Pakington.

Mr. Briscoe suggested that the annuity should be continued to the next successor to the title.

After some remarks by Admiral Walcott, Sir E. Codrington, Mr. J. White, and Mr. Crossley, who thought the amount of the annuity too small, the resolution was agreed to.

In a Committee of Supply it was resolved that a supply be granted to her Majesty.

DECEMBER 9.

PENSION TO SIR H. HAVELOCK.

The report of the Committee upon the annuity to Sir Henry Havelock led to a brief discussion, in the course of which suggestions were thrown out for extending the annuity.

Mr. Gladstone observed that much value would be taken from rewards of this nature if they were suggested by members of Parliament, and that some latitude and discretion in their distribution ought to be left to the Crown and the executive government.

Sir J. Pakington said, he hoped that upon this occasion the observations of Mr. Gladstone would have no tendency to check the expression of a feeling which did honour to the House, and he strongly urged the Government to continue the annuity to Capt. Havelock.

A Bill was finally brought in by the Chancellor of the Exchequer for granting an annual pension of 1,000*l.* to Sir H. Havelock for the term of his natural life.

QUESTIONS ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Sir J. Pakington inquired what was the present state and condition of the Clive Fund, and whether it was still devoted to its original objects? He adverted, likewise, to what he thought an abuse of patronage. It had been announced that 110 infantry cadets, besides cavalry, were to be sent to Bengal in 1858, although there were 700 officers of the native army of Bengal unemployed owing to the mutiny of their regiments.

Mr. V. Smith said, the question relating to Lord Clive's Fund involved details into which he could not enter off-hand without notice. The supply of cadets for the Bengal native army was in the hands of the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, and the number of cadets referred to did not amount to half of the amount required for the army, the surviving officers being mostly of higher rank than the grade of ensign.

Questions were likewise put by Sir H. Willoughby, Mr. Hudson, and Mr. W. Williams relating to the Indian finances, which were replied to in some detail by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who said that, according to the best judgment he could form from the past, he did not anticipate any serious demand upon the Imperial finances in aid of the Indian treasury.

EAST-INDIA.—ADDITIONAL TROOPS.

Mr. Vansittart moved for and obtained an order for copies of any recommendation or despatches during the governor-generalship of India by the Marquis of Dalhousie received by the Court of Directors or by the President of the Board of Control from the Supreme Government or Commander-in-Chief in India for an increase of European troops subsequent to the acquisition of the Punjab, Pegu, Nagpore, Oude, Sattarah, Jhansi, Berar, or other districts, and the replies to the same; and also of any papers showing the number of additional troops sent.

CONVEYANCE OF TROOPS TO INDIA.

Sir J. Pakington moved for and obtained an order for copies of all correspondence that has taken place with reference to the conveyance of troops to India by way of Egypt, either between her Majesty's Government and the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, or between her Majesty's Government or the Court of Directors and the Peninsular and Oriental, the European and American, or other steam-packet companies.

LORD ELPHINSTONE AND THE OVERLAND ROUTE.

In reply to Sir J. Pakington, Mr. V. Smith expressed his disbelief of the rumour that Lord Elphinstone had offered to send steam-vessels from Bombay to Suez for the conveyance of troops, because his lordship had written to him a private letter in which he mentioned the difficulty of providing transport, as all that he could obtain was then employed in bringing back the Persian expedition. His lordship also spoke of the dangers of the Red Sea navigation at that season of the year.

THE CLIVE FUND.

In reply to Sir J. Pakington, Mr. V. Smith said that he wrote yesterday to the accountant of the East-India House to furnish him with a detailed account, in figures, relative to this fund. It had not, however, arrived when he came down to the House. As to the state of the fund, the best answer he could give was to refer the right hon. gentleman to the evidence of Sir Phillip Melville before a committee of the House, in which he stated that the Clive Fund had been superseded as to European officers by the grant of retired half-pay by the Company to a greater amount than was provided by the fund. Both the principal and interest of the fund had long been exhausted, and the pensions were now supplied by the Company.

TROOPS FOR INDIA FROM THE CAPE.

In answer to a question by Mr. Adderley, Mr. Labouchere stated, that before receiving any instructions from him, Sir Geo. Grey had despatched three regiments of infantry, two companies of artillery, and 60,000*l.* in specie, to India. He had also sent 1,000 horses, including his own. The inhabitants of Cape Town had likewise offered their horses at ordinary prices, and even proposed to do garrison duty in order that a greater number of troops might be spared.

THE OVERLAND ROUTE.

In reply to Sir J. Pakington, Lord Palmerston justified the conduct of the Government in not making use of the overland route until the summer heats had abated. The offer of the Emperor of the French to allow the passage of troops through France was not made till the 5th October, and was declined because of the difficulties of a land passage, and of embarking and disembarking troops with arms and baggage.

PENSION TO SIR H. HAVELOCK.

Sir Henry Havelock's Annuity Bill was read a second time, after a discussion in which the title of the gallant officer to a higher reward was strongly urged.

DECEMBER 11.

PUNISHMENT OF THE INDIAN MUTINEERS.

In reply to Mr. A. Mills, Mr. V. Smith stated that the attention of the Government had been drawn to the desirableness of transporting to our West-India or other colonies, such of the mutineers as had not been actually guilty of murder. But nothing could be done without the consent of the colonies themselves, the East-India Government having no power to send convicts to any penal settlements beyond the limits of their own jurisdiction.

PROPERTY DESTROYED IN INDIA.

Mr. V. Smith, in answer to an inquiry by Mr. Blackburn, said that no decision had been arrived at as to the compensation that might be demanded for property destroyed by the mutineers.

THE CALCUTTA MEMORIAL.

In reply to Mr. Wyse, Lord Palmerston explained that the rule was, if any complaint was made against a Governor abroad, that the memorial should be transmitted through the Governor, with his observations, in order that the Government at home should be in possession of the whole matter. He had thought it his duty, therefore, to return the memorial in question to those who had forwarded it.

THE KING OF DELHI.

Mr. Horsman inquired whether it was true that the King of Delhi had received a promise that his life should be spared, and, if so, the reason and the authority.

Mr. V. Smith said orders had been given for the trial of the king, but as Captain Hodson, at the time of his arrest, did promise him his life, it was impossible to depart from that pledge. Orders had been given that he should be taken down to Allahabad previous to his being sent out of the country.

PENSION TO SIR H. HAVELOCK.

Lord Palmerston, in intimating his intention to move the postponement of the order for the committal of Sir Henry Havelock's Annuity Bill, stated that the Government proposed to give effect to the wishes of the House, and to extend the annuity to two lives instead of one. A fresh resolution would therefore be required.

DESPATCH OF TROOPS TO INDIA.

Mr. S. Fitzgerald complained that sufficient energy had not been exerted by the Government in sending troops overland to India—than which, he said, nothing could be easier—whereby they might have arrived at the scene of action a month earlier than they did, and the course of events might then have been different.

Mr. V. Smith justified the conduct of the Government, and insisted that, taking into consideration the difficulties to be encountered, the negotiations and previous arrangements required, there had been no loss of time, while the health of the troops had been better secured by a sea voyage. He explained likewise the reasons why sailing vessels had been employed in their conveyance, instead of screw steamers.

Sir J. Pakington was of opinion that her Majesty's Government were deeply responsible for their supineness and neglect in not sending military succours to India at an earlier period, sufficient warning having been given them.

HOUSE OF LORDS, DECEMBER 12.

LORD CANNING AND SIR COLIN CAMPBELL.

Lord Panmure took occasion to give a formal contradiction to the current rumours of a misunderstanding between the Governor-General and the Commander-in-Chief of her Majesty's forces in India. In confirmation of his statement the noble lord read the following extract from a letter written by Sir Colin Campbell to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, on the 26th October, 1857, before quitting Calcutta to take command of the forces engaged against the mutineers:—

"Now that I am on the point of leaving Calcutta, I would beg, with the greatest respect to the Governor-General, to record the deep sense of obligation I entertain towards his lordship the Governor-General. Our intercourse has been most cordial, intimate, and unreserved. I cannot be sufficiently thankful for his lordship's confidence and support, and the kindly manner in which they have been afforded, to my great personal satisfaction. One at a distance, not acquainted with the ordinary mode of transacting business in this country, could hardly estimate the gain to the public service which has thus been made. But I now allude principally to my own feelings of gratitude."

REGISTRATION OF LETTERS AND PACKETS OF PRINTED PAPERS FOR CERTAIN BRITISH COLONIES.—On the 1st January next, and thenceforward, a letter or a packet of printed papers addressed to any of the undermentioned British Colonies may be registered on the application of the person posting it, provided the postage, together with a registration fee of sixpence, be paid in advance:—St. Helena, Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Mauritius, Ceylon, South Australia, and Western Australia.

FINAL CLOSE OF THE EAST-INDIA COLLEGE AT HAILEYBURY.

Monday last will long be remembered as the day on which the East-India College, at Haileybury, finally closed. Technically, it was the day appointed for closing the second term for the year 1857; but with this term Haileybury ends its long and useful career.

A deputation from the Court of Directors of the East-India Company visited the college, as usual, for the purpose of receiving the report of the Principal, and of distributing the medals and prizes awarded to the successful competitors in the various branches of Oriental, classical, and European literature. A special train left the Shoreditch station of the Eastern Counties Railway, at half-past ten o'clock; and on the arrival of the Directors and visitors at Haileybury, the distinguished party proceeded to the lodge to pay their respects to the Principal (the Rev. H. Melvill). The Directors then proceeded to the council-room, where they received the following highly satisfactory report of the Rev. the Principal:—

"The Principal has much pleasure in stating to the Hon. the Finance and Home Committee, that the students remaining in college have manifested a laudable anxiety to make the last term memorable; and that, with a single exception, they have all displayed a higher degree of proficiency than is required by the statutes in order to the being qualified for departure from India. Of the thirty-eight students, who have been subjected to examination, none have failed; thirty-two have obtained the rank of 'highly distinguished,' and five have passed with 'great credit.'

"The Oriental Visitor remarks, that, in the Oriental departments, the students retain the character which they have borne from their first admission into college. A fair proportion of them manifest more than ordinary talent and application, though a considerable number fall rather below the average in both particulars. They all seem, however, to have been sensible of the necessity of preparing themselves for their final ordeal, and have exhibited, during the past term, more than usual industry in their Oriental studies.

"The professors in the European departments bear a similar testimony to the general industry of the students. It has been found necessary to multiply the prizes, in order to a due acknowledgment of ability and application.

"It is to be observed that there are six students not included in the fourth term, inasmuch as, from one cause or another, they had not previously kept three terms in college. The Principal gave notice to these gentlemen at the commencement of the present term, that he should require them to pass the final examination, and that he should expect their general conduct, throughout the term, to be such as to afford him satisfaction. These conditions having been complied with, the Principal is prepared, under the provisions of the Act of Parliament for the abolition of the college, to grant these gentlemen a certificate, enabling them to proceed to India.

"The Principal has much pleasure in being able to add that the term has, on the whole, been passed in great good order. There have been no serious violations of discipline: the rules and regulations of the college have been carefully and cheerfully attended to by the large majority of the students; and the Principal and professors send their last contribution to the Civil Service of India, in the assured belief that there are many in the number who, though the college is destroyed, will make its memory live in the services which they render to the State.

"HENRY MELVILL, Principal.

"East-India College, December 7th, 1857."

The deputation then proceeded to the library, where the visitors and students had already assembled. The chair was occupied by Ross Donnelly Mangles, Esq. M.P. Chairman of the Court of Directors. On the chairman's right sat the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of London, and the Rev. the Principal (H. Melvill, B.D.); and upon his left sat the members of the deputation, Sir Frederick Currie, Bart.; Sir Henry Willock, K.L.S.; Elliot Macnaghten, Esq.; William Joseph Eastwick, Esq.; and John Harvey Astell, Esq.

Amongst the visitors present were:—Sir John H. D'Oyly, Bart.; Sir Minto Farquhar, Bart. M.P.; T. P. Nisbet, Esq. M.P.; W. T. Copeland, Esq. M.P.; Rear-admiral Carnac, Colonel J. C. Plowden, Geo. J. Bosanquet, Esq.; Maj. Palmer; R. B. Allen, Esq.; Mr. Alderman Humphrey, W. Strachey, Esq.; Rev. T. Beames, C. A. Saunders, Esq.; Rev. W. Kemble, J. D. Dickinson, Esq.; Revs. E. E. Rowsell, E. F. N. Rolfe, J. Olive, R. W. Morice, Capper, and J. Harding.

The following members of the Indian Civil Service, on furlough and leave, were also present:—W. S. Q. Quintin, Esq.; C. B. Quintin, Esq.; J. A. Craigie, Esq.; Rivers Thompson, Esq.; J. M. Erskine, Esq.; E. B. Foord, Esq.; C. A. Daniell, Esq.; A. Colvin, Esq.

Mr. Hooper read the following list of medals, prizes, and other honourable distinctions, obtained by the students:—

Medals, Prizes, and other Honourable Distinctions of Students leaving College, December, 1857.

Bernard, highly distinguished; with medal in law; medal in Hindustani; prize in mathematics; prize in Sanscrit; prize in Persian; and prize in Hindi.
Hutchins, highly distinguished; with medal in mathematics; medal in Sanscrit; medal in Telugu; prize in political economy and history; and prize in law.
Temple, highly distinguished; with medal in political economy and history; and prize in Hindustani.
Beames, highly distinguished; with medal in Persian; prize in classics; and prize in Sanscrit.
Elsmie, highly distinguished; with prize in mathematics.
Garrett, highly distinguished; with prize for the best English essay.
Elliot, highly distinguished; with prize in Telugu.
Middleton, highly distinguished; with prize in Sanscrit.
Burney, highly distinguished; with medal in classics.
Lang, Hathaway, Pellew, Pritchard, C. Grant, Bell, Willie, Craigie, T. Grant, Middlemass, Oliphant, Mangles, Carnac, Park, Kaye, Humphrey, Lyall, Alexander, Maclean, Saunders, Graham, D'Oyly, Copeland; highly distinguished.
Kemble, Daniell, Farquhar, Hunter, Smyth; passed with great credit.

Mr. Garrett then read his prize essay on "The Influence of the Supremacy of the Sea on the Civilization and Power of the Nations which have possessed it." Taking a rapid glance at the great empires of antiquity, the essayist showed that few nations, although in the possession of extensive territories and vast military power, had attained to permanent power or civilization, unless by achieving a certain amount of maritime supremacy: while petty states, favoured by their command of the sea, had risen into political consideration. Phoenicia was more prosperous and stable than Persia, to whom she was nominally subject, and Tyre long survived the empire it had sustained. The empire of the sea was the source of the political influence of the Italian republics in the Middle Ages, and had laid the foundations of the vast power wielded by England. Free political institutions were conservative of national power; but maritime power was favourable to the development of national freedom, because maritime power involved enterprise, and enterprise fostered the growth of a class which was naturally favourable to free government. So that, directly and indirectly, by its reflex action on national character and institutions, maritime power was the source and the preserver of national power and independence. Phoenicia was the freest nation of its age, and Athens enjoyed more liberty than Sparta. In the Middle Ages, the States which refused to subject themselves to the tyranny of priests or kings were those whom commerce had emancipated; and, if in Spain naval enterprise was not the nurse of political and social freedom, the result was exceptional, and must be attributed to the same inherent inaptitude of the Spanish people which had precluded them from maintaining the maritime supremacy they once enjoyed. The essayist next proceeded to show how maritime supremacy had contributed to civilize nations, by extending the taste for, and the knowledge of, the fine arts and the useful arts, illustrating his argument by apposite allusions to the history of the earliest times and of our own. In conclusion, he remarked that maritime supremacy brought with it duties and responsibilities. Nations, like individuals, had their probation time of power, and if they neglected their duty, having no hereafter, could expect nothing but the speedy retribution of national disaster, humiliation, and decay. Every wave that bore our fleets onward proclaimed that they were not intended to be the mere instrument of national greatness, and called us irresistibly to extend the benefits of law and order, of civilization and Christianity, to lands still uncivilized and un-Christian. (Cheers.)

Mr. Beames read a passage from Frazer's Travels in Khorasan, translated by himself into Persian.

Mr. Hutchins read a passage from the Autobiography of Lutfullah, translated by himself into Telugu.

Mr. Bernard read a passage from Grant's History of the Maharrattas, translated by himself into Hindustani.

Mr. Hutchins also read a passage from the Merchant of Venice, translated by himself into Sanscrit verse.

The medals and Prizes were then presented to the successful students, who, on advancing to receive them, were warmly cheered by their fellow-students.

The Chairman congratulated Mr. Bernard on the high honours he had obtained. He also congratulated Mr. Hutchins, remarking that he had run Mr. Bernard so hard, that it was difficult to decide which of them was best entitled to take first rank.

Mr. Hooper read the classification of the rank of Students leaving College, as follows:—

Final Rank of Students quitting College, December, 1857.

BENGAL.

1st Class.—Bernard, Elsmie, Lang.
2nd Class.—Craigie, Mangles, Oliphant, Lyall, Saunders, T. Grant.

MADRAS.

1st Class.—Hutchins, Garrett, Hathaway, Pellew.

The Chairman rose and said: Gentlemen,—This is a somewhat melancholy occasion upon which we are met, and I feel that I have a painful duty to perform; but it is due to you to say, that the report of the Principal and professors of this college shows that you have done your utmost during the term that is past to mitigate the regret we feel in parting at once with you, with those around us, and with this college. (Cheers.) Your conduct during the term is reported to have been excellent; you have applied yourselves diligently to your studies—so diligently, indeed, that I am happy to think it has been thought due to you that a larger number of prizes than usual should be given, in order that merit should be fairly rewarded; and generally, it may be said, there is reason to hope that the last term of this college has been one of the best, if not the best, that has been passed since its establishment. (Cheers.) The college, therefore, does not close with discredit. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, it is with deep regret I announce to you that this is the last time we shall meet in this place and for this purpose. I regret it on private and on public grounds. I regret it deeply on personal grounds, because it is a remarkable fact that, as I am the first chairman of the East-India Company who was educated within these walls, so I am the last who ever may address any assembly here in that capacity. I regret this, because I feel that I owe a deep debt of gratitude to the system of education pursued in this college. (Cheers.) I came here from one of the largest public schools in England—an idle boy, I fear; and it was within these walls that the first stimulus to application was given to my mind. The system of education pursued here—the examination and prizes—were calculated to excite a strong feeling of emulation, and they excited a feeling in my breast which I never experienced within the walls of Eton. (Cheers.) But I feel still more deeply upon public grounds the painfulness of the task which devolves upon me; for I am persuaded it is to the intellectual activity, and to the stimulus which has been given to the mind by the studies pursued at this College, that we owe much of that force of character, those habits of application, and that high public feeling, which have been exhibited by those distinguished members of the civil service—not few in numbers—who have at all times rendered eminent services to the Government of India; but whose conduct during the terrible crisis, which is now, as we hope, passing away, has excited the admiration of all observers, even of those least friendly to England and the English, and which has reflected equal honour upon them and upon the country they serve. (Cheers.) I cannot, upon the present occasion, refrain from alluding to the high honour which has been conferred upon the civil service during the crisis we are now passing through. I may well speak humbly after the words which have fallen from the lips of the Queen in reference to that service; words in which she has coupled the civil servants of India with their military brethren. And they may well be united; for they have stood shoulder to shoulder with them in many an engagement, and have besides shown throughout the Indian mutinies the high civil courage that is more rare and more valuable than that mere military courage which, I hope, is common to our race. (Cheers.) I should like on the present occasion to make mention of some of those former students of this College, and admirable servants of the State, who have distinguished themselves during what I hope I may describe as the late crisis of affairs in India. And first, let me pay a just tribute to the memory of a valuable friend of mine, now unhappily no more, who died in the discharge of his duty, not indeed upon the field of battle, but whose death was solely to be attributed to the scenes through which he passed—I allude to my late distinguished friend Mr. John Colvin, Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces. A more high-spirited public servant, or a man more single-hearted, more devoted to his duty, or more hearty and zealous in advancing the interests of the people committed to his charge and the honour of the Government he represented, never existed. (Cheers.) In him the Government of India has sustained an almost irreparable loss: for when these disturbances are over, I know of no man who can take the place of Mr. Colvin in reorganizing the North-Western Provinces. (Cheers.) The next, but one who ought to be named second to none, except, indeed, it be to Mr. Colvin, is Sir John Lawrence. (Cheers.) How can we speak in adequate terms of this great and devoted man, who, under God's good providence may well be called the saviour of India! (Cheers.) More to him than to any other individual—more than to thousands of others—do we owe the victory obtained at Delhi, and the safety of the whole North-Western Provinces. It is not only that Sir John Lawrence sent troops from the Punjab, and that he used almost superhuman efforts to this end; but what is more than all this is; that his government of the Punjab for years past had been such as to enable him to accomplish these results. If his government had not been equally just and firm; if he had not won for himself the affection and respect of the people by his justice and his firmness, he would never have dared to denude that great and newly conquered province of troops, as he has done; and if he had not done so, Delhi would not yet have been reduced. (Cheers.) The power and influence he had acquired over those Sikh troops was one of the most marvellous circumstances which the recent crisis had developed. It was related that one of the Sikh officers who was fighting on our side at Arrah, has seven or eight British wounds on his body, which he received in previous conflicts, whilst fighting against us; and yet this man was now fighting on our side with the greatest fidelity and courage. Many other instances of promptitude and courage on the part of the civil service may be mentioned. The conduct of Mr. Robert Montgomery in disarming native troops at Lahore, at the very commencement of the mutiny, greatly contributed to check the spirit of revolt in that quarter, and to save the Punjab to us. If those troops had been allowed to mutiny, with arms in their hands, there is no telling what might have been the result. Mr. Greathed, whose loss at Delhi, we have to deplore, is another distinguished officer who was educated at this place. Amongst others who have also fallen, there are none perhaps more to be regretted than Mr. William Moore, who went out very lately from this college, and who was the son of a late colleague of mine. I have seen letters from two persons, written entirely without concert, in both of which the opinion is hazarded that, if he had lived, he would have been governor of the North-western Provinces. That young man was basely murdered by men whom he endeavoured to conciliate. But I must not forget, speaking in the presence of the Lord Bishop of London, whose near relative he is, to speak of my young friend Mr. Herwald Wake. This young man, altogether untried in such scenes, knowing nothing of war, and having nothing but his native energy and resolution of character to aid him, by his skill and address, at the siege of Arrah, kept at bay the mutinous troops, and succeeded in escaping, with his own life and the lives of those about him, from the fearful perils to which he had been exposed. I may mention also Mr. George Ricketts, who gallantly endeavoured to stop the flight of the mutineers escaping from the Panjab to Delhi. Gentlemen, this is the sort of stuff of which the Civil Service of India is made (cheers). I call upon you to emulate these great examples (cheers). Let me also say that I intend to propose to my colleagues to erect a tablet in your chapel to the memory of those of the Civil servants of India, educated at Haileybury, who have fallen in this atrocious mutiny (cheers); and I trust it will go down to the latest posterity as a memorial of their deeds, and of the gratitude, not only of the East-India Company, but of the country, for their services (cheers). Again, gentlemen, I call on you to tread in their steps and to emulate their efforts. But I must not conceal from you that you have a harder and more difficult task to perform than any which fell to the lot of your predecessors prior to the breaking out of the mutinies. Up to the time of the outbreak there was, or appeared to be, confidence and goodwill between the governing race and the millions they governed. There was trust on both sides, and we know that apparently, in many instances, there was affection as well as confidence. But now, unhappily, that charm has been destroyed; and for many years to come there must exist strong mistrust and suspicion, if not more bitter feelings between those who rule and those who are subject. It is impossible that it should be otherwise, after the scenes which have been passed through, the treacheries and murders—and worse than murders—that have been rife throughout the land. But, gentlemen, you are bound to struggle with those feelings and subdue them. It will be your duty to remember that only a small part—an infinitesimal part—of the population of India have been engaged in these frightful and scandalous outrages. The perpetrators have been almost exclusively the sepoys, felons escaped from the gaols, the scum of the great towns, together with some of the predatory tribes, plunderers by hereditary habit (cheers). The great body of the population, from the highest chief down to the meanest ryot, have shown the utmost fidelity to the Government, and the most compassionate feelings towards English fugitives from violence. The Maharana of Oudipur, chief of the Rajpoot princes, has shown unwavering fidelity, and protected our fugitives, fed them, and sent them away in safety, with money to defray the expenses of their journey. The Maharajahs of Gwalior and Holkar have equally shown their attachment to our rule; while many inferior chiefs, many zemindars, and persons in humble life, have protected and aided our fellow-countrymen. It would, therefore, be most unjust to bring the charge of treachery against the whole people of India. It will be your duty, under these circumstances, to struggle against the suspicion and distrust which have been engendered by recent events, and to endeavour to win the affections of the people over whom you are called upon to exercise power. If we cannot govern India in that way, we ought to give up the country and come away. If we are to govern India at all, we must continue to govern it for the people of India, and, to a great extent, by their instrumentality. Therefore I desire to impress upon your minds, as the last lesson you will receive before leaving these shores, that it is your bounden duty to attempt to govern the people through their affections, and not through their fears (cheers). You could not govern them by fear alone, if you would; and it would be a horrible process, if it were possible. But we cannot have a considerable British army stationed in every part of India, to repress and overawe; and therefore we must govern them by winning their confidence and goodwill. The task may be an arduous one, but it must be achieved (cheers). I now turn, gentlemen, to another topic, of less importance, but still of very high interest to me. It is my duty to point out to you that you are the last representatives of this college, and of the system of nomination to the Civil Service of India. When you enter upon that service, you will be subjected to competition with gentlemen older than yourselves, educated in other institutions, and who enjoy the distinction of having gained their appointments entirely by their own merits. I pray you then so to conduct yourselves, as to do honour to the system pursued at Haileybury, and no discredit to those who have nominated you (cheers). Apply yourselves diligently to the study of the native languages, the character of the people, and the laws which you will have to administer; and devote yourselves to acquire a general knowledge of your duties, like men who feel that, while they have had an advantageous start in the great race of life, they must depend upon themselves for their eventual position in that race. I can hardly venture to say a word on another and more important topic in the presence of the right rev. prelate who I know will address you after I have spoken, except to express a hope that the vital doctrines of that faith in which you have been brought up, will not be forgotten in that distant land to which you are going. In the hey-day of youth and animal spirits, you may be tempted to rely upon your own strength; but believe me that in sickness, in solitude, in trials, and in dangers, you will feel that you need the strength of a stronger arm to support you. What support that arm has given to many of our fellow-countrymen, the records of the late disasters in India abundantly testify. God has, indeed, been a refuge and a present help to them in their time of trouble, and He will be so to all who approach Him through the mediation of His Son. There is one other topic of importance to which I must direct your attention. I entreat you to keep up your correspondence with your friends at home. Believe me that a regular correspondence with your mothers, sisters, and those whom you love at home, will be of great value to you; it will quicken you to exertion, and maintain unimpaired your affection for your native land, so that when you return, you will be surprised to find so few links of the chain which bound you to your country and your family are broken. (Cheers.) It now only remains for me to bid you an affectionate farewell. You are going out as the last representatives of this College, which has rendered such great service to India, by sending out men fitted to govern her. The names I have mentioned are but a few of those I might have enumerated, who have done honour to this College, and who have shown what sort of men this College is able to produce. I call upon you not to fall short of them. You have a greater and more arduous task to perform than they: you have to struggle against difficulties which did not assail them. You have to conciliate estranged affections, to bind up wounds which must remain open for years to come,—to pour balm into them; and, I hope, to knit together once more in the bonds of mutual confidence and affection the conqueror and the conquered. (Cheers.) In your presence I desire to take leave of the Principal and Professors of this College. Words are inadequate to express my feelings in taking leave of this Institution, and by this I mean not these walls, but those who have been the animating spirit of this place,—the Principal and the Professors. I take a hearty and affectionate farewell of them. In the name of myself and of my colleagues I thank them for the services which they have rendered to the East-India Company and to the country, by the efficient manner in which they have conducted the studies of this place. They have sent out to India admirable representatives of England, and of the system pursued at this College,—men who have extorted the praise of those in this country who were not favourable to the East-India Company, and of foreigners who were not very favourable to England. For these men—for all that has been done by them—we are mainly indebted to the gentlemen whom I see around me,—the Principal and Professors of this College. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, I wish you all prosperity in the land to which you are going, and them in whatever walk of life their footsteps may be directed to. I wish you all—most heartily—farewell. (Loud cheers.)

The Bishop of London (who attended the College in performance of his duty as "Visitor," for the first and last time to-day), then rose and said,—After the address you have just heard, there remains very little for me to say. The gentleman who has just addressed you is able to speak with an intimate acquaintance with this institution, acquired through his being a pupil in it, and with an intimate acquaintance with India, acquired during his residence in that country. I am altogether a stranger to both. My office begins to-day and ends to-day. But, though coming as a stranger, I am glad to find myself introduced to faces not unfamiliar to me elsewhere. What I always found to be true, is proved to be true on this occasion,—that those who conduct themselves well in one department of learning are pretty sure to do so in other departments; and amongst those who have distinguished themselves this day in languages of which I know nothing, and in subjects with which I am more familiar, I was glad to find names which were familiar to me at Rugby and Balliol. (Cheers) There are circumstances which make it a more serious thing than usual, to leave Haileybury this day. It is always a melancholy thing to do something for the last time. You leave to-day, and there is no one to come in your place. Without expressing an opinion as to whether it is wise that Haileybury College should cease to exist, I may say that, looking back to what this institution has been during the last fifty years, we have seen that it has played no inconsiderable part and performed no unimportant task during that period. (Cheers.) It has certainly acquitted itself well. Without referring specially to services which have been rendered to India, I am entitled to say that both literature and science are deeply indebted to this institution, and that names connected with political economy, with law, and more especially with Eastern literature, will long keep alive in this country the remembrance of what Haileybury has done. I, as a stranger, may give my full testimony to the universal impression prevailing throughout the country of the admirable way in which those who had been educated at Haileybury had performed their duties in distant India. I may say that India is the noblest field which men of talent and energy can occupy. It always was so, and it is more so now than ever. You are going out to India at a time when the eyes of the whole civilized world are fixed upon you. You are going out, not only to perform the ordinary duties of the civil servants of the East-India Company; but you will, perhaps, have thrown upon you duties which are rather military than civil, and to these, permit me to say, will be added somewhat of the duties of the Christian missionary. You go forth at a time when the civilization of the East seems somewhat in peril: there is hardly a man in England who does not feel that if the British empire in India fails—if it is not sustained in its integrity—civilization goes to the ground. You, therefore, go forth at a time of urgency and peril, when your country commits to you a most serious mission. You will have to re-establish that which appears to be shaken: you, as much as those who first went out to India, will have to fight in the vanguard of the forces of civilization, and to prepare the way for the coming of our Lord and His kingdom. I say, therefore, that virtually you go out as Christian missionaries. This is no exaggeration; for as much good may be done by you in the discharge of your civil functions, and in your own proper sphere, in showing the influence of Christianity on your lives and conduct, as by the direct exertions of the devoted men who go forth as missionaries. (Cheers.) I trust that the words you have heard from the chairman this day will be deeply impressed on your minds, and that they will find an echo in your hearts; so that, when in the future, you look back upon this place, upon your old friends who were educated here, and indulge in that esprit de corps which is the natural and useful result of such associations, you may record among your other remembrances that very heart-stirring address, to which you have listened on this the last day of the college at Haileybury. (Loud cheers.)

The directors, professors, and visitors then left the library, and, after a brief interval, proceeded to the examination hall, where an elegant luncheon was served.

At the close of the repast,

The Chairman rose and said,—It was customary upon these occasions to give one toast, and only one, and this was a rule it would not become them to depart from. It was impossible to feel anything like spirit upon an occasion when they met for the last time; nevertheless, they must not fail to do honour to those who had so well performed their duty in connection with this establishment. It was a poor tribute they could pay to them, but let them pay it to them with sincerity and with heartiness. The toast he had to propose was the health and happiness of the Principal and Professors. (Cheers.) He would not detain the company by repeating what he had so recently said in the library. No words that he could use could express the feelings of respect he entertained towards those gentlemen; no words could go beyond his feelings of regret and distress that this was the last time they would meet here together. Haileybury had well performed its functions, and ended its career with honour. He entertained no doubt that the men of this last term would endeavour to tread in the footsteps of their predecessors, and to do honour to the place of their education. The civil service would henceforth be recruited by different means; but he felt confident that by no process—by no mode of examination that could be devised—would they produce abler, more honest, or more high-principled men, than many that had gone out from this college. (Cheers.) For all this they were indebted to those who had conducted the education pursued within these walls. He therefore proposed, with extreme feelings of emotion, and with the deepest regret that they were about to part, the health of the Principal and Professors of Haileybury. (Much applause.)

The Rev. the Principal, who, on rising, was received with a burst of applause, said—I trust that I may be allowed to be brief in acknowledging the kindness shown to myself and the professors. I cannot attempt, I have not the heart to attempt, to say much on an occasion, which—to us, at least—is very trying and mournful. I do not at all exaggerate in using these words. For, however generously we may be dealt with, and whatever other prospects in life may open before us, trying and mournful it must be, trying and mournful it ought to be, that a connection should be dissolved which has subsisted through so many years, subsisted with great advantage to ourselves, and not—we venture humbly to hope—without some advantage to India. (Applause.) But, though I cannot say much, I may, and I must, express the deep sense of gratitude which we all entertain towards the East-India Company, for the great and unwearied kindness which we have received at their hands. They have been to us the most gracious and considerate masters—I only wish we had been more deserving servants: but we have done our best; and I now ask pardon for all our deficiencies. I have also to express our earnest and unfeigned hope that the new system, whose operation sweeps this College away, may prove itself as good as the old. I ought perhaps to have said, may prove itself better than the old. And, gentlemen, if I did not say it, it was not from any cold or niggardly feeling. But when I think what the civil service has been, when I remember what the civil servants have done, amid those fearful outrages which have darkened and devastated India, indeed I feel that this is a mighty and comprehensive wish, that the system of competition may prove itself equal to the system it displaces. (Loud cheers.) I shall not attempt, after what has passed in the hall, to enumerate the deeds whether of the dead or of the living—whether of those whose names will be graven on the tablet which you, sir, have so gracefully proposed, or of others who still survive, to render, as we may hope, yet more service to the State. But I may be permitted to make an allusion. I think that, had I been a layman, I should have felt it a high honour to rise to be chairman of the East-India Company. I think, that being that, I should have thought it much to be also a member of the British Parliament. But I believe that I should have reckoned it better than all this to have been the father of a noble fellow who took a wounded comrade on his shoulders, and bore him for miles from the field of battle till a place of safety was reached. (Enthusiastic cheering.) Gentlemen, though our connection with the East-India Company may now be said to terminate, our connection with the civil service of India does not come to an end. (Applause.) I think, and I believe that, for many long years to come, numbers who shall be serving their country most faithfully, and most efficiently, will look back to Haileybury with gratitude and affection, and trace to some lesson received within its walls much of their usefulness as men, and their consistency as Christians. We shall carry this conviction with us into our retirement. It is a conviction which will cheer that retirement: it is a conviction that will dignify that retirement. (Applause.) Forgive me, if I do not say more. I think you must all feel, that if, under circumstances like the present, I could say much, I should be utterly undeserving of being listened to at all. I bid you all an affectionate farewell. I thank you all for your warm and cordial expressions of good-will. And with a hearty prayer that the kindness which you have shown may be returned a hundredfold to yourselves, we, the principal and professors of Haileybury, lay down our offices—offices which, we trust, have not been sullied in our hands: we depart to seek new homes, but never—be assured of this—to forget old friends. (Loud and continued applause.)

At the close of this address, the deputation and visitors retired from the hall, and almost immediately left for London. Thus closed the last term of the East-India College at Haileybury.

MILITARY COLLEGE AT ADDISCOMBE.

The public half-yearly examination of the gentlemen cadets educated at this college, and destined for the military service of the Company, was held on Friday, at the College, in the presence of Mr. R. D. Mangles, M.P., Chairman of the Court of Directors; Sir F. Currie, Deputy-Chairman; and other members of the Court of Directors, including Sir H. Willock, K.L.S.; Mr. Macnaghten, Mr. Eastwick, Major-General Sir R. Vivian, K.C.B.; Major-General Sir F. Smith, K.H., M.P., Public Examiner; Colonel Sir F. Abbott, C.B. the Lieutenant-Governor of the College; the several professors, and a number of distinguished visitors. Amongst the latter were the Archbishop of Canterbury, Major-General Sir H. Jones, K.C.B.; Lieutenant-General Sir G. Pollock, G.C.B.; Mr. Roebuck, M.P.; General Cameron, Vice-President; Colonel Pollock, R.E., Member of Council of Education; Major-Generals Beileau, Spens, Alexander, C.B., and Sargent; Colonels Sandham, R.E., Rochefort Scott, Mant, Sir A. Bogle, and Marshall; the Revs. G. Coles, Chalmers, Heaviside, and Buckley; Professors Narrien, Sylvester, and Christie; Mr. Cowasjee Palett, &c.

There were thirty-three cadets brought forward. Of this number ten were reported by the Public Examiner to be qualified for the Engineers, viz.—

After the distribution of the prizes, and thanking in the warmest terms the various professors and officials of the college for their labours and the results they had achieved since they last met, the Chairman proceeded:—Gentlemen,—I have the highest satisfaction in addressing you at the close of a term during which the general conduct of the cadets is reported to have been exemplary, and the studies of the college to have been prosecuted with more than ordinary diligence and success. I am happy to observe that ten gentlemen have passed for the engineers, one of whom (Mr. Seton) has obtained this honourable distinction in his third term; and he appears as sixth on the list. But while I notice this effect of the abrogation of the rule till recently in force, I must not neglect to place on record, to the high honour of gentlemen cadets Conway Gordon, and Brandreth, that if the rule to which I refer had been rescinded before the Midsummer examination, those gentlemen, now first and second on the list, would have won for themselves the unprecedented distinction of occupying the same positions at the head of a term as those who entered the college six months before them. Gentlemen, since we last met in this place a fearful storm has burst upon British India. Almost the whole army of the presidency of Bengal—an army about equal in numbers to the armies of the two other presidencies combined—has cast off its allegiance to the Government it was bound to serve; and has added, in too many instances, to the crime of mutiny, the murder of its officers, of women and children, and other nameless atrocities. Happily, the army of Madras has stood staunch. With partial exceptions the army of Bombay has also been faithful. But almost every regiment of the great native army of Bengal has either mutinied or been disbanded. This is a great calamity. The staff upon which we have leaned with so much confidence for a century, has suddenly broken in our hands like a rotten reed; and the subsequent contest with the mutineers has been a desperate one. Their numbers have been enormous, in proportion to the troops which the Government has been able to array against them. We had placed arms in the hands of the sepoys and taught them only too well how to use them. The result has been a deadly struggle—now, I trust, drawing speedily to a close,—chequered by terrible disasters, such as the massacre at Cawnpore, and attended generally (owing to the disparity of numbers) by a lamentable sacrifice of invaluable lives. But by the blessing of God the result has been in every case the triumph of the British arms. (Cheers.) This is not the time or place to enter further upon this subject; but I cannot allow the opportunity to escape for expressing, in the warmest language, the heartfelt gratitude and admiration with which the body which I have the honour to represent regard the heroic endurance of fatigue and hardship, of climate and disease, no less than the undaunted valour in every conflict, which has been displayed by our gallant soldiers of every rank, from the general to the private. It has been by the unparalleled exercise of these virtues that, under Providence, we have come victors out of a contest so unequal. Honour to the brave who have fallen—honour to the brave who survive—but especially honour, in this place, to those of our heroes who learnt at this college their first lessons of military science, and imbibed at the same time the high spirit of British soldiers. Gentlemen, I hold in my hand a brilliant list of your predecessors who have distinguished themselves most remarkably, where all have done so well in this terrible contest. First on the roll is Sir Henry Lawrence, whose loss at such a juncture every Englishman must feel to be a great national calamity—a statesman as well as a soldier, a chivalrous gentleman as well as an earnest Christian. (Cheers.) Next is Sir Archdale Wilson—I mention him second, but second to none stands Sir Archdale Wilson, the conqueror of Delhi. The storming of that great city, and its eventual capture, after no less than six days of terrible street-fighting, against enemies far superior in number and fully prepared, must be held, on all hands, to be an achievement worthy to be recorded on the brightest page of the annals of British warfare. (Loud cheers.) Then follows a crowd of names—officers of the engineers and artillery—too many of whom, alas! have fallen in the struggle—Baird Smith, Tombs, Fagan, Vincent Eyre, D'Oyly (who, seated on a tumbrel, continued to command his guns after he had been mortally wounded), Salkeld and Home (the gallant youths who blew open the Cashmere-gate); and last, not least, the undaunted Willoughby, who defended to the last moment the arsenal at Delhi, and then fired the train to explode it. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, let these noble examples of valour and devotion to duty stimulate you to follow in the steps of those who have preceded you in this institution. Braver or more skilful officers, better soldiers in every branch of the army than Addiscombe has reared for India, the world has never seen. You will need to exert yourselves to maintain at its present height the reputation of the military college of the East-India Company. I must turn from this stirring theme to subjects affecting your present positions and duties. You, gentlemen, who have been selected for the engineers, will proceed to prosecute your studies at Chatham. There is one important subject in which I should wish to offer you a few words of kindly advice, but that I feel his grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, will address you with more effect on the subject to which I allude. You will pass to-day from the strict discipline of this college. At Chatham, comparatively free agents, you will be exposed to many new temptations, to idleness and expense, at least, if not to still greater dangers. Upon these rocks some few have unhappily made shipwreck. I pray you, therefore, to remember all that is at stake. Bear in mind that the favourable report of the distinguished officer who will superintend your studies is essential to your commission and your rank. Remember too, how anxiously your parents and friends will watch your career, and how intimately their happiness is bound up in the issue of your probation at Chatham. To those gentlemen of the artillery and infantry about to proceed to India I will say a few words as to the native troops they will have under their orders. How far it will be thought desirable ever again to have native artillerymen I do not know, but native soldiers for the infantry we must have, and you, gentlemen, must learn to govern them in such a way as will render them true and faithful servants. This for a time will be a task full of difficulty, especially to those among you who will go to Bengal. But you must remember that among the native troops the remarkable fidelity of the Sikhs and Ghorkas has been shown. I especially recommend to you the study of the native languages, and the study and proper appreciation of the characters of the men you will have under you. You will not neglect these for your own sakes. The warning we have received has been an awful one, and I am sure that it will not be lost upon the officers of India. The chairman then concluded, amid loud cheers, by cordially recommending the cadets to regularly keep up their correspondence from India with their relatives at home, and earnestly wishing them success in the high and honourable career which lay before them.

The Archbishop of Canterbury said, he could not refuse to comply with the request which had been made to him by his hon. friend, and, though he could add nothing to the forcible remarks which he had made or the friendly advice he had given, yet he could not lose the opportunity of addressing a few words to them, even though what he had to say, especially with regard to India, came with less weight from him than from the experienced Chairman of the East-India Company. Many of his young hearers would soon proceed to India, where they would arrive at a most important crisis—at a time when the great superiority of the European character had been shown in a manner which none could have foreseen or even believed possible a few months since. It had been shown that a small number of Europeans, less than 20,000 he believed, had been able to reconquer one-half the East, and overawe the remainder. They would go there at a time when the European name, raised, as it would be raised, must be most carefully maintained, and he could not help thinking that the attention of the natives would be more especially attracted to that cause and to that religion to which this supremacy was entirely owing. His Grace then proceeded to cite the example of a British resident at Gwalior, whose unfeigned piety and disinterestedness had shaken even the fanaticism of a high-caste rajah, and had led him to exclaim that Christianity was indeed the secret of the moral power and greatness of the English, and that it was to that they were indebted for their superiority of character and for the power which enabled them to conquer and rule the people of the East. The most rev. speaker continued:—There were two ways in which his youthful hearers could profess their religion,—by precept and by example. The former might not be so much in their immediate line of duty, though all should be prepared to give a reason for the faith which they professed. He trusted that the importance of their example might be always present in their minds in that foreign land to which their duty led them, but in which there were, alas! but too many temptations to lead them to forget both their duties here and hereafter. He earnestly hoped and prayed that their future careers might be such as would cause their names to be as warmly remembered in those walls as the names of those gallant men whose fame and deeds had been so ably commemorated by their chairman.

The cadets then having dined, the chairman and visitors proceeded to the model-room, and the departments allotted to military and civil drawing. In the former was a beautifully executed model of the fortifications of Delhi on a much reduced scale. It was most admirably finished, and the immense strength and defensive value of its various parts were duly explained. A small charge of powder was sprung with a voltaic battery wire under the Cashmere gate to show the manner in which it was effected and the results to which such a step must lead. The whole of the drawings were highly praiseworthy, forming an exhibition of a very pleasing character. Mr. J. Brandreth, sub-officer, produced some capital specimens in photography, for which he was presented with a prize, being the first gained in that department.

The examination concluded with the usual drill parade of the cadets, in which their general proficiency in drill and admirable discipline were displayed to most striking advantage.

THE HEALTH OF EUROPEAN SOLDIERS IN INDIA.*

THE following suggestions, which have been approved by his Excellency Sir Colin Campbell, the Commander-in-Chief, are made for the use of officers who have had no Indian experience:—

On a campaign, the mortality caused by sickness is sometimes more than double, or even treble, that caused by the weapons of the enemy. Disease may so paralyze an army, that the best efforts of a general are thwarted and rendered abortive. An originally large force dwindles away to a mere shadow without constant reinforcements. This happens in all countries, but perhaps to a greater extent in India than elsewhere.

When men are disease-stricken they come under the hands of the surgeon, and it is then his duty to treat them, and to apply what remedies are required; but before they are thus struck down, everything depends upon the commanding-officer.

"Prevention is much better than cure," is an old and most true axiom, and one which every man in India ought always to bear in mind. In nine cases out of ten sickness may be traced to imprudence—imprudence arising from recklessness, from want of thought, or from ignorance. Knowledge on the part of those in authority may do much to hinder the imprudence of those under their power; and it is the object of these memoranda to point out common things, easy to remember and easy to enforce, which will have a marked influence in preventing the stealthy approaches of the worst of foes. Trifles constitute the sum of human life; thousands of human lives have been lost by the neglect of trifles. Let officers carry out the trifling directions in the following few pages, and they will quickly see their good effect.

The instructions are very brief, and are purposely put into terse and stringent language, to make them more impressive. They treat only of those few points with which every officer, if he does his duty, must become acquainted.

MARCHING.

When practicable, the best time for marching is undoubtedly in the early morning. The march should be finished by two hours after sunrise. The pernicious custom of serving out a dram on the line of march sows the seeds of disease, and should be avoided; but, as it is injurious to undergo fatigue after a night's rest upon an empty stomach, food of some kind should be given to soldiers either before starting or at the first halt—tea, coffee, chocolate, or milk, with bread, biscuits, or chapâtis.

* By James Harrison, M.D., Surgeon, Hon. Company's service.

In warm weather every precaution should be adopted to enable the European to stand fatigue, and to prevent heating of the blood. The neck should be bare, to allow of the free return of blood from the head. A flannel roller round the belly and loins is all the woollen material required. All other superfluous articles of clothing should be dispensed with.

In cold weather a flannel shirt, cloth coat, &c., should be worn, in accordance with the temperature.

Every soldier should be strongly impressed with the danger of exposing the head, uncovered, to the direct rays of the sun. A light, cool, and comfortable cap, which at the same time allows of evaporation from the surface of the head, and shades the eyes, temples, and back of the neck, should be provided.

The men should be instructed never to throw this off, under any circumstances; and they should be told, on the first symptom of giddiness, flushing of the face, fullness of blood in the head, or dimness of vision, to pour cold water over the head, and to keep it wet (with the cap on) for some hours. Strict adherence to these instructions would prevent the large majority of cases of coup de soleil.

No soldier should be allowed to remain in wet clothes longer than can be avoided. While in exercise no danger results; but, from lying down in damp clothes, fever, dysentery, or disease of the liver inevitably ensue.

When in tents, the *kanâts on the shady side should be thrown down, and the air be allowed to circulate freely. At night, unless the weather is very cold, the kanâts on two sides of every tent should be removed. Protection from dew and rain is all that is required. More harm is caused by the respiration of contaminated, close, and impure air, than is ever brought about by exposure to the night wind.

Dry straw, grass, karbi, or any of the stalks used in thatching, make excellent bedding, when covered with blankets.

BATHING.

The urgent necessity of keeping the pores of the skin open in a hot climate is only recognized by officers in reference to themselves; its paramount importance is not impressed upon the men. Soldiers should be made to bathe at least three times a week in cold water. This operation should always be performed upon an empty stomach, and the morning, before breakfast, is the best time.

It is not safe to bathe when the body is much heated, if at the same time it is fatigued. Hence, on the march, the evening, about four hours after dinner, would be an appropriate time.

The skin should be thoroughly dried and rubbed.

Water can generally be procured from some stream or tank; if these are not convenient, the wells will always furnish abundance.

If every soldier were provided with a metal vessel, with a long slender cord attached to it, for getting water up from wells, he would be independent of the services of a bhisti.†

At present no European can get water, either for drinking or washing, without the aid of a bhisti.

FOOD.

Experience proves that the same amount of animal food is not required in a hot climate to preserve health and strength as in a cold one. A large amount of animal food, instead of giving strength, heats the blood, renders the system feverish, and consequently weakens the whole body.

The Rájpûts of Rájpûtaná, and the Sikhs of the Punjab, are physically as strong as Europeans, and they are capable of enduring more fatigue, and withstanding better the vicissitudes of the climate of India. This is due, partly to race, but chiefly to the nature of their food, of which the staple is wheat flour, made into chapâtis. They eat but twice a day; and, although they partake of animal food, they do so in very much less proportion than is the habit in Europe.

The best food for a soldier is that which the country freely produces, and which is nutritious and digestible, and at the same time palatable.

The large quantity of pork indulged in by soldiers is most injurious. Pigs are foul feeders; and any one, marching one day in the rear of an European regiment, may see the pigs, destined to feed the men, acting the part of scavengers, and clearing off every imaginable kind of filth. The owners and drivers of pigs are the lowest class of natives, who purposely drive their animals over ground where they may find wherewith to fill themselves.

It can readily be understood that meat thus fed must be unwholesome; and that by indulging in it the blood becomes gradually poisoned, and rendered prone to receive any disease.

Hermetically sealed, preserved, or salted provisions are noxious, if partaken of for a prolonged period, or to the exclusion of fresh food.

Bread when tolerably well made is, of course, one of the best articles of diet. Biscuits are not so digestible, but they have the advantage of being easily carried, and of being always ready. In the absence of these, flour (âta) can always be procured, and chapâtis (a thin unleavened cake) are easily made, are highly nutritious, and are perfectly digestible when eaten fresh and hot. When cold and tough they are unwholesome. Chapâtis can be baked in any quantity on iron plates made for the purpose, and every European should learn (which he can easily do from any native) how to knead and prepare them. Flour can be got from every village, and with it no European detachment need ever be without "the staff of life."

Rice and dâl can also be had anywhere. These, boiled separately, and afterwards mixed together, make, with the addition of salt and pepper, a wholesome and nutritious food, well suited for breakfast.

Beef is the meat usually furnished to regiments. The lean commissariat kind do not promise much; but it is difficult to procure other meat in sufficient quantity. Slow boiling for two hours will make any meat tender, and the water in which it is boiled makes excellent soup. The addition of whatever vegetables are to be had, of a few slices of salted pork or bacon, two or three handfuls of flour, some onions, and salt and pepper, makes a savoury mess. Rice, boiled in a separate vessel, and afterwards mixed up with the soup, meat, &c., adds to the quantity and quality of the meal, which is wholesome, nutritious, and palatable.

Mutton and fowls may occasionally be had as a change; and in the neighbourhood of large rivers fish makes a useful variety, and can usually be had in abundance.

Milk is an invaluable article of diet, and should be largely supplied to soldiers.

Vegetables are essential to the preservation of health. Opportunities for procuring them in quantity present themselves much oftener on the line of march than is generally supposed.

In cold weather inquiry will prove that in the neighbourhood of nearly every halting-place there are fields of carrots, turnips, onions, and of many native vegetables, such as bygun, sâg, &c.

A little management on the part of the commissariat agent could obtain these.

Soldiers should be strictly warned never to eat uncooked or raw vegetables.

Fruit, when sound and ripe, is beneficial instead of hurtful. Unripe or over-ripe fruit will produce disease. The water-melon and guava are, however, indigestible. The oranges, strawberries, custard-apples, loquat, musk-melons, pineapples, grapes, and litchis can be partaken of with advantage.

STIMULANTS.

The spirit procured by the soldiers in the bazaars is most injurious to the health, and the most stringent measures should be enforced to prevent its introduction. It is made and got by the camp followers from every village, and is sold sub rosa to the men. If men will drink, it would be much better to supply them with spirit from the canteen than to allow them to get it elsewhere. Soldiers should be persuaded in every way to take the money allowance instead of the dram, or to drink beer instead of rum. It would be very desirable to mix the spirit with water where practicable. The same amount of spirit undiluted is much more injurious than when mixed with water.

Great attention should be paid to the time of serving out drams. They should never be given on an empty stomach, when the system is heated, or when exposed to the sun. To give men raw spirit early in the morning, before any food is taken, is the surest way to lay the foundation of disease. After a meal, with some hours of rest in the shade in prospect, is the best period.

The foregoing recommendations, simple and easily carried out, are the results of considerable experience and observation. They are dictated by common sense, and at first sight would appear to be what would occur to every officer; the fact that they do not do so is the cause of their being brought prominently to their notice. Officers on coming to India for the first time find themselves surrounded by entirely new influences. The diseases of the country are formidable and rapid in their progress, and inspire in many cases a vague terror, which prevents the due exercise of the reasoning powers. The climate is found to be exhausting and debilitating; exposure to the sun is understood to be dangerous; and there are many other circumstances which combine to depress the mind and body, and to pre-dispose to the belief that some extraordinary course must be pursued to ward off any evil consequence.

Recourse is had in too many cases to stimulants; brandy is taken in large quantities to prevent the approach of sickness; exercise and the ordinary methods adopted in other countries to keep the frame sound and vigorous are neglected. Many become the victims of their own imprudence and rashness, and their premature death is erroneously ascribed to the effect of the Indian climate.

With ordinary precaution and attention to the common laws of hygiene, Europeans may live as long and preserve their health as well in India as in Britain.

The neglect of these precautions rapidly produces fatal results. The mortality from disease far exceeds that caused by the enemy, and it behoves every officer to study carefully the means of preventing sickness.

THE INDIAN MUTINY.

"Further papers" (No. 5) relating to the Indian mutiny have been just laid before Parliament, and printed. These papers cover a space of some 100 pages, and consist exclusively of formal letters from the Governor-General of India to the Court of Directors of the East-India Company, inclosing copious local details of events already known, the dates of the narratives extending from the 15th of August to the 7th of October last.

We gather from a perusal of these papers that it was found necessary repeatedly to censure the commissioner of Patna for the meagreness and unsatisfactory nature of his reports, and the repeated non-fulfilment of his reiterated promises to furnish detailed information of important acts and events. "many of which are to the present hour unexplained;" for his keeping the Government completely in the dark as to the grounds and intentions of some acts of a very questionable nature; and for his general gross inattention to the directions of the Lieutenant-Governor to keep him au courant of every event of moment. The collector of Chuprah was censured for quitting his post unnecessarily, and for the exhibition of a discreditable degree of pusillanimity. The rising at Patna on the 3rd of July is thought to have been of a purely religious character; the cry of "Deen, deen" was raised, and the property of the Catholic mission was destroyed, but nothing stolen or removed. The Burkundauzes (in the Burdwan division) are stigmatized as hopeless cowards, utterly useless for protective purposes. The Sikhs of Sooree behaved remarkably well, and volunteered their aid most freely and gallantly. It is stated that at Patna a plot was rife for months before the revolt, and that money was distributed and men regularly paid to excite the people to fight "for religion and the Padishah of Delhi," while the letters found in Peer Ali's house disclosed an organized Mussulman plot to re-establish Mussulman supremacy, and to overthrow the British Government. The Patna rising was directed (as it is thought) from Oude. On the 30th of June the Lieut.-Governor submitted to the Government a proposal for the improvement of the police of the lower (Bengal) provinces, and on the 17th of July his minute was (in the district of Behar) partially carried out. In the Patna division there was a "religious" difference between the Mahomedans and Sepoys as to the day for the outbreak of the revolt, the Dinapore mutineers wishing for Sunday, and the Mahomedans for Friday, their own sacred day, which latter was selected. The abandonment of the outstations in the Behar division (in the last week of August) under instructions from the commissioner of Patna, Mr. Tayler, was strongly disapproved, and censured as "disgraceful" by the Government, and it is further stigmatized in these papers as an "unfortunate, unnecessary, ill-judged, and perhaps disastrous step." In the case of Gya, it was "utterly without excuse or palliation," and the commissioner was at once instructed to revoke his orders. Mr. Tayler was, in the sequel, removed from his post. The courage and good conduct of Messrs. Money and Hollings at Gya are warmly acknowledged. The gallant defence of the garrison of Arrah comes in for a fair share of notice: it is of course anticipated by past reports. Captain Sissmore's strange flight from Chyebassa, which was then left to the protection of the rajah, is denounced as "derogatory and unnecessary,"—so much so that his services were placed at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief, and he subsequently resigned his civil appointment. The rajah of Doomsraon, in spite of his protestations, is looked upon as a "time-server," and he was to be closely watched.

On the 16th of August a fellow calling himself the "Bishop of Bagdad," but whose real name is Syed Hossein Shubber, was lodged in the goal of Calcutta. His letters and papers proved that he was connected with the ex-king of Oude and his minister Ali Nukkee Khan. The prisoner forthwith prayed the Government to inquire into his case. A large sum of money, with trinkets, was found on his person. The Mahomedan Association at Calcutta behaved admirably during the late Moharrum, and forwarded a loyal address to Government at its close. Mr. Horne, the collector and magistrate of Azimgur, has been censured for his want of energy in allowing the head station to be insulted for days by a rabble of armed insurgents. He was to be replaced by a better man. There is a short correspondence between the Government of India and the Company on the subject of the late press law, which the Company appears to have approved without entering into the general question of the freedom of the press in India. The late successes at Delhi and Lucknow are briefly alluded to in a despatch of the 7th of October, as to be noticed in the "Military Department." Such are a few of the more salient features of these papers, which generally refer to matters of local detail.—Times.

ADDITIONAL MAILS TO AND FROM INDIA.

COMMENCING with January next, the mails for the East Indies and China, transmitted via Marseilles, will be despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those intended for the Bombay packets, on the evenings of the 2nd and 17th of each month; and those intended for the Calcutta packets (including the mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 9th and 25th of each month, as already announced.

The Bombay packets will also carry letters for Calcutta and Madras, to be forwarded from Bombay by the Inland Posts; and it is expected that they will reach their destination some days in advance of the letters sent by the next Calcutta packet.

The packets from Southampton will continue to run in connection with the Calcutta line; and mails via Southampton, for Calcutta, Ceylon, Madras, and China, will be made up in London, as at present, on the mornings of the 4th and 20th of each month. For Bombay, mails via Southampton will be forwarded by the above packets, as well as by the Australian packets (the mails for which are made up in London on the morning of the 12th of each month), as far as Egypt, where they will await the departure of the next packet for Bombay.

The following table shows the several dates upon which the mails for India will be despatched from London, both by the route of Marseilles and by that of Southampton:—

DATE OF DESPATCH FROM LONDON.		DESTINATION.
Via MARSEILLES, Evening of	Via SOUTHAMPTON, Morning of
2nd.	—	BOMBAY.	—
—	4th.	Taking mails also for Calcutta and Madras.	CALCUTTA, &c.
9th.	—		CALCUTTA, &c.
—	12th.		—
17th.	—	BOMBAY.	—
—	20th.	—	CALCUTTA, &c.
25th.	—	—	CALCUTTA, &c.

When the 4th, 12th, or 20th of the month falls on a Sunday, the mails will be made up on the previous evening, and when the 2nd, 9th, 17th, or 25th of the month falls on a Sunday, the mails will be made up on the following evening.

The homeward mails will, in like manner, leave Calcutta and Madras four times a month, and at nearly equal intervals, being despatched twice by packet to Suez, as at present, and twice via Bombay.

The mails from Bombay will leave that port on the 9th and 24th, and the portion brought via Marseilles will be due in London about the 4th and 19th of each month. The portion brought via Southampton will come from Alexandria by the first mail packet, Indian or Australian, leaving that port for Southampton after their arrival.

General Post-office, Dec. 5, 1857.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPSHIPS IN INDIA.—The Golden Fleece steamer, at Calcutta, out 68 days; the Thebes steamer, at Calcutta, out about 74 days; the Caledonia steamer, at Calcutta, out about 84 days; the Nile sailing ship, at Calcutta, not known; the Sydney steamer, at the River Hooghly, out 72 days; the Bucephalus sailing ship, at Sand Heads, out 117 days; the United Kingdom steamer, at Madras, out 85 days; the Carthage steamer, at Madras, out 79 days; the Atwick Castle sailing ship, at Madras, out 98 days; the Barham sailing ship, at Madras, out 105 days; the John Bull steamer, at Point de Galle, out 85 days; the Sumer sailing ship, at Point de Galle, out about 80 days; the Whirlwind sailing ship, at Point de Galle, out 88 days.

THE DEFENDERS OF LUCKNOW.—The force of Europeans in Lucknow comprised only the detachment (about 500 strong) of H.M.'s 32nd regiment, and the European officers of the four native regiments which formed the garrison of the town at the period of the outbreak, viz., the 7th cavalry, and the 13th, 48th, and 71st native infantry. For such services and hardships it is suggested that, besides the medal which will of course be granted to the whole army employed in suppressing the mutiny, the honours of the Bath should be conferred on the gallant Colonel Inglis, who has commanded the garrison during its hardest trials; that a step in rank should be accorded to each of the handful of European officers under his command; and that a year's pay should be granted to the men of the 32nd regiment. The above would be a grateful and acceptable recognition of their claims to their country's favour and admiration. The grant of a year's pay as a reward to meritorious troops is not without precedent in India, as the records of the India House will show.

THE INDIAN MUTINY RELIEF FUND.—Mr. J. Q. Finnis, late Lord Mayor of London, has received a letter from Lord Canning, Governor-General of India, acknowledging the receipt of two remittances (amounting to a total of 100,000 rupees) from the committee of the Indian Relief Fund in London. His lordship, in thanking those who have subscribed to the Fund, says:—"Soon after the first outbreak of the mutiny, in May last, and when the disastrous consequences which it could not fail to bring upon individuals became manifest, a committee was formed in Calcutta for the purpose of raising subscriptions to be devoted to the relief of the sufferers, and of distributing the funds thus raised in the most effective manner. The amount subscribed in India up to this date is Rs. 254,580 13a.; the amount expended, Rs. 91,834 13a.; and the amount remaining unexpended in the hands of the committee is Rs. 162,749."

DESPATCH OF TROOPS OVERLAND.—At a meeting of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company this afternoon, Mr. B. M. Wilcox, M.P., in the chair, the report and accounts were adopted, and a dividend was declared of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for the half-year ending the 30th September last; a bonus was also added of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and a dividend of 2 and 1 per cent. respectively upon the Wilcox and Anderson Fund and the underwriting account, making, with 5 per cent. already paid, a total distribution for the year equal to 15 per cent., free of income-tax. The chairman observed that the comprehensiveness of the report left little further to be stated. He would, however, read the subjoined letter as a postscript:—

"Since the report was in print an arrangement has been concluded for the transport of a regiment to India via Egypt; the Oriental having been sent from Calcutta to Suez for the special purpose of carrying troops. The telegraphic despatch naming the day on which this vessel was expected at Suez was only received on the 17th ult. The directors instantly wrote to the East-India Company, stating their ability to carry out 1,000 men and their officers, and their offer was promptly accepted. This regiment will be conveyed to Alexandria by a screw-steamer of 1,800 tons, chartered for the purpose, and the troops will embark at Plymouth on Tuesday next.

THE SIAMESE AMBASSADORS AT COURT.—THE AUDIENCE. The Queen and her court were assembled in state, and as soon as the door of the audience chamber opened, the ambassadors and their suite (eight persons altogether) appeared. Having made profound salaams, they threw themselves on their hands and knees, and in a compact body went up the room on all fours to the throne. The royal gravity (her Majesty is known to have as keen a sense of the ludicrous as most persons) was sorely tried by this proceeding, but when the principal ambassador, increasing his prostrations, laid his chin on the step of the throne, and in that attitude commenced to read his address, the trial became painful. The exit from the Queen's presence was accomplished by a retrograde movement on all fours likewise, the ambassadors keeping their faces always to her Majesty. There was a luncheon served in one of the State apartments, in the course of which their Siamese Excellencies, to the intense horror of the assembled court, lit their pipes, and began to blow a comfortable cloud. The Queen herself, however, very sensibly and good naturedly laughed, and said nothing about it, notwithstanding her aversion to the fragrance of the tobacco plant.

HORSES FOR THE INDIAN SERVICE FROM AUSTRALIA.—Mr. John Oakes was recently in Goulburn, purchasing horses suitable for service in India. In the extensive country between Goulburn and Bathurst, from offers he received, he was enabled to purchase over 200 horses—a very large proportion of the total number required from the entire colony. It had been determined to present an address to the Governor-in-Chief, requesting him to take the necessary steps to ship 100 well-disciplined troop-horses, as an offering from that province to the Indian Government, as a mark of their sympathy for their fellow-countrymen barbarously butchered by the native troops.

THE RELIEF OF LUCKNOW.—The following is an extract from a letter written by M. de Banneroi, a French physician, in the service of Musser Rajah, and published in Le Pays (Paris paper), under the date of Calcutta, Oct. 8:—"I give you the following account of the relief of Lucknow, as described by a lady, one of the rescued party:—"On every side death stared us in the face; no human skill could avert it any longer. We saw the moment approach when we must bid farewell to earth, yet without feeling that unutterable horror which must have been experienced by the unhappy victims at Cawnpore. We were resolved rather to die than to yield, and were fully persuaded that in twenty-four hours all would be over. The engineers had said so, and all knew the worst. We women strove to encourage each other, and to perform the light duties which had been assigned to us, such as conveying orders to the batteries and supplying the men with provisions, especially cups of coffee, which we prepared day and night. I had gone out to try and make myself useful, in company with Jessie Brown, the wife of a corporal in my husband's regiment. Poor Jessie had been in a state of restless excitement all through the siege, and had fallen away visibly within the last few days. A constant fever consumed her, and her mind wandered occasionally, especially that day, when the recollections of home seemed powerfully present to her. At last, overcome with fatigue, she lay down on the ground, wrapped up in her plaid. I sat beside her, promising to awaken her when, as she said, 'her father should return from the ploughing.' She fell at length into a profound slumber, motionless and, apparently, breathless, her head resting in my lap. I myself could no longer resist the inclination to sleep, in spite of the continual roar of the cannon. Suddenly I was aroused by a wild unearthly scream close to my ear; my companion stood upright beside me, her arms raised, and her head bent forward in the attitude of listening. A look of intense delight broke over her countenance, she grasped my hand, drew me towards her, and exclaimed, 'Dinna ye hear it? dinna ye hear it? Ay, I'm no dreamin', it's the slogan o' the Highlanders! We're saved! we're saved!' Then, flinging herself on her knees, she thanked God with passionate fervour. I felt utterly bewildered: my English ears heard only the roar of artillery, and I thought my poor Jessie was still raving; but she darted to the batteries, and I heard her cry incessantly to the men, 'Courage! courage! hark to the slogan, —to the Macgregor, the grandest of them a'! Here's help at last!' To describe the effect of these words upon the soldiers would be impossible. For a moment they ceased firing, and every soul listened in intense anxiety. Gradually, however, there arose a murmur of bitter disappointment, and the wailing of the women who had flocked to the spot burst out anew as the colonel shook his head. Our dull Lowland ears heard nothing but the rattle of the musketry. A few moments more of this death-like suspense, of this agonizing hope, and Jessie, who had again sunk on the ground, sprang to her feet, and cried, in a voice so clear and piercing that it was heard along the whole line—'Will ye no believe it noo? The slogan has ceased indeed, but the Campbells are comin'! D'ye hear, d'ye hear!' At that moment we seemed indeed to hear the voice of God in the distance, when the pibroch of the Highlanders brought us tidings of deliverance, for now there was no longer any doubt of the fact. That shrill, penetrating, ceaseless sound, which rose above all other sounds, could come neither from the advance of the enemy, nor from the work of the sappers. No; it was indeed the blast of the Scottish bagpipes, now shrill and harsh, as threatening vengeance on the foe, then in softer tones seeming to promise succour to their friends in need. Never surely was there such a scene as that which followed. Not a heart in the residency of Lucknow but bowed itself before God. All, by one simultaneous impulse, fell upon their knees, and nothing was heard but bursting sobs and the murmured voice of prayer. Then all arose, and there rang out from a thousand lips a great shout of joy which resounded far and wide, and lent new vigour to that blessed pibroch. To our cheer of 'God save the Queen,' they replied by the well-known strain that moves every Scot to tears, 'Should auld acquaintance be forgot,' &c. After that, nothing else made any impression on me. I scarcely remember what followed. Jessie was presented to the general on his entrance into the fort, and at the officers' banquet her health was drunk by all present, while the pipers marched round the table, playing once more the familiar air of 'Auld lang syne.'"—Jersey Times, Dec. 10.

BOOKS.

British Rule in India: a Historical Sketch. By HARRIET MARTINEAU. Smith, Elder, and Co.

FOR the last six months everyone has been asking for information about India. We are all anxious to know what manner of men inhabit that vast peninsula, and how it was they happened to be subdued by the servants of a company of British merchants. So much, too, has been said about the double government of that country, that our curiosity has been unusually excited, and, in spite of the attractions of a lighter literature, old men and maidens, elderly ladies and hobbledheys, may be seen for hours together poring over dry, repulsive books, in search of a knowledge which they never succeed in attaining. Although it is hardly possible to name any subject invested with so much romantic interest as the history of India, ancient and modern, and the manners, customs, and institutions of its "pre-adamite" peoples, no work has hitherto appeared to satisfy the requirements of that "many-headed monster thing," the general reader. One writer is too minute, another too abstract, while all bury their details beneath a load of unpronounceable names, and create a confusion of ideas distressing to contemplate. Behold, now, the author and the book. That which everyone desiderated is at length supplied. Miss Martineau has again stepped forward to instruct and entertain her contemporaries, and has succeeded in compressing into a small octavo volume a most impartial and interesting narrative of all that pertains unto India. Of the charms of Miss Martineau's clear, unaffected, familiar style of diction it is needless to speak; but we cannot deny ourselves the pleasure of extracting the following picture of the social aspects of Hindoo and Mahomedan life in the time of Akbar:—

"The Hindoo dwelling of bamboo, with its curved thatched roof, and placed, if possible, apart and under trees, contrasted with the Mahomedan cottage or house of clay, or unburnt brick, or stone, with its terraced roof. The Hindoo swathed himself in two scarfs of white cotton or muslin, rubbed his skin with oil, ate rice, thought his lank hair and mustachios a sufficient covering for his head, was conscious of the grace and suppleness of his carriage, and delighted in conversation and indolent and frivolous amusement, while yet his cast of character was quiet and thoughtful. The Mahomedan, on the other hand, covered his head with a turban, and wore trowsers, tunic, ornaments, and arms; tiled his roof; ate wheaten bread (unleavened); shut up the women of his family, and was not much of a talker in society. The Hindoo village had always a bazaar, a market-day, and an annual fair; one temple and one guest-house, where the wayfarer might find shelter. Each hut and each mansion had its mat, its earthen pot and dishes, its pestle and mortar and baking-plate, and its shed for cooking. The husbandman prayed, and went forth at dawn with his cattle to the field; his wife brought him his hot dinner at noon, and his evenings were spent in smoking and amusement. The women meantime had been grinding and cooking, washing, spinning, and fetching water. In the towns, the tradesmen and artisans lived in brick or stone houses, with shops open to the streets. The bazaar-loungers—mendicant priests, smoking soldiers, and saucy bulls which lorded it over everybody—distinguished the towns where the Hindoos predominated; and so did the festivals, in which the townspeople took at one draught the pleasure which the villagers spread over all their evenings. The observances at death and burial were unlike those of the conquering race. The Hindoos burned their dead, except those belonging to religious orders; and they seldom or never set up tombs, except to warriors fallen in battle, or widows burned with their husbands. * * * In the wooded districts great hunts were going on, especially where military men were stationed; and the highest officers drove their own elephants, in order not to be helpless if their drivers dropped in battle. Spear-matches and races were the amusements in the country, as wrestling and active foot games were in the towns. The thief-caste, the hereditary hill-robbers, kept in exercise the valour and alacrity of the military class. * * * The Hindoo women held a low rank theoretically, but practically were like other matrons and maidens in those essential ideas and feelings which are common to all races in all times. The same may be said of the handsome children. The juvenile gentry looked and behaved like little men and women; and the children of the poor (who went to school, however, and learned writing and arithmetic) rolled in the dust, and played in the streets like any Christians."

This photograph would apply in almost every line to the distinctive habits of the two races at the present day. The Asiatic remains the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever—the only change being a gradual and imperceptible deterioration. But our readers will probably prefer Miss Martineau's antithetical delineation of the Rajpoot characteristics to any remarks from our own pen. The Rajpoots, says this charming writer, are

"the very representatives of Hindooism, an order come up, as it were, from the depths of the past, to show the modern world what sort of men Hindostan was once full of; a stalwart soldiery, of tall stature and unmixed blood: men believing nothing, and insisting upon everything they were accustomed to; with no faith, but plenty of superstition; servile to power, and diabolically oppressive to helplessness; prone to self-torture, without any power of self-denial; bigoted to home and usages, without available affections or morality; smooth in language and manners, while brutal in grain; incapable of compassion, while disposed to good-nature; good-tempered in general, with exceptions of incomparable vindictiveness; timid for a twelvemonth, and then madly ferocious for a day, or heroically devoted for an hour; frivolous and fanatical; liars in general, and martyrs on occasion; scoundrels for the most part, and heroes by a rare transfiguration."

The Bengal Tiger drawn from the life. These extracts will suffice to illustrate the grace and lightness of Miss Martineau's touch. Though eager to discover a flaw, we have discovered only one point to which we can take exception. Why is the phrase "a nation of shopkeepers" ascribed to Napoleon? It was Adam Smith who first applied it to his countrymen, and from him it was borrowed by the Emperor, though "without acknowledgment."

Notes on India. By AUDAX PHIL-INDIA. "Hampshire Independent" Office.

So long as this writer confines himself to a topographical description of the Indus and its tributaries, his pamphlet is useful and note-worthy. He describes in simple language the natural capabilities of the country, and appears to have derived his information from reliable sources. Unhappily, however, he is not content with jotting down facts,—he must also indulge in comments, which betray the very superficial knowledge he possesses of the subjects he professes to elucidate. The usual clap-trap denunciations of the "gentlemen of Leadenhall Street" are dragged in on all occasions; and the causes of the mutiny are explained with a dogmatism which brooks no contradiction. As it would evidently be so much time lost were we to endeavour to dissipate the hallucinations of this "audacious friend of India," we prefer leaving him to his own devices; recommending his facts for consideration, but repudiating his inferences.

Memorandum on the Re-construction of the Bengal Army. Macintosh.

AN officer of twenty years' service in the Bengal army here presents for the consideration of the public a few suggestions for the re-construction of that army, drawn from his personal experience. In lieu of seventy-four native and three European regiments, he proposes that there shall be thirteen of the latter, twenty-four of the former, and ten of Africans. The irregular force he would reduce by one-half; but, on the other hand, he recommends the formation of a military police-force for the discharge of detachment, escort, and police duties. The native commissioned officers he very wisely wipes off the muster-roll, and in place of extra pay to sepoy for length of service, would allow them to retire upon their pension after thirty years' service. With regard to the European officers, he suggests that the allowances of all staff appointments be cut down twenty-five per cent., and that a personal allowance of Rs. 120 a month, independently of existing allowances, be given to every regimental or brevet captain in command of a company, to cease when he is absent on private leave or on medical certificate. Civil appointments should be conferred only after five years' actual regimental duty, by which time, it is supposed, a fair amount of military knowledge is likely to have been acquired. The expediency of continuing to hold out tempting prizes as incentives to exertion can hardly be questioned, especially in such a depressing climate as that of India, though the most stringent discipline must, of course, be maintained throughout every branch of the service.

Memoir on the Education of the Natives of India. By R. C. MONEY, late of the Bombay Civil Service. Wertheim and Macintosh.

IN the year 1832, Mr. R. C. Money addressed a very sensible memoir on the subject of native education to the Earl of Clare, then Governor of Bombay. This paper is now reprinted by the Rev. C. F. S. Money, M.A., with an introductory notice, in which it is asserted that the result of Government setting "their faces as a flint against all connection with Christian teaching" is "contempt, insult, insurrection, death." The reverend gentleman appears to be labouring under the delusion that nothing has been done during the quarter of a century that has elapsed since this memoir was drawn up; nor does he make the slightest allusion to the system of village schools introduced into the North-west Provinces by the late lamented Mr. Thomason. But on the other hand he complacently quotes a speech made by a Calcutta Baboo, at a meeting of the Native British India Association, as a proof that missionary movements are not unwelcome to either Hindoos or Mahomedans. We can readily understand that the Baboo, mistaking the absence of convictions for absence of prejudice, esteems himself a very enlightened and liberal-minded individual, while he delivers rhetorical platitudes indicating nothing save his own hollowness. But we cannot accept his wordy assertions as any proof that the mass of his countrymen are not fanatically wedded to their own superstitions, and jealous of all interference on the part of their rulers.

Many Thoughts on Many Things, being a Treasury of Reference. By HENRY SOUTHGATE. G. Routledge and Co.

THIS substantial tome is, indeed, a treasury of reference, supplied from the most varied and yet systematic spoliation of English literature. Mr. Southgate appears to have ransacked every nook and corner for gems of thought, which he has since strung together with much taste and discrimination. To all who exercise the pen of a ready writer this immense collection of quotations, appropriate to every possible subject, cannot fail to be most serviceable. Let us select a specimen at random: the book opens at the word "Critics," and this is their character:—

"Critics must excuse me, if I compare them to certain animals called asses, who, by gnawing vines, originally taught the great advantage of pruning them."—Shenstone.

Nothing discouraged, we turn to a weakness common to mankind, that topic of universal interest, LOVE. Under this head Mr. Southgate has arranged forty-seven columns of extracts in prose and verse, illustrative of the manifold phases of that Protean passion. Beginning with "Love in the abstract," which we are told, on the authority of Shakspeare, is "a smoke raised with the fume of sighs," he makes us familiar with the opinions of the best writers on its "activity, ardour, cautiousness, charms, cohesiveness, consolations, deceptions, delights, demands, disappointments, divinity, enthusiasm, evanescence, expansibility, flame, fire, folly, frenzy, happiness, harmony," and so on through a countless series of characteristics. Young men and maidens will equally appreciate the value of such assistance for etherealizing their amatory effusions; and even ladies of a certain age may enliven their practical knowledge of the great mystery from this bounteous source of agreeable ideas. Apropos to love, we give the following definition of a cognate subject:—

"What is a kiss?—'tis but the seal,
That, warmly printed, soon decays;
'Tis but a sephyr taught to steal,
Where fleeting falsehood smiling plays.

"The breeze will kiss the flower, but soon
From flower to weed inconstant blows.
Such is the kiss of love, the boon
Which fickle fancy oft bestows."

It seems, however, that the operation is by no means unpleasant, as another poet likens the sensation to breezes breathing amidst groves of ripening spices, and a third warbles of nectar and drops of honey, while a prosaic gentleman declares that it is simply "a pouting and parting of the lips." though he admits there is a "mysterious virtue in it after all." Such as are curious on the point will do well to refer to the volume itself.

Tallangetta, The Squatter's Home. A Story of Australian Life. By WILLIAM HOWITT. Longman and Co.

These entertaining volumes consist of a series of graphic delineations of the different phases of life in Australia. The grand and beautiful scenery of certain districts, the wonderful variety of natural productions, the startling incidents of a bush life, and the powerfully-marked individuality of private character that are constantly met with in that land of contrasts, are vividly and truthfully portrayed. The poetic highwayman, the clairvoyant doctor, the refined, gentlemanly squatter, the honest, independent adventurer, the bloodstained ruffian, the unctuous cheat, are all sketched in a pleasant artistic style, that brings before our very eyes the originals themselves. The main plot of the narrative is not, however, worthy of its details, being stiff, improbable, and clumsily worked out. But this is a secondary consideration, as the fortunes of the Fitzpatrick family are evidently not intended to serve any other purpose than that of supplying machinery for the introduction of the detached narratives. Mr. Howitt's object was not to compose a work of fiction, but so to combine the amusing with the instructive as to lure on those to read and learn, who would otherwise be repelled by a work that professed only to give information. A few extracts, however, will afford a better idea of the author's scope and manner, than the most elaborate abstract remarks:—

"Sometimes they rode for miles through the woods, the ground being level, and a simple track of wheels being their guide. All around them the earth was strewn with huge fallen trees and dead branches, and masses of the evergreen gum-tree leaves dried on their boughs in their greenness, ready kindling matter for the travellers' fire. Sometimes they passed over very sterile ground, where yet grew huge trees, and under their shade various acacias, some in bloom and some gone out, and often the golden wattle, showing its last yellow flowers, and lumps of transparent gum-arabic sticking on its crimson branches. Sometimes they way led them over dry stony hills, where the whole ground seemed formerly to have been on fire, and still retained a reddish hue, the stones grinding up under the wheels into the appearance of brick-dust. On these barren ranges the lofty iron-bark trees, with their great black boles deeply ploughed into furrows, gave a peculiar character to the scene. Then they travelled along green valleys, with beautiful slopes on each side, thinly sprinkled with trees, and offering abundant grass to their horses. Up many a hill, and through miles of forest, the travellers descended and walked, ever and anon attracted by some new and beautiful flower, by the singular grass-tree, with its tall, flowering rod, or by the volumes of golden mistletoes which hung from the trees, resembling lions' skins at a distance. The gay flocks of parrots and paroquets, the snowy flocks of white cockatoos, the rush and clatter of a vast crowd of black magpies, or the quaint notes of lesser birds, conspicuous above them all being the droll mimicries of the leatherhead, kept them continually amused."

But a single season of heat and drought suffices to convert this elysium into a scene of desolation. The grass is scorched up and withered into crisp hay, the foliage crumbles to the touch, the beds of rivers, pools, and creeks are dried into parched and thirsty clay. If by any accident a fire should then break out, the conflagration burns for weeks, destroying whole forests in its progress and consuming every living thing with its fiery blasts.

"What a scene! The woods were flaming and crackling in one illimitable conflagration. The wind, dashing from the north in gusts of inconceivable heat, seemed to sear the very face and shrivel up the lungs. The fire leaped from tree to tree, flashing and roaring along, with the speed and the destructiveness of lightning. The sere foliage seemed to snatch the fire, and to perish in it, in a riot of demoniacal revelry. On it flew, fast as the fleetest horse could gallop; and consuming acres of leaves in a moment, still remained to rage and roar amongst the branches and in the hollow stems of ancient trees. The whole wood on the left was an enormous region of intensest flame, and that on the right sent forth the sounds of the same ravaging fires; but, being to windward, the flames could not be seen for the vast clouds of smoke, mingled with fiery sparks, which were rolled on the air. There was a sound as of thunder, mingled with the crash of falling trees, and the wild cries of legions of birds of all kinds, which fell scorched and blackened and dead to the ground. Once out on the open plain, the cattle were speedily lost in the blinding ocean of smoke, and the settler, obliged to abandon them, made a dash on for his life. Now the flames came racing along the grass with the speed of the wind, and mowing all smooth as a pavement; now they tore furiously through some near point in the forest, and flung burning ashes and tangles of blazing bark upon the galloping rider. When the wind veered, the reek, driven backward, revealed a most amazing scene. The blazing skirts of the forests; huge isolated trees, glowing red—standing columns of fire; here, a vast troop of wild horses with flying manes and tails, rushing with thundering hoofs over the plain; there, herds of cattle running with bloodshot eyes and hanging tongues, they knew not whither, from the fire; troops of kangaroos leaping frantically across the rider's path, their hair singed and giving out strongly the stench of fire; birds of all kinds and colours shrieking piteously as they drove wildly by, and yet seeing no spot of safety; thousands of sheep standing huddled in terror on the scorched flats, with singed wool, deserted by their shepherds, who had fled for their lives."

Mr. Howitt's delineations of the social aspects of Australian life are even more graphic and interesting than his descriptions of scenery and natural phenomena; unhappily, the very prescribed space at our disposal prevents us from making further extracts.

Allen's Maps of India & China.

MAP OF INDIA;

Showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this Map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the Map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP OF INDIA;

Compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by Order of the Honourable East-India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or with rollers, and varnished, £3. 3s.

MAP OF INDIA:

From the most recent Authorities. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide 3 ft. 3 in. high. 10s.; or on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

MAP OF THE ROUTES IN INDIA;

With Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size, 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this Map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies.

A MAP OF THE WESTERN PROVINCES OF HINDOOSTAN; THE PUNJAB, CABOOL, SINDE, BHAULPORE, &c. INCLUDING ALL THE STATES BETWEEN CANDAHAR AND ALLAHABAD.

On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or on cloth, in a case, £2; or on rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

LADIES' OUTFITS TO INDIA.

JOHN BESEMERES AND CO., Manufacturers of LADIES' READY-MADE LINEN, Under-clothing, Baby-linen, and every article required for a family proceeding to India, are now compiling Outfits at their Manufacturing Prices, thus effecting an important saving in the outlay. Wedding Outfits on the same terms.

Ladies' Long Cloth Chemises, 1s. 6d., 2s., 2s. 6d.; Frilled Night Dresses, 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d.; Long Cloth Drawers, 1s. 6d., 1s. 9d., 2s.; Petticoats, 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d.; Dressing-gowns, 7s. 6d., 8s. 6d., 10s. each. A detailed Priced List of every article may be ordered by post. The Outfit Department is entirely superintended by young women of competent skill, aided by dressmakers of taste and experience.

All the Under-clothing is made up by selected classes of carefully-trained private hands, needlewomen, who receive constant employment throughout the year, at a liberal and fixed rate of wages. This system, ORIGINATED BY THIS THE OLDEST ESTABLISHMENT OF THE KIND IN LONDON, has effectually redeemed the character of Ready-made Linen for strength and neatness, while its admitted usefulness and economy for garments for family and general home use, have placed it among the successful manufactures of the day.

To the Merchant exporting to Australia and other settlements, these goods, from the high character they bear, are very attractive, and rank among the safest shipments to those parts.

for its delicious flavour and stimulating qualities, 1 lb. bottles, 3s. 6d.; 7 for 21s. Curry and Mulligatawney Paste—1 lb. jars, 3s. 6d.; 7 for 21s. The following Condiments and Preserves are imported direct, and strongly recommended:—Indian Curry Sauce and Tapiorian Sauce, Fine Pickled Mangoes, Tamarind Fish, Nepal Chilly, Green Mango Chutnee, Bengal Club, Cashmere, Delhi, and Oselle. Preserved Mango, Golden Apple, Limes, Green Sweetmeats.—PAYNE and SONS, Foreign Warehouse, 328, Regent Street, and 46, Mortimer Street, London.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.—The exuberance of the feelings amid scenes of gaiety induces the fair and youthful to shine to advantage under the gaze of many friends, and therefore to devote increased attention to the duties of the toilet. It is at this festive season that ROWLANDS' AUXILIARIES OF HEALTH and BEAUTY are more than usually essential. The patronage of royalty throughout Europe, their general use by rank and fashion, and the universally-known efficacy of these articles, give them a celebrity unparalleled, and render them peculiarly Elegant and Seasonable Presents. ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, for imparting a transcendent lustre to the hair, and sustaining it in decorative charm. ROWLANDS' KALYDOR imparts a radiant bloom to the Cheek, and a delicacy and softness to the Hands, Arms, and Neck; and ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or Pearl Dentifrice, bestows on the Teeth a pearl-like whiteness, and renders the breath sweet and pure.

Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers. BEWARE OF SPURIOUS IMITATIONS!!!

SIR JAMES MURRAY'S FLUID MAGNESIA.

Prepared under the immediate care of the Inventor, and established for upwards of thirty years by the PROFESSION, for removing BILE, ACIDITIES, and INDIGESTION, restoring APPETITE, preserving a moderate state of the bowels, and dissolving uric acid in GRAVEL and GOUT; also as an easy remedy for SEA SICKNESS, and for the febrile affection incident to childhood it is invaluable.—On the value of Magnesia as a remedial agent it is unnecessary to enlarge; but the Fluid Preparation of Sir James Murray is now the most valued by the Profession, as it entirely avoids the possibility of those dangerous congestions usually resulting from the use of the article in powder.

Sold by the sole consignees, Messrs. BAILEY and WILLS, of Horsley Fields Chemical Works, Wolverhampton, and by all wholesale and retail Druggists and Medicine Agents throughout the British Empire, in bottles, 1s., 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 11s., and 21s. each.

63- The Acidulated Syrup in bottles 5s. each.

N.B.—Be sure to ask for "Sir James Murray's Preparation," and to see that his name is stamped on each label, in GREEN INK, as follows:—"James Murray, Physician to the Lord Lieutenant."

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS invincible

Remedies for Scorbatic Eruptions.—Mr. Spivey, Chemist, Howden, states that a customer of his had suffered for fifteen years with scorbatic humours in the face, and had consulted the most eminent medical men in the town and neighbourhood, without deriving the slightest benefit. "A few weeks ago, I advised her to give your Ointment and Pills a trial, which she did, and after taking a few boxes of Pills, and using the Ointment, I am happy to say they have effected a complete cure."

Sold by all Medicine Vendors throughout the World; at Professor Holloway's Establishments, 244, Strand, London, and 80, Maiden Lane, New York; by A. Stampa, Constantinople; A. Guidicy, Smyrna; E. Main, Malta; and by all European and Native Vendors of Medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

ADDISCOMBE and DIRECT APPOINTMENTS.—The REV. C. J. HUGHES, M.A. (Wrangler, Cambridge), formerly Principal Mathematical Master at Wimbledon, RECEIVES TEN PUPILS, and occasionally has a VACANCY.
Prospectus on application.

Adelaide Lodge, 61, Finchley Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

NAVAL EDUCATION.

ST. MARY'S HALL, SOUTHSEA, HANTS.

THE REV. THOMAS KNIGHT, B.A., Hon. St. John's Cam. and Incumbent of St. Mary's, Portsmouth, continues to RECEIVE TWENTY YOUNG GENTLEMEN, to EDUCATE for the Army, Royal Navy, and Marines, Addiscombe, and Woolwich.
Mr. Knight will have FOUR VACANCIES after Christmas. Terms, inclusive of French and Drawing, &c., Eighty guineas per annum, or Ten guineas per month.

ORIENTAL LANGUAGES.—Mr. SMALL proposes the formation of two or more HINDUSTANI CLASSES during the Christmas Vacation at Addiscombe, for the especial benefit of Gentlemen Cadets who have already entered the College, or who purpose shortly doing so.
Instructions given also, on moderate terms, privately or in class, in Hebrew, Sanscrit, Persian, and Bengali, as well as Hindi, either at Mr. S.'s Classroom, 3, Leadenhall Street; at No. 16, Castle Street, Leicester Square; or at the residences of Pupils in London and vicinity.

Address, Rev. G. SMALL, St. John's Grove, Croydon, S.

EDUCATION.—A benefited Clergyman, Graduate in Honours of Cambridge, residing in a most delightful part of England, and possessing very high recommendations as a private Tutor, wishes to TAKE CHARGE of THREE or FOUR BOYS, under sixteen years of age, whose friends may be in India, to EDUCATE for the East-India College, the Public Schools, or Universities. The Advertiser is competent to instruct in several of the Oriental languages, in addition to the higher mathematics, and classics, and was for some years most successful in preparing pupils for Haileybury. He would be happy to meet the wishes of any party of high respectability, who might, under present circumstances, wish to place his sons on comparatively moderate terms.

Address, Rev. J. JONES, Parsonage, Rowsley, near Bakewell, Derbyshire.

BIRKENHEAD.—HOLLY-BANK SCHOOL,
Canning Street, Woodside Ferry.

Mercantile, Professional, Classical, and Mathematical.

Principal—Rev. J. S. ROUCHER, M.A., St. John's Coll., Cambridge; assisted by able and experienced Masters.

The "Outline of Education" sent post-free from Holland House, or the Publishers of Mr. Kimber's works—RIVINGTONS, Waterloo Place; and PARKER and SON, 445, West Strand.

HANWELL COLLEGE, MIDDLESEX.
SEVEN MILES FROM LONDON.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

The increasing importance of the cultivation of the LANGUAGES of the EAST, and the immediate advantages that result from their acquisition, have induced the Principal to make arrangements for affording INSTRUCTION therein.

The rudiments of Hindustani, Persian, and Arabic, will be taught to all who are intended for employment in our Eastern Possessions; and the more advanced Pupils will be prepared for their examination on their arrival in India.

The course of instruction includes not only that which is necessary to pass at Addiscombe or Haileybury, but all that may be requisite for those who are destined to pursue an Indian career.

The history and geography of the country, and the general features of Anglo-Indian life, are taught by a gentleman whose perfect acquaintance with India, from long residence there, peculiarly qualifies him for the duties he has undertaken.

The great advantage to Parents in India of an Institution of this kind must be evident. At a short distance from London, in a proverbially healthy locality, they may place their children from an EARLY AGE under a system from which there need be no departure until their education is completely finished; a class being expressly formed for the matriculation at the University of London, wherein they may matriculate at sixteen years of age, and graduate two years after that time.

Prospectuses, with full particulars, may be had on application to the Rev. J. A. EMERTON, D.D., Hanwell College, Middlesex.

TO INDIAN PARENTS AND OTHERS.

THE widow of an Indian Officer will be happy to receive ONE or TWO LITTLE GIRLS to be EDUCATED with her own, for whom she has a Governess. The Children would have the benefit of careful and religious training, and change of air in the Autumn. A Lady with One or Two Children, who would share the same bed-room, not objected to.

Address, X. Y. Z., care of Mr. Edmonds, News Agent, Polygon, Clapham, of whom full particulars may be had.

MR. C. J. YEATMAN, who during many years was engaged in preparing Candidates for admission to Haileybury College, RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS under sixteen years of age, to be educated for the Universities, the Public Schools, and Indian Appointments.
Edgware, Middlesex.

A LADY is desirous to hear of an opportunity for her Portuguese NURSE to RETURN to INDIA. She could give her the very highest character, either to wait upon a lady or young ladies, or to take the care of quite young children. In the latter capacity she is peculiarly trustworthy.

Refer by letter to Mrs. R. B. G., Post-office, Clapham, S.

TO PARENTS IN INDIA AND OTHERS.

THE Wife of a medical man, residing in a healthy village in Buckinghamshire, wishes to take the entire CHARGE of TWO or THREE LITTLE GIRLS, to educate—with the assistance of a resident French Governess—with her own children.

Apply by letter, or personally, to C. C., 42, Bedford Square, London.

DOWN'S HOUSE, TAUNTON, SOMERSET.

TO BE LET, with immediate possession, this Gentlemenly VILLA RESIDENCE, about one mile and a quarter from the town; it stands in a Lawn, and is approached by a short carriage-drive from the turnpike. It is sheltered, and well drained. The house comprises breakfast, dining, and drawing rooms, eight bed-rooms, and offices, arranged with every comfort and accommodation, and a good garden and stable.

Also, near the above premises, are TWO SEMI-DETACHED DWELLINGS; one consists of two sitting-rooms, seven bed-rooms, garden, and convenient offices and stables. The other of a parlour, five bed-rooms, offices, garden, and stable. The air is mild and salubrious, is adapted for persons returning from hot climates. Rent low. For further particulars apply to the owner, Captain G. BEADON, R.N., Creechbarrow, near Taunton.

LADIES' INDIA OUTFITS.

CHRISTIAN and RATHBONE combine this department with their extensive home trade, which enables them to supply at moderate prices, ARTICLES in LINEN, HOSIERY, and UNDER CLOTHING, of materials suited to the climate.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE news from India by the present Mail, though highly satisfactory, will occupy but little space to relate, owing to the non-arrival of the Calcutta budget. The chief incident of the fortnight is, of course, the final relief of Lucknow, and the removal of the feeble and infirm to Cawnpore. It was on the 9th Nov. that Sir Colin Campbell crossed the Ganges and advanced into Oude, with the intention of forming a junction with the force under Brigadier Hope Grant at Alumbagh. Before achieving this purpose, he carried and blew up an insignificant fort, called Jellalabad, lying a little way off the road. From Alumbagh the direct road to the Residency crosses a plain and passes through the heart of the city. But Sir Colin was too old a soldier to be tempted into street-fighting when the same end could be gained without encountering such a certain loss of life. He therefore chose a circuitous route to the right, and on the 15th made himself master of the house and pleasure-grounds of Dilkhoosha (Heart's Delight), and also of the Martinière College. Nothing daunted, the enemy returned to the attack that same afternoon; but after a fierce struggle were driven across the canal with considerable loss. On the following morning the British army traversed the plain, and after a desperate fight chased the rebels out of Secunderbagh, an inclosed garden covering the road to the Residency. A heavy cannonade was then directed for three hours against another inclosure or outpost of the enemy, which was only carried late in the evening by the invincible determination of the troops. The mess-house was captured on the next day, Tuesday, the 17th; and before night closed in, head-quarters were fixed in the Motes Mahal (Pearl Palace), where Sir Colin was met by Sir James Outram and Sir Henry Havelock. In these operations five officers were killed and thirty-one wounded; the loss in men is not mentioned. On the 18th and 19th more fighting took place, but the details are not given, except that the rebels were evacuating the city in great numbers. This, indeed, will be one of the most trying phases of the insurrection. The mutineers, like a ball of quicksilver, when cut through at one point, will roll away and form themselves into innumerable smaller bodies all over the country. On the 20th, the women, the children, and the wounded, were sent off under a strong escort to Cawnpore, and at length fully relieved from the agony of hope deferred through so many tedious months. Further than this nothing is yet known of the movements of the Commander-in-Chief; but already has he earned an indisputable title to the gratitude and admiration of his countrymen.

In the mean time, General Windham, who had been left in command of the garrison at Cawnpore, has marched out to give battle to the rebels.

Messrs. ALLEN AND Co. have much pleasure in informing their Subscribers, and the public in general, that, from the commencement of the new year, the Indian Mail will be published four times a month, on the day of the arrival of each Mail from India. It is also their intention to permanently enlarge the size of their paper, and to avail themselves of the latest improvements in the art of printing. The contents of their journal will, as heretofore, comprise the fullest and most recent intelligence on all matters connected with the East; together with a gazette of all civil and military appointments. The very great favour and patronage bestowed for SIXTEEN YEARS upon Allen's Indian Mail enable the Proprietors to combine the contemplated advantages as to form, type, and frequency of publication, with a reduction of price to one-half of the present rates of subscription. From the commencement of the new year each number will, accordingly, be charged only SIXPENCE stamped: and Messrs. ALLEN and Co. have no hesitation in saying that no other paper in the kingdom will be found to contain an equally varied and extensive amount of information on every subject connected with the British Empire in the East.

who, with their formidable park of artillery, had arrived within fifteen miles of the station. They did not, however, await his approach, but speedily retreated across the Jumna, and encamped at Calpee. Brigadier Cotton's column, after scouring the country round Muttra, had returned to Agra, probably in anticipation of a visit from the Gwalior mutineers. Major Eld had also done good service in driving the Rohilcund rebels from the vicinity of Bolundshuhur and Allyghur. Near Delhi, Brigadier Showers's column had been equally active, having captured four forts and seventy guns, besides seizing eight lacs of rupees, a large store of ammunition, and many horses. Another column, under Colonel Gerrard, of the 14th N.I., encountered the Joudpore legion at Narnol, in the Jhujjur district, and inflicted on them severe chastisement. Colonel Gerrard, however, was killed in the fight, as was likewise the rebel chief, Sunnund Khan. In Delhi itself justice was being satiated. Twenty-four members of the royal family had been tried, condemned, sentenced, and shot. The natives generally seemed to take but little courage from this summary procedure, and hesitated to return to their former abodes. In the Punjab, the Gogaira disturbances had been finally suppressed; but not before Lieut. Neville, of H.M.'s 81st, was murdered, while proceeding down the river on his way to Bombay.

From Central India the news is cheering. Brigadier Stuart had succeeded in driving the mutineers out of Mundesore and relieving Neemuch. The other column, under Brigadier Stewart, had secured the safety of both Saugor and Jubbulpore. Affairs in Indore, however, were not yet satisfactory; but it was anticipated that the early arrival of Sir Robert Hamilton, backed by a movable column under Sir Hugh Rose, would speedily restore tranquillity and strengthen the hands of Holkar. Slight disturbances had taken place at some few points in the Bombay presidency, though not of a nature to cause any serious alarm.

Troops from England continued to arrive in rapid succession, to the astonishment of the natives, who remarked with awe and wonder that the sea threw up soldiers every day. In the absence of any very extraordinary blunders on the part of the British commanders, or of equally strange hallucinations on the part of the sepoys who still remain faithful, it may now be said that the neck of the mutiny has been broken, and that time, patience, and tact will gradually and surely re-establish peace and confidence.

BENGAL.

THE MUTINY.

AGRA.—The mystery of the surprise at Agra on the 10th October has now been completely cleared up. Neither Greathead nor the garrison knew that the enemy were beside them, for the best possible reason—the two forces came into the field almost together, the insurgents being as much astonished as their opponents at their unexpected vicinage. Ladies had the previous evening been over the ground occupied by the enemy at daylight next morning. Mr. Thornhill, C.S., had examined it latest of all. The mutineers were convinced that they had no one but the garrison to deal with, and when they seized our scouts they said, "they had only the 3rd Europeans to encounter; that they had thrashed them on the 5th of July before, and were ready to do so again"—a rather striking illustration, as it turned out, of men reckoning without their hosts.

Letters from Grant's column speak of the crop all along the road, from this to Cawnpore, as excellent, both kureef and rubbee. "The ruins of the police station-houses, and of the Suraees at the halting-places, and the absence of the telegraphic wire, were almost the only things on the line of march indicative of the storm that has lately passed over the country."

We have received advices from Agra of the 2nd Nov. from which we learn that the Gwalior mutineers were then near Calpee. Colonel Cotton's detachment had arrived at Muttra, having cut up one hundred and fifty rebels at Begree, a village where they captured some ammunition, &c. At Allyghur, our Europeans and Sikhs, accompanied by the Jat horse, went off to Adhaura, a small village nine miles off, which was full of rebels. They were surprised by our troops, about fifty of them being killed, and an equal number taken prisoners, with lots of cattle.

The Mr. Clifford, of the Civil Service, killed in the little affair with Colonel Showers's column on the 31st October, was the gentleman who escaped, almost miraculously, from Goorgaon on the mutiny of the native regiments at Meerut and Delhi. He came in here with scarcely a stitch on his back, with the painful impression that his sister was massacred at Delhi, but she also providentially escaped. Mr. Clifford left this not long ago to be at his post. Goorgaon is only a few miles from Delhi. Mr. Harvey, the recently appointed Commissioner of Delhi, is still here. Colonel Cotton's little army is doing a great deal of good, and if the civil authorities will only let him alone, he will render essential service to the state.

ALLAHABAD.—Extract from a letter from Allahabad, dated 5th October:—

"Allahabad will shortly be, what I have always said it should be, the leading station in India for troops. It is at present a perfect scene of business, and erections going on at every point. The railway train now starts from the ghaut every morning for the city, conveying loads of men, soldiers, cannon, shot, shell, and every article of war, giving the hitherto quiet city more the appearance of a European one than otherwise. This use of the rail in the conveyance of men is a source of great wonder to the natives; and the astonishment to them is, where do they all come from; and how many more are there? is the inquiry. The Sikhs are particularly curious, and stood in utter amazement at Captain Peel's forces at Lohunda. The other day their cry was, 'Very strong men, very strong.' No wonder, to see the Jacks landing the 34-pounders like a log, and not a word from their lips."

ASSEERGHUR, Nov. 12.—A detachment of the field force, Hyderabad contingent under Captain Hare, arrived here this morning, en route to Mhow. The strength of this detachment is eighty sabres, four 6-pounders, and 250 bayonets. The detachment was preceded by a large batch of mules for the Mhow force. They passed on and have not halted here. Brigadier C. Stuart, of the 14th light dragoons, with his force from Aurungabad, will be here to-morrow. He is at Boorhampoor to-day.

BEHAR.—The following is an extract of a letter dated Camp before the Entrenchment, Dehree, the 9th November, 1857:—

"It was rumoured that the 32nd mutinous regiment were strongly posted at a village named Danchooah, which place is about ten miles south-west of Honore. So Captain Rattray with a party of men went to meet them on the 7th. An engagement ensued, in which the rebels lost fourteen killed. The wounded they took care to take with them from the field, and it is hard to make a guess as to the number, but several I presume. It is said that the rebels have wended their way to a place called Peeroo. They made an obstinate resistance in this skirmish, till forced to retire. We lost poor Lieutenant Boyd in this action with six others, and about sixteen wounded. It is a great pity that the 32nd had not ere this been entirely routed whilst they passed the road to Gya by Major English, who is there with a strong force of Europeans and Sikhs and two or three guns. Umar Sing with his rebel army is yet quite snug in his fastness in the Rhotas hills, and it is rumoured that when he is sufficiently strengthened he will make a dash on Sherghotty and the surrounding villages. The weather now is getting delightfully cool and pleasant.

BOLUNDSHUHUR.—We understand that the insurgents under Wallidad Khan, are again making head in the neighbourhood of Bolundshuhur, and in consequence a detachment from the garrison of Allyghur, under Major Eld, has moved out to disperse them. A force consisting of the head-quarters of the 3rd European regiment, the Muzbee sappers, Sikh cavalry, and militia cavalry, with ten of the 9th lancers attached, the whole under command of Lieut.-Col. Riddell, will march this afternoon towards Allyghur, to strengthen the force there.

CAWNPORE, Nov. 7.—"To-day the sick and wounded were brought into the general hospital from Alumbagh, amounting in all to about eighty Europeans, and some thirty followers, chiefly dooly-bearers. I saw many of the former, and counted no less than nine minus either an arm or leg. Poor fellows! they had hard times of it; only half rations could be served out to each, and up to the time of their coming here they had not tasted food for twenty-four hours. You may rest assured that every care and attention is shown them by the humane mediceos of the general hospital. None of the escort that arrived here could tell me one word about the women and children in Lucknow. How much better would it not have been to have sent down at once these helpless creatures; but this, I suppose, could not well be done or effected; and, furthermore, no carriage was procurable for miles around the place, and all the doolies that were there were occupied by the wounded. The first order issued by his excellency the Commander-in-Chief, on his arrival here, was to direct the officer commanding the 64th to send out every morning 100 rank and file to the ruined arsenal, for the purpose of rooting up shot and other destructibles, and have them brought into the intrenchments. General Windham assumed command of this station to-day. Colonel Wilson, K.H., 64th Foot, is nominated special brigadier, and posted to Cawnpore; and Captain Morphy, of the same corps, is appointed his brigade-major; while Major Stirling assumes command of the 64th regiment. Dr. Hadley, a first-class staff surgeon, as also the Rev. Mr. Moore, chaplain, have arrived to officiate in their respective capacities. Captain Anderson, 64th Foot, has been ordered down to Allahabad, post haste, to assume command of the depot of H.M.'s troops at that station. The weather now is delightfully cool and pleasant throughout the day. One can stroll about, or go a day's march, without being attacked or in dread of coup de soleil. Fevers and bowel complaints prevail in camp, and five casualties occurred during the past week."

DELHI, Oct. 31.—The Ferookhnuggur Nawab has been arrested, and sent in a prisoner to Delhi, to take his trial. A detachment of Showers's column on the 31st November went in pursuit of a body of Mewattee and other insurgents, who had taken up a position on the heights near Sonuh, in the Goorgaon district. They were dispersed, and from 60 to 100 killed, including, it is believed, several Pandies. One melancholy casualty occurred in the death of W. Clifford, of the civil service, who was killed by a shot from one of the rebels. The column will move down in strength from Goorgaon, via Casan and Taoroo, to Sonuh, as the insurgents require to be thoroughly chastised and subdued.

The Mofussilite publishes the following letter from Delhi, dated 29th Oct.:—"As soon as I arrived here I began my wanderings about this doomed city. A sad sight it must be in the eyes of the Prophet! Though it would not be true to say that Delhi has been smashed or destroyed by the British guns, the place looks ruinous. All the houses have been gutted, and nothing is to be seen but lots of rags and sepoy's uniforms. I went along the numberless deserted streets, where no human being is to be met, excepting now and again some lonely old woman. The inhabitants have all been turned out. From the streets I went up the ramparts all round. Legions of starving dogs and cats on the tops of the houses, there meet the eye. There is but one part of the city, and it is evident that it was but thinly populated, in which the work of the guns has been pretty sharp; it is on the side of the Cashmere-gate. The houses here are perforated in many places, and the Protestant church is much injured. As to the ramparts on this side, they are shattered to atoms. It would be sickening to look upon all this desolation, if one could feel for a place which has been saturated with the blood of innocent women and children. 'Tis nonsense to say that Delhi might have been taken by a coup de main, the fortifications are very strong indeed, and are built on a solid plan. Had the miscreants not had the blood of innocent victims to terrify their souls, they might have made a much stouter resistance, though as it was, the assault cost us more than 1,100 men placed hors de combat.

The following diary of doings in Delhi is taken from the Englishman:—

"Oct. 13.—This morning two of the ex-king's sons, viz. Mirza Jobroz Shah, and Mirza Bucktawur Shah, were shot to death by musketry, pursuant to the sentence of the military commission before which they were arraigned. They had nothing of the prince about them in appearance, looking more like khitmutgars than anything else. The ground was kept by about two hundred infantry and some guns, and the firing party was formed by the 60th rifles. Both met their fate with wonderful coolness. A good many spectators were present, but all passed off quietly.

"Oct. 24.—The Jujjur Nawab has been caught, and is now a prisoner in the palace. He is, it seems, to be tried, but having been claimed by the civil power in accordance with some edict directing that only those taken in arms are to be summarily dealt with, it is supposed he will escape punishment, or at all events be leniently treated. The old ex-king is still in the house in the palace, and his two sons, youths of sixteen and twelve or so, are with him, as well as a lot of eunuchs and attendants, male and female. Some people actually go and salaam to the old rascal, and call him 'Huzoor,' and uncover before him. And this is the way things go on and will go on as long as we have possession of the country. The city is still empty, but a number of people are in the Chandnee Chouk, where the Suddur Bazaar has been established. It is pretended that no one known to have been concerned in the rows here is to be admitted, but no one believes it; but how to prevent it? An order came, I understand, to blow up the whole place, but nothing has been as yet done towards it. The breaches have been repaired with mud, and the gates still remain closed except those called the Calcutta, Cashmere, and Lahore gates. An officer's guard mounts at each of these, and all passes are examined. Every day, at eight P.M., these gates are closed for the night.

"Oct. 26.—A Mahomedan, lately, or rather formerly, holding an appointment under Government here, was caught this morning, and was hanged at sunset. The gallows were erected opposite the Kotwalee in the Chandnee Chouk. The rufian manifested the greatest indifference, and seemed not to care in the least; nevertheless, it was satisfactory to see him turned off. He remained suspended for an hour and was then taken down."

An esteemed correspondent writes from Delhi on the 12th instant:—"Colonel Showers's brigade returned to Delhi on the 9th, having taken the forts of Rewarree, Jhujjur, Kunoud, and Bulubghur, about seventy guns, and eight lacs of rupees, besides a large quantity of gram and ammunition, with a number of horses. The fort of Kunoud is particularly strong, wall within wall, with massive gates to each. In this fort were found several of our own 24-pounder guns and 10-inch mortars, with an immense supply of grain and ammunition for a very long siege. It was from this fort that the king of Delhi was supplied with powder, and in it was found an extensive magazine where cartridges had evidently been making to the day we took it. All the apparatus was lying about, showing their recent use, and the walls of the fort were still moist with fresh repairs. It is the stronghold of the Nawab of Jhujjur, who gave himself up a prisoner. He is to be pardoned, we hear, and till the present date the Jhujjur and Kunoud forts, which both belong to him, remain with all their guns and walls uninjured.

"In the same way the Bulubghur Rajah, at the last moment, on the approach of our troops, came out of his fort and gave himself up a prisoner. In this fort were found several of the king's relations, and the old kotwal of Delhi, who was so active in murdering our women; also, hanging on the pegs in the barracks of his troops, were found the grey jackets of the 3rd cavalry, and a number of other mutinous regiments; and yet this Bulubghur Rajah is also spared, and his fort untouched. Brigadier Showers would have shot him without hesitation on such evident proof of his guilt, and for harbouring our worst enemies; but the civilians here, who exercise such an unhappy influence, prevented the brigadier from punishing him.

"Brigadier Showers's party also marched to Sona, and ejected a body of robbers who were collecting there. Sona is hilly, and has hot volcanic springs. The energy with which the brigadier has performed these important services has given universal satisfaction. Though he had scarcely recovered from a severe wound, his rapid marches and determination without doubt were the cause of the forts being given up without resistance, which must have occasioned the loss of many valuable lives. The whole district has been quieted and disarmed by him, if only the civilians will allow the destruction of the forts which he has captured."

"A portion of the movable column proceeded from this station on the morning of the 1st, in chase of the enemy, supposed to be under the immediate command of Koor Sing. We marched the day previous twenty-four miles, did not encamp, but lay under the influence of the night air. At 5 A.M. we started, marched sixteen miles—no enemy—got a glass of grog, and halted three-quarters of an hour; immediately after which we went eight miles further, and, to our astonishment, on the left of the road a cannonading commenced, upon which our commandant gave the order—'Front form divisions.' Captain Peel shouted 'Guns to the front;' they were immediately brought, and a second or two after, Colonel Powell fell with a shot through the head leading the brigade; the bugler sounded the regimental call and 'advance,' when the enemy opened with grape-shot, and seventeen were killed and wounded, principally on account of their being under a good natural cover, forming for them an excellent entrenchment. Our men were exhausted with fatigue, having marched fifty-six miles within forty-eight hours with very little rest. We captured two guns, sacked the town, and drove the enemy back. We had 11 killed and 50 wounded, more or less. The enemy consisted of the 8th N.I., 50th N.I., and some wearing the 31st N.I. uniform, in all about 5,000 men, and our forces were 600. We have some men dangerously wounded."

GHAZEEPORE.—Azimgurh is unsettled again, and Utrowleah and Maharajgunge in the hands of the insurgents. The Goorkahs, under Pollock, have gone after them, and Colonel Longden's brigade will join them, I believe, at Roeha, and then proceed on to Utrowleah. Jounpore is shaky, and another fight is expected there soon. Maun Sing is dead. I much fear the mutineers will overrun Goruckpore, Azimgurh, and Jounpore, after they cut from Lucknow. Goruckpore is in a most disturbed state, and will not be reoccupied for some time yet. Ghazeeapore is quiet enough. Bush, the colonel of the 65th N.I., has been ordered to command the Goorkah force at Allungunge, and will have to start at once.

JATEGAUN.—On the morning of the 13th Nov. the Bheels were attacked near Jategaun by a portion of the 26th regiment N.I. After ascending a hill on which the Bheels were supposed to be stationed, it was found that they had removed to the bottom of the hill during the night, and were then skirmishing with the Poona irregular horse. The 26th followed them down the hill, and came up with them shortly afterwards; but they stood together quite coolly round a red flag that they had, until the 26th got about three hundred yards from them, when the Bheels began to retire, firing from behind bushes. Two companies of the 26th followed them over the hills till one o'clock, when they were compelled to desist from fatigue. However, some of the 26th, with part of the Nizam's infantry, continued the chase, killed five men, and brought in twenty-two women and children prisoners, together with quantities of loot, consisting of tattoos, brass cooking-pots, grain, &c. Fortunately not a single man of the 26th was struck; but many of the Bheels must have been wounded, who, however, managed to escape. The 26th returned to their tents at Jategaun at four o'clock in the afternoon, quite tired and worn out.

JEYPORE, Nov. 22.—The Joudpore legion and the rebels with it, we defeated on Sunday last, with considerable loss, and took all their guns. Our loss was some seventy killed and wounded. Colonel Gerrard, who commanded, was mortally wounded, and died soon after on the field. Jeypore has remained very quiet; its troops co-operated in the above affair, and were of some use. A week ago we sent off to Agra 1½ lakhs of rupees, and yesterday gave a guard of horse and foot to a large party of officers proceeding to Agra from Nusseerabad. This is the second specie remittance Jeypore has sent to Agra, and has furnished guards to officers several times, and given much assistance to our Government. The chief is a nice youth, and is very friendly.

KAMPTEE, Nov. 11.—A company of the 33rd Madras N.I., with a troop of the 4th Madras light cavalry, moved from Jubulpore, to attack a party of insurgents about twelve miles off. In the engagement which took place, the Madrasces killed sixty (counted) of the enemy, and took two small guns and thirty-five prisoners. Captain Tottenham, of the 4th light cavalry, who commanded the party, was badly wounded, and died on the following day.

On hearing of the death of Captain Tottenham, Colonel Cumberlege proceeded with a squadron of the 4th light cavalry to the scene of action, and hanged the whole of the thirty-five prisoners taken in arms.

Intelligence has also been received, that Major Sullivan's party, consisting of one squadron of the 8th Madras light cavalry, one company of the 33rd Madras N.I. and two guns with European artillery, were attacked by 2,000 of the Meywah Rajah's troops with five guns, aided by the mutineers of the 52nd Bengal N.I., at Jokhie on the Mirzapore road. Soon after the action commenced, the axle of one of our guns broke, rendering it useless; but so good use was made of the other, aided by a gallant charge made by Lieutenant Clerk, of the 4th L.C., on their flank, and the steady fire of the 33rd M.N.I., that the enemy soon gave way, leaving two fine brass guns in our hands and seventy of their number dead on the field, of which number thirty were sabred by the cavalry. On our side four troopers and two or three of the 33rd were badly wounded, a good number slightly so, and one artillery driver was killed.

The 1st and 42nd M.N.I. are on their way from Secunderabad to strengthen the Ramptee column, which will then be strong enough to clear the Saugor division of rebels and mutineers."

LUCKNOW.—FROM ALUMBAGH, Nov. 17, 9 A.M.—The Commander-in-Chief is in Lucknow—heavy cannonade in the direction of the palaces. Dilkhosah and Martinière occupied by our troops."

On this the Hurkaru remarks:—"Many of our readers may not understand the purport of the above despatch from Government about the cannonading in the direction of the palaces; the object of the cannonading may in consequence be quite unintelligible to them. Being, however, well acquainted with Lucknow, we are enabled to explain that the palaces consist of a group of buildings called the Mahals, or the residences of Wajid Ali Shah's 300 wives. These palaces stand between the Dil-Khoona (Heart's Delight) and the Martinière, at present in the occupation of Sir Colin Campbell, and the Ballyguard or Residency, in the occupation of Sir James Outram. The enemy is thus placed between two fires, and has to be driven from the mahals, after which the force under Sir Colin Campbell will join that of Sir James Outram. Though these palaces are an extensive structure of brick walls and houses, they are of very weak construction, and would soon crumble under a cannonade of shell and round shot."

BRIGADIER GRANT'S COLUMN, Nov. 6.—"Yesterday the greater part of the force escorted the convoy we brought with us to Allumbagh, and returned."

"The sick and those wounded before General Havelock's force reached Lucknow, were brought back by our force, and have been sent with an escort to Cawnpore."

FIVE MILES FROM ALLUMBAGH, Nov. 9.—"To-day we have shifted our camp one mile nearer Lucknow, and our main picket must be within three miles of Allumbagh, into which our large convoy was safely escorted two or three days ago. Part of the naval brigade, with four 24-pounders, arrived yesterday. The sight of the tars was most refreshing and encouraging."

"NAN GUNGE, Nov. 10.—We are still near Bunnee-bridge; but the Commander-in-Chief has arrived, and we move on Thursday, the day after to-morrow."

"With the troops at Allumbagh, and excluding the 2,000 men in Lucknow, the column would be above 6,000 strong, besides artillery. They have 11 heavy guns, two 8-inch mortars, two 18-pounders, and 18 field guns. The force, too, was being daily strengthened by reinforcements from Cawnpore both in infantry and artillery."

"CAMP MAIGUNGE, THREE MILES BEYOND BUNNEE, Nov. 11, 1857.—We are still waiting for reinforcements. We have 6,000 men and 30 guns, and the siege train, with Captain Longden's company royal artillery, is expected here to-morrow. We shall then, I believe, march to Lucknow, and commence by shelling the city."

"Camp, about twelve miles from Lucknow, Nov. 4.—We have been encamped here for three days, waiting for Sir Colin, who is expected in camp to-day."

"We have hitherto met with no opposition, though our movements are most narrowly watched by the evaporating enemy. On the 3rd they expected us to march as we always do, at four or three in the morning, and had filled a village on the road with infantry, intending, it is supposed, to allow our column to pass, and then to attack and to loot our baggage. As luck would have it, an order came, which caused us to break up our camp and march at daylight; so we disappointed our friends, and instead of plundering as they expected, they were killed and burnt themselves."

"Yesterday some sixteen villages were burnt round our camp. We have never done this where unopposed, but opposition riles the men, and incendiarism is the sure consequence. Now we are in Oude, we can scarcely make a mistake. The whole country is risen, under their chiefs, against us; and unless we show that to be a losing game, they will fancy that we are weak and unable to punish; from what I saw on the 3rd, the enemy we have to deal with here is utterly to be despised away from their loop-holed walls and cover. I never saw large bodies of men absquatulate so suddenly in my life; like figures in a magic lantern, they are here, and in a moment vanish entirely. This is a good deal to be accounted for by the fact of the greater part of the country being covered by high jowar crops, so high that an army can hide itself, though close to you; the sugar-cane kates are also splendid cover, and save hundreds of wretches from the sabres of our cavalry."

News from the Commander-in-Chief's camp at Alumbagh, 9 A.M. of the 13th.—After several skirmishes in the day, ending in capture of two guns, the fort of Jullalabad was taken and blown up. The Commander-in-Chief has communicated with Sir James Outram.

The garrison at the Alumbagh have not only received supplies of provisions and troops, but have sent their sick and wounded into Sir Colin Campbell's camp. They were sent under an escort of Sikh horsemen, which very nearly proved fatal to them. For on approaching the British camp they were mistaken by the sailors of Capt. Peel's brigade for an advanced body of the enemy. Two guns were at once brought from the rear, loaded with grape, and pointed at the advancing party, who were quite ignorant of the warm reception the Jacks were about to give them. By the merest accident the face of the European doctor with the escort was recognised, and the slaughter of the whole party was thus averted.

On the 15th of November Sir Colin Campbell, who left Cawnpore on the 11th instant, and rode forty miles in one evening, advanced on Lucknow. He was joined at the Alumbagh by 900 effective men, and had with him besides, two troops of European horse artillery under Captains Remington and Blunt with five guns each; a European horse battery under Captain Bouchier; 60 European royal artillery with two eighteen-pounders and two eight-inch mortars; 320 of the 9th lancers; a squadron of Sikhs and Pathans from the 1st, 2nd, and 5th Punjab cavalry and from Hodson's horse, altogether 430 men; 600 of H.M.'s 8th and 95th regiments; 1,000 of 2nd and 4th Punjab and Sikh infantry; two companies Sikh sappers and some of the old sappers and miners; nearly the whole of H.M.'s 93rd Highlanders; 200 of H.M.'s 5th fusiliers; 350 men of H.M.'s 53rd; 300 of the naval brigade with guns, and two squadrons of cavalry with two guns that escorted the Commander-in-Chief from Cawnpore to the British encampment.

On the 15th of November the rebels were driven from the Dilkhosha and the Martinière, after a running fight of some two hours' duration. Two hours after their evacuation of these places, they made an attack upon the British position, but were repulsed with heavy loss. In the two engagements the loss on the side of the British was but trifling. The officers killed were Lieutenant Mayne, horse-artillery, quartermaster-general's department; and Lieutenant Wheatcroft, of the carabineers. The advance was made with all due caution, the heavy guns and mortars being well brought into play. It is not thought that the rebels will be able to make a prolonged resistance. Every palace is in itself a fort; but there are only eight, and the heavy guns with Sir Colin Campbell would completely pulverize them in a short time.

MEHIDPOOR.—"Camp, Onail, viā Mhow, 17th Nov.—"On the 11th, Major Orr occupied Mehidpoor, which place the rebels evacuated the previous day. On the 12th, with three hundred and thirty-seven sabres of the first, third, and fourth Hyderabad Contingent Cavalry, the enemy was pursued; they were overtaken at Rawul, where, to the number of from four to five hundred, and two guns, they made a stand. Our cavalry immediately attacked, killed, and dispersed the whole band, and took the two 9-pounder guns, with a large train of carts loaded with ordnance stores. Pressed by the pursuit, the enemy had abandoned three of the guns they had taken from Mehidpoor, and two native guns of large calibre they had taken from Burnnigger; Major Orr has therefore recovered all the artillery taken by the rebels at Mehidpoor, and two guns which they brought there. The enemy had upwards of one hundred killed, and left seventy-four prisoners in our hands. Lieutenant Samwell was dangerously wounded, and Captains Murray and Clerk had their horses shot under them. Our casualties are considerable; the enemy fought with obstinacy after they were broken. The affair is most honourable to men and officers, and as useful as it is creditable."

We have letters from Mehidpoor to the 19th Nov. On the 11th, the cavalry from Brigadier Stuart's column, under Major Orr, came upon the rebels unawares, killing 150 of them, and capturing twelve guns. The enemy were dispersed in all directions, and seventy-six prisoners were taken. On the 17th, the force arrived at Mehidpoor, where the prisoners were tried by drum-head court-martial, and sentenced to be shot. The troops were accordingly paraded in the evening, when the prisoners were brought forth, and had their eyes bandaged and hands tied behind them. They were placed in a line, sitting at the distance of two yards, from one another, and two musketeers were told off to each of them. When the bugle sounded, the soldiers fired, and the prisoners were shot dead. The same evening a part of the force crossed the Chumbul, and encamped on the other side, two marches from Mundesore, a place distant from Oojein, in a north-western direction, about eighty miles.

MHOW, Nov. 17.—We still remain shut up in the fort, but some officers live in the bungalows, in the vicinity, which they do at their own risk. For several days past there were rumours that the Mehidpore rebels are coming to attack us, but up to this date they have not shown themselves. If they do we will give them a warm reception. News has arrived from the camp of the Malwa field force that they have entirely defeated the Mehidpore rebels with great loss. About 200 of the enemy were killed, but, thank God, not one casualty occurred among our troops. They also recaptured all the guns taken by the rebels at Mehidpore,—the 14th light dragoons and the Hyderabad cavalry having come upon them unawares. The Sikhs of the late Bhopal contingent came in here yesterday, being those who retreated from Indore with Colonel Durand. Some of the 14th light dragoons, from Aurungabad are expected in to-morrow. They are sadly wanted here. Lieutenant Lemarchand and family came in from Hoshungabad on the night of the 14th.

MUNDLAISIR.—The Bheels still continue troublesome on the road. The widow of the late rajah of Dhar has poisoned herself. The durbar and vakils are most of them in confinement some are to be imprisoned at Mundlaisir.

NAGPORE.—We hear that the right wing and head-quarters of the 6th Madras cavalry, under the command of Col. Munsey, marched from Kamptee on the 28th October en route to Jubbulpoor, which station they expected to reach in twelve or fourteen days. A jemadar's guard of the regiment has been stationed at Dhoomah to keep all quiet thereabouts. The same day the left wing of the regiment reached Jubbulpoor, a troop was detached to Patencherry to put down a disturbance. The families of the corps then at Jaulnah were to start in a few days for Arcot.

NEEMUCH.—We have been favoured with a letter from Ahmedabad, dated the 18th Nov., from which we learn that the news from Neemuch is very unsatisfactory. The force, with the exception of the cavalry, are completely blockaded in their weak fort by the rebels, but the fire of our people has been very damaging to the foe, of whom some 200 have been killed. The whole of the houses in the pretty cantonment of Neemuch have been burnt down and the bazaar gutted by the insurgents. Before this, no doubt the Mhow force, under Brigadier Stuart, will have relieved the gallant little band. The cavalry had gone off to ensure the safety of a very small party of European troops—some twenty-five or thirty men and three officers, we believe—that had been most unwisely sent from Nusseerabad, as also to harass in any way they could the besieging rebels. We are glad to learn that the cavalry have throughout behaved very well, and that the men and officers wounded in the Jeeran fight were doing right well. Col. Jackson had applied to be permitted to resign the service, and it was expected that under the peculiar circumstances of the case he would be permitted to do so.

BARODA, Nov. 28.—The Mundesore rebels attempted to escalate the Neemuch fort on the 21st instant. They were beaten off with heavy loss, and evacuated Neemuch on the 22nd. Our loss during the fortnight's siege has been only four sepoy wounded and two officers—Barnes and Williams—slightly, and all are doing well. The sepoys of the 12th Bombay N.I. behaved very nobly.

On the 21st, the Mhow column encamped near Mundesore. They were attacked by the enemy, who were defeated and pursued. On the 22nd, the enemy were attacked by the Mhow column. Their guns were captured, and they were driven from their position with heavy loss. Some Rohillas are holding out in a fort, and our heavy guns were moving up. On that day, it was proposed to shift the camp nearer the fort. No particulars are given of our loss. All quiet at Neemuch on the 24th. The above intelligence comes from Captain Showers, who has sent it to Colonel Durand.

NUSSEERABAD.—The Delhi Gazette publishes the following letter from Nusseerabad, dated Nov. 2:—"This morning on parade a startling occurrence took place. Immediately after muster was taken the native officers and men of the 15th, 30th, and 72nd regiments Bengal N.I., who had ever since the mutiny remained staunch to us, were ordered to lay down their arms and accoutrements, which was at once done. It is said the order had only been received this very morning, a few minutes before going to muster. To depict the astonishment and sorrow of the men is impossible, nor is it possible to describe the wonder and regret of the officers, for most of these poor men had accompanied them at the time of the mutiny, and their conduct at all times had been exemplary. The native officers and men were ordered to leave cantonments during the day. We hear the matter is referred to higher authority, as it is the general opinion of the officers that the order was issued under a misconception. The Bengal officers are ordered off for the sixth time and it will be their third start for Agra. They muster about two dozen officers and half a dozen ladies. In consequence of the loss of officers at Jeeran, two officers of H.M.'s 83rd are to proceed at once to Neemuch, and they have an escort of twenty-five Europeans, although the road is clear and the distance not half that the Bengales have to go. The most extraordinary part of this morning's order is that the Governor-General on the 13th September orders these very men to have their arms confirmed to them for their fidelity."

The Delhi Gazette furnishes a list of officers proceeding from Nusseerabad to Agra and in Rajpootana: Artillery.—Captain Timbrell. 15th Native Infantry.—Colonel Shuldham, commanding; Captain Cuppage. Lieutenants: Pritchard, interpreter, officiating civil, Joudpore; Caunter, officiating Mhairwarrah, local battalion; Philpots, officiating civil, Ajmere; Brown, adjutant. Ensigns: Wheeler, Campbell, and Evans. Dr. Clarke, horse artillery, in medical charge. 30th Native Infantry.—Lieut.-Colonel Campbell, commanding; Lieut.-Colonel Loftie. Major Morrieson, officiating interpreter. Captains: Fenwick, acting adjutant; Bishop, officiating major of brigade, R.F.F.; Swinhoe, duty, Jeypore. Lieutenants: Vincent; Pierce, officiating civil Beawr.; Hawkins, duty, Jeypore; Harcourt. Ensigns: Cape and Hood. Surgeon Andrews, in medical charge. 72nd Native Infantry.—Lieut.-Colonel Abbott, commanding. Captains: Ford, Bridge, Andrews. Lieutenants: Hallet, acting-adjutant; Gibbs; Sharpe, interpreter and quarter-master; Halkett, with Brigadier Grant's column. Ensign Knight; Surgeon Shurlock. Families.—Mrs. Timbrell and two children, Mrs. Fenwick and two children, Miss Fergusson, Mrs. Vincent, Miss Ford, Mrs. Bridge, Mrs. Andrews, Mrs. Hallett and two children, Mrs. Sharpe and one child.

Among the numerous acts of devotion and gallantry lately performed by our countrymen in India, which have elicited the admiration of England and the world, there are few which will shine forth more conspicuously than one which has just been brought to our notice. When the station of Nusseerabad was in the hands of the mutineers, and every other European had fled from the scene, an officer of the 30th N.I. might have been seen in the lines of that regiment. That officer was Captain Collingwood Fenwick, who remained for several hours, at the imminent risk of his life, vainly hoping that his presence and influence might induce the men to return to their allegiance. Finding his exertions to be in vain, he quitted the place, and walked forty miles during the same night to join his brother-officers, who were at that distance from the station.

NYNEE TAL.—A correspondent at Nynsee Tal writes on the 31st October:—"We have been complete prisoners here for the last six months, surrounded by thousands of rebels who infest the forests round the foot of the hills; we have had two engagements with the rascals. Now we have just received information, that 7,000 or 8,000 of them are within three marches of Huldwanee, at the foot of the hills, on the Bareilly side; of course they are sent by Khan Bahadur to cut us up, if possible, so we are preparing to give them a warm reception. Major Ramsay, our good commissioner here, met with a sad accident this morning. His gun, it appears, went off by accident, and mutilated his left hand severely. We had a heavy storm of hail two days ago, which lasted an hour and a half; the place was quite white. This shows the approach of winter, and it has caused the weather to set in very cold. Nothing stirring here, only one happy thing, is, that at last through the exertions of our commissioner, the letter dāk is to be opened to-morrow, November 1st, through Mooradabad to Meerut, instead of going round via Mussoree. This looks well, and we sincerely hope soon to find the same road safe for European travellers."

PUNJAB.—Intelligence has been received that, on the 29th Oct., Capt. M'Andrew, with 400 police infantry, and some of the Lahore light horse, after a forced march of from twenty-five to thirty miles, the most part through a heavy jungle, surprised the insurgents, killed from forty to fifty men, and captured an immense quantity of property, camels and cattle. On the following day, Major Chamberlain seized upwards of 1,500 head of cattle and many flocks. Capt. Cureton also was successful on the right bank of the Ravee, capturing 600 head of cattle. These losses will soon bring the insurgents to their senses.

The Lahore Chronicle publishes an interesting letter from Mooltan, dated the 14th Nov.:—

"The troubles in the Googaira district have at length ceased, and the labours of the forces employed in the pursuit of the Khurl and Kutia gentry have been brought to a close without honour or glory. For some time the insurgents, divided into small bands, had been knocking about the Bhar, anxious to make peace with us. The chief of the Kutia tribe appears at last to have summoned sufficient courage to undertake the task. He surrendered himself to the commissioner, Major Hamilton, and the Khurl chief followed his example a few days after. The chiefs agreed to restore all the property plundered by them or their followers, or to pay an equivalent for the same. It is, however, a serious mistake to listen to any terms proposed by these savages; they have been in open and armed rebellion against the state; they have set our authority at defiance, and only gave up the struggle when they found their cause a hopeless one. Mercy they do not understand and are careless about it. It was their custom in the time of the Sikhs, to get up a rebellion after an interval of ten or five years; but their former masters wiser than ourselves, never troubled themselves about securing the persons of the offenders, their efforts being confined to the capture of all cattle found in the Bhar. This accomplished, the Sikh battalions marched back in triumph to Lahore. The rebellious people finding themselves deprived of the only means of subsistence, for they lead a purely pastoral life, soon returned to a sense of their duty.

"The mischief, committed by these insurgents, has been both serious and considerable. Their career, though short-lived, has been marked by murder, pillage, ruin, and desolation. Two European officers have been killed, one of them in cold blood; they have destroyed villagers inimical to their interests, and the Hindoo women have been the victims of the most wanton brutalities at their hands. The customs establishment of the Sutlej line has been totally disorganized; the customs houses burnt down, their inmates being obliged to fly for safety to the nearest Tuhseel or Thanna. Surely for these crimes, it is right and proper to exact due penalties. As I have already said, considerate treatment will be entirely thrown away on them, while prompt, speedy, and meet punishment, will save us from much future anxiety, trouble, and annoyance.

"I have taken some pains to ascertain the particulars of Lieut. Neville's melancholy end, as they might prove interesting to his friends. It appears that the poor fellow started from Ferozepore in a country boat, for the purpose of eventually taking sick furlough to Europe; and as his boat was dropping down the stream by a place called Jumlera, on the Sutlej, a party of the rebels, numbering forty, hailed the boatmen from the bank to put to. The request, being backed by threats that they would be fired upon in the event of noncompliance, was at once obeyed, when the boat was attacked. A conflict ensued between the ill-fated occupant and the rebels. Lieutenant Neville is said to have made a stout resistance, cutting down two of his assailants, but being himself wounded, he was seized and carried off to the rebel camp. He offered to pay the sum of Rs. 2,000 as a ransom for his life, and the party who made him a prisoner agreed to the arrangement; but no sooner was he taken before the chief of the insurgents than a command was issued to put him to death, which was done in the most diabolical manner. The commissioner, Major Hamilton, visited the scene of murder soon after, and, I hear, picked up a few relics belonging to the unfortunate man, another victim to Moslem hatred. These people have the same thirst for European blood as their brethren of Hindostan. At Cheechawutnee, they told the Sowers of the 1st Irregular Cavalry, that if the European officers were delivered up, no harm would befall them. The trusty Wordie Major replied, "You must kill us, before you can touch a hair of the heads of our officers."

ROHILCUND.—Colonel Cotton's movable column was at Muttra on the 2nd Nov. The men are exceedingly healthy and very jolly. A good many doubtful characters had been captured, whereof eighteen were convicted, of whom six (including a sepoy of the 23rd) were hanged, and twelve flogged. One of the mutineers who was blown away from a gun in Agra, a few days previously, had on his person a necklace of gold mohurs, silver bangles, loose gold coin and trinkets, to the value of Rs. 5,000, which the chief commissioner directed to be given up and divided among the eight or ten men at Muttra who captured him.

The following account of the doings of Col. Cotton's column is taken from a letter dated Nov. 3rd, published in the Mofussilite:—

"We are now five marches from Agra. When I began to write this letter we were one march on the other side of Muttra, on the Delhi road; but where we are going to, we don't know. We burnt seven villages on our road from Agra; and had two marches through the jungle. Since we started from Agra we have had two days' halt. The first slap we had at the rebels, as you may have heard by the time you get this, was at Futtipore Sikri. This place is about three times larger than the Fort of Agra. If the rascals there had had any spirit in them they might have kept us out a long time. We marched inside the walls of the fort, and the cavalry surrounded the place; the two eight-inch mortars were then turned round, and seven or eight shells were put into the village, which soon set it all in flames. The cavalry cut up all who ran away; then the two nine-pounders were brought within two hundred yards of the palace doors, which were soon blown open. The infantry now got the word to the front, to storm the place. To our surprise, the scoundrels pelted us with stones and bricks, but we soon gave them something sharper and smaller than bricks—the leaden goolie. Their matchlocks and swords, however, wounded a few of our chaps. We finished the existence of about fifty inside, and the cavalry, outside the palace, killed 100. We looted the place next morning, and then marched away a distance of sixteen miles through the jungle. This being a long march, we halted next day; but the following we had another sixteen miles' march. That morning we burnt three villages. The village we encamped at was surrounded by our cavalry, who killed about one hundred of the rebels, and then plundered the village. I went out in the jungle that day, and there I saw fives and sixes in heaps, which the cavalry had killed. We marched into Muttra on the morning of the 1st of November. That evening the native inhabitants were in great glee in consequence of our arrival, which they celebrated by a display of fireworks. We had a halt on the 2nd. While we were in Muttra we hanged six, and flogged twenty. On the 3rd we left Muttra, marching a distance of twelve miles to a place called Jhet. That morning the advanced guard consisted of fifty of our men, the same number of cavalry, and three guns. When we got within a mile of the place, the cavalry got the word to the front, and soon surrounded the place. However, to our disappointment, the rebels, having smelt a rat, had taken the 'wings of the morning.' About one mile on the other side of the village, we pitched our camp. There was a village about two miles beyond this with some rebels in it, who about twelve at noon came out and killed one camel walla, wounding another, and mizzling with a couple dozen of our camels. Out our cavalry turned, and, while I am writing, this is going on, so I will give you the result in my next letter. We expect to come across two or three thousand of the rebels, who have along with them nine guns."

The brigadier has since returned with his little army to Agra.

ROORKEE. Oct. 20.—We have just passed a bit of a panic. On Friday last it was reported that a native rajah had appeared on the opposite bank of the Ganges with 3,000 followers, among whom there were mutineers numbering several hundreds: these were accompanied by cavalry and seven guns. It was said that the rajah had applied to the magistrate of Saharanpore for permission to visit the graves of his ancestors, which are at Peerrankulliar, four miles from Roorkee, as he had been accustomed to do every year. The magistrate gave permission, on condition that he was accompanied by only twenty followers. This did not please his rajahship at all, and the answer he returned to the magistrate was, that he would force his way to Peerrankulliar; hence his sudden appearance on the banks of the Ganges. The residents of Roorkee, who had for some days back left their garri-son, and were pursuing their various official avocations, not being sufficient to meet so large a body of men, requisitions were immediately dispatched to Landour and Saharanpore for assistance. This very opportunely arrived the next day; and the rajah's rascals not thinking it advisable to cross in the face of this reinforcement, shifted their position lower down the river. As the Landour force of sixty Europeans remain here till the end of the month, and the other troops are within hail, we hope to be able to hold our ground against any rabble of this kind at present.

SAUGOR.—The Aurungabad force, under the command of Brigadier C. Stewart, of the 13th light dragoons, on its way to Hoisingabad, has been ordered to stand fast at Asseerghur, at which place it arrived on the 13th Nov. This stoppage has probably been caused by the perilous position of the garrison of the Saugor fort, which, it is said, is threatened by the Gwalior mutineers—some 8,000 men, with forty-two guns. Arrangements are being made to hurry on additional forces, from Poona and elsewhere, to join Brigadier Stewart; and it is not improbable that he will, when so strengthened, be sent to aid the Madras column in hemming in and destroying the mutineers and rebels in Saugor. Very urgent requisitions for succour have been made by the commissioner of the Saugor and Nerbudda territories on the Madras and Bombay Governments.

Saugor Fort, Nov. 13.—All remains quiet in the station and city of Saugor; but the district is completely in the hands of the rebel Boondelas, and it is to be hoped that as soon as a European regiment can be spared, one may be sent in this direction ~~and~~

Rewah, as the march of a European regiment through the Rewah country will soon open the great Deccan road to Jubbulpore, postal communication by which has been stopped since the Calcutta dawk was seized on the 27th ultimo, near Jokhai, about sixty miles distant from Jubbulpore. Even one European regiment would in a short time disperse the rebels that are now in possession of the Jubbulpore, Saugor, Chundeyra, Jhansi, and Jaloun districts. The Dumoh district was made over temporarily to the Punna Raja, when the Madras column retired on Jubbulpore, at which station its presence was much required, owing to the 52nd regiment having mutinied there. While on the march to Jubbulpore, the Madras column was attacked by the 52nd regiment, but the 52nd were well punished by the fire from the guns, and 120 are said to have been killed. The mutineers appear to have shown great bravery in attacking a force containing artillery, cavalry, and infantry. Since then the men of the 52nd who escaped are said to have joined the Shagur rebels, and a combined attack was made by them on Dumoh, which they plundered, and the prisoners are reported to have been released. After plundering Dumoh, the 52nd, to the number of 327 men, went to Gurba Kota, a strong fort in the Saugor district, which has been held for the last three or four months by the Shagur rebels. This stronghold is about thirty miles from Saugor, and from it the rebels have sallied out on their looting expeditions, and have looted villages within eight miles of Saugor. The rebels under the Banpore raja are still at Nerowlee, eleven miles from Saugor, from which position, it is to be hoped that they may soon be dislodged. A troop of Madras cavalry, 100 infantry, and two guns, were sent out some days ago from Jubbulpore, and they attacked, defeated, and dispersed a few thousand rebels at or near Jokai. About 35 to 45 or more leave men, belonging to the 31st Bengal N.I., returned on the 10th or 11th, and have reported that the field-works and guns which the enemy had between Cawnpore and Lucknow, were taken zubburdustee by the Europeans, who went straight at them.

UMRITSUR, Nov. 6.—“During the height of the insurrection, the rajah of the petty hill state of Bussetier sent three messages to the shah of Delhi, offering assistance, and proposing to raise some battalions to seize on the Company's territory contiguous to his own lands on the upper Sutlej. A reply was vouchsafed by his majesty of Delhi. A messenger from Delhi was discovered wandering on the banks of the Sutlej, two stages below Rampore, the rajah's residence; and this man, who turns out to be an old Company's trooper, is now in the custody of the superintendent of Kulu, and has, no doubt, been interrogated by Lord William Hay. A gentleman who was travelling to Chini, had some conversation with his highness the rajah. Geography was introduced, when the chief remarked, ‘Is there not a country called Cabul, — where is it situated?’ This chief has an income of £2,700 sterling. Is it not preposterous to style such an insignificant landholder highness? None should enjoy this dignity but those who have wealth to support it. These chiefs would not then be inflated with false notions of their own importance.”

SHERGOTTY.—A private letter from Shergotty, mentions that Baboo Moheepnarain and Hathenarain of Gya, gave assistance to Kooar Sing and his brother, Ameer Sing, and plundered several villages. They have been taken, and are to be tried at Shergotty.

ALLAHABAD.—A letter from Allahabad says, that the khureff and rubbee crops are likely to be very productive, and that no fears of famine are apprehended. It is also stated that a dhoobe Sunker by name, having given important information to Government, is to have a jaghire.

A NEW LAW.—We observe, by our Legislative Council report, that a Bill was introduced into the council on Saturday, and read a first and a second time, rendering it necessary for all foreigners arriving in India to give notice of their arrival to the magistrate, and forbidding them to travel in India without a passport. The introduction of this Bill is owing, as Mr. Peacock expressed it, “to certain circumstances which have lately come to the knowledge of the government of India.”—Englishman, November 9.

THE 32ND MUTINEERS.—People who are not familiar with the Santhal district, are inquiring how it happened that the two companies of the 32nd N.I., which it is said so nearly captured the Commander-in-Chief with their cavalry, happened to have thirteen elephants. The district is a swamp, impracticable in the rains for wheeled carriages, hence elephants are required for the transport of provisions for the detachment at Burhait. These had to be brought from Rajmahal, as none were procurable where the detachment was posted. The two companies had ten elephants, and four were sent with them from Rajmahal for regimental head-quarters, and when these two companies bolted, they took the elephants for the same purposes, viz. to carry provisions, not sepoy. This is certain, for they looted a village and loaded the elephants. It is said the men of the Deoghur detachment have crossed the Soane, and were making for Gorruckpore, in consequence of the men of the 17th N.I. having written to them to make common cause with them, without effect on the main body.—Englishman.

LIEUT.-COL. POWELL.—We regret to announce the death of Lieut.-col. T. S. Powell, c.b. of H.M.'s 53rd regiment of foot, who was killed in an action with the mutineers on the 1st of November, between Futtehpore and Cawnpore. Lieut.-col. Powell served as aide-de-camp and Persian interpreter to Lord Keane throughout the campaign in Afghanistan in 1838-39, and received the medal for Ghuznee. He also served with the 6th regiment during the Kafir war of 1846-47 (medal). The gallant officer afterwards commanded the 57th regiment during the march throughout the Crimea, until after the battle of Inkermann, and subsequently served as second in command of the regiment until promoted to an unattached lieutenant-colonelcy. For his services in the Crimea Col. Powell received a medal, with clasps for Balaklava, Inkermann, and Sebastopol.

BURDWAN.—A letter from Burdwan mentions that the district is as quiet as ever. The commissioner of the division lately reported that the rajah of Pachete twice made some frivolous excuses for not coming to Raneeungee to receive the Sunnud of Rajahjee, upon which the commissioner was directed to return the Sunnud to Government, and take no notice of him. Since this, he has got into fresh troubles, and has retained counsel to assist in his defence.

A GREAT BOON.—Prince Golam Mahomed has addressed the Governor-General, giving his thanks and those of his family to the Government and the Court of Directors for the great boon conferred on them, by the payment of the arrears of their stipends, amounting to one lac and forty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-three rupees, which have been duly paid to those entitled to them.

THE ANDAMAN ISLANDS.—We hear that a ship of war is about to be sent to the Andaman Islands, to select a good site for a settlement.

PARADE.—The 42nd Royal Highlanders paraded on the evening of the 11th of November, on the parade-ground near the Chowringhee front of Fort William, for the inspection of the Governor-General. Lady Canning honoured the occasion with her presence. The 42nd were in light marching order, and looked as finely as could be wished. There was a most numerous assemblage on the parade-ground, and the evolutions gone through were, marching past, after inspection, in slow and quick time, re-forming line, and advancing to the “general salute.” Lord Canning expressed himself highly pleased in very complimentary terms. The bagpipers were a novelty to many on the ground, and attracted much attention.

ANECDOTE OF SIR COLIN CAMPBELL.—We have heard from excellent authority the following characteristic anecdote of our gallant Commander-in-Chief, Sir Colin Campbell, which we give verbatim to our readers:—“When it became known that His Excellency had determined on proceeding by land to assume the command of the army in the North-West, accompanied by his staff only, and without a military escort, a clergyman of the Scottish Church, while on a visit to Sir Colin, expostulated warmly on the imprudence of the step, urging that it was certain the mutinous sepoys of the 32nd were somewhere near the Grand Trunk-road, Sir Colin, without a moment's hesitation, replied—“Well, in that case it would be, ‘the de'il take the hindmost!’” Our readers are already aware how very near the worthy clergyman's fears were being realized.

A STRANGE PROCEEDING.—The 1st Dragoon Guards have been ordered back to Madras, and were to leave by the steamer this morning. This has caused some surprise, and a still stronger feeling among those immediately concerned, as it was naturally to be supposed that the first cavalry regiment that arrived would be sent up to the seat of war. The horses, consisting of those of the Body Guard, and those recently purchased are all ready, and not a day need be lost in giving to our gallant force up the country that support which they so urgently require. But it seems that they must wait, come what will, until the Bays happen to arrive, as it has been determined that they shall be the favoured regiment. Should anything have happened to the Bays, should they be detained by an accident, or never arrive at all, we have not heard what is the arrangement to be put in force. But the present move is an evident mistake, and may lead to serious consequences. We have heard one reason suggested for the proceeding, which it would be idle to entertain for a moment, for the 1st Dragoon Guards is the lighter regiment of the two. The real reason, it is alleged, is a personal one, the object being to give a certain officer a certain command. But we sincerely trust that a better reason can be found, and that the authorities may be spared the reflections which would naturally follow so mischievous a disregard of the interests of the state.—Bengal Hurkaru, November 10.

MAJOR A. G. COLEBROOKE SUTHERLAND, late of the 25th Bengal native infantry, died suddenly at Akyab on the 27th October, sincerely regretted by all who knew him. He served with the Bengal volunteer corps in China, and was present at the taking of Chusan. He also served in the Punjab, and was wounded at the battle of Chillianwallah. During the Burmese campaign in 1853, in conjunction with Major Nuthall and a small detachment, he was concerned in the well-planned and gallant attack of an important hill fort, the possession of which secured to our troops the Aeng pass, and the best road into the Burmese provinces. The enterprise by which this desirable result was obtained met with deserved praise for the skill with which it was contrived and executed.

MEDICAL ARRANGEMENTS.—We understand that the changes determined on by the Court of Directors in the Medical Board are now before the Council, with the view of being immediately carried out. It is understood, whatever the other arrangements may be, that Dr. John Forsyth is to be director-general, assisted by two inspectors-general.

COMPENSATION.—We believe we may state with confidence that the Government of India have received instructions from home to grant compensation to all persons who have lost property through the mutinies. We have not heard the precise nature of the arrangement, which we believe is to be settled by a committee, but we have heard that the compensation is to be awarded upon a certain regulated scale, according to the rank of the person. Of course by this means some persons might receive less and others more than they have lost, but the plan has the advantage of being simple, and speedy in operation.—Hurkaru.

MADRAS.

DEATH OF ENSIGN GRIFFIN.—We regret to record the death of Ensign Arthur Griffin, 8th N.I., on the 30th of October. This young officer was proceeding to Calcutta in the Maria Hay, en route for Burmah, and it appears that on that day he had climbed to the maintop-gallant mast, and, losing his hold, struck against the rail of the cross-trees, and was precipitated into the sea. A boat was at once lowered by Capt. Middleton, who was much distressed at the accident, but the search for the body was in vain. We believe that he was under seventeen years of age, having received his appointment at the beginning of this year.

MASULIPATAM, Nov. 5.—The steamer England, from Bombay via Madras, anchored in the roads on the 3rd, with the depot and families of H.M.'s 12th lancers, consisting of 3 officers, 56 rank and file, 42 women, and 65 children. The whole landed on the following day. The authorities rented a large building in the Pettah, about 2½ miles from the fort, for their accommodation; the men marched out and took possession, whilst bullock-coaches were provided for the women and children. The England experienced very rough weather on the passage from Madras to this point; it took her seven days to make the voyage. The steamer Caledonia, from Kingstown, Ireland, via Calcutta, anchored in the roads on the 27th Oct. with the head-quarters and three companies of H.M.'s 1st royal regiment of foot, or about 14 officers and 359 non-commissioned and rank and file. The whole disembarked on the 4th Nov. They were 104 days on board since they left Ireland. They occupy the right wing of the European barracks in the fort, and are commanded by Lieut.-Colonel Montgomerie.

THE STEAMER "ENGLAND."—We have been obligingly favoured with an extract of a letter from an officer of rank at Masulipatam, from which we learn that the steamer England had arrived at that port after encountering a very severe cyclone. Everything on deck, 150 tons of baggage, cots, tents, and six horses, were washed overboard; six native followers were also unfortunately swept off the fore-castle by a heavy sea. The ship is much damaged, every sail split to ribbands, all the boats but one washed away, foremast sprung, maintop-mast damaged, and a leak and nine feet of water in the after compartments. For twelve hours the starboard bulwarks were under water and the ship in great danger. Most of the passengers have lost everything they possessed, and some are without even a change of clothes.

SHIPWRECKS.—We regret to announce the wreck of two fine French ships, attended with a melancholy loss of life. One of these was the Grand Bey, wrecked off Coratoor, in the Nellore district, on the 2nd of November. Of her crew, numbering fifteen, only five have escaped. The other was the Eugène, wrecked on the same day, off Kistnapatam, not very far from the Grand Bey. She had a crew of thirteen, of whom only four remain to tell the tale. Mr. Elton, the collector of Nellore, kindly received the poor mariners, and paid every attention to their present wants; and we believe the French consul has requested that they might be sent to Madras.

BOMBAY.

THE LONDON MAIL of October 26 arrived at Bombay Nov. 22 (per Pottinger).

ALI MORAD KHAN.—On the 17th November, his Highness Meer Ali Morad Khan Bahadur, Ameer of Upper Scinde, was visited by H. L. Anderson, Esq., secretary to Government, accompanied by Venayek Wassoodewee, Esq., the Oriental translator. His Highness was about to visit the governor at Matheran.

THE POONA BRIGADE.—On the 16th November, Sir Hugh Rose for the first time in India handled a brigade, and that too in first-rate style, on the general parade-ground at Poona. The gallant general paid particular attention to the movements of the horse artillery under Colonel Turnbull, and the 3rd cavalry under Major Forbes, which performed several evolutions that elicited a high encomium from Sir Hugh.

THE RAILWAY.—It is with much pleasure we have heard that the Government of Bombay have determined to hasten the construction of the railway up to Lahore and on to Delhi. Orders have been received in Kurrachee to employ all the natives procurable, to enable the engineers to fulfil their task with all possible expedition.

GENERAL WADDINGTON.—Major-General C. Waddington, C.B., left Bombay for Kurrachee on the 24th November, by the B.S.N. Co.'s steamer Scindian, to assume command of the Scinde division of the army. A salute of eleven guns was fired from the saluting battery on his departure.

SIR R. HAMILTON.—Sir Robert Hamilton arrived at Bombay on the 24th November, on board the P. and O. Co.'s steamer Ottawa. Sir Robert proposed to proceed at once to Indore, where his presence is urgently needed to restore confidence.

MR. LAYARD.—Among the "fashionable arrivals" at Bombay, we observe the name of the discoverer of Nineveh. Mr. Layard proposes to lay in a fresh stock of special information, in the hope that some evil-disposed constituency may be induced to return him to Parliament.

SWIFT JUSTICE.—A murder was committed in the city of Poona on the night of the 16th November, by a Mussulman named Jhangeer Khan Wullud Peer Khan. The victim of this outrage was a Fakir named Meerza Tukeebeg. They both resided on the same premises in Vithul Pait, and would appear to have had frequent altercations, which resulted in a fatal encounter on the evening of Monday, when Jhangeer Khan beat out the brains of his fellow-lodger with an iron crowbar. The murder was, as we before said, committed on the evening of the 16th; the murderer was arrested on the spot, committed for trial before the Session Court, by the Hoozoor deputy magistrate next day, and was tried, convicted, and sentenced to suffer death on the 18th, i.e. within forty-eight hours of the perpetration of the deed! The murderer confessed his guilt, which was otherwise fully proved by evidence of witnesses.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.—The head-quarters of the 1st troop horse artillery, under command of Lieut.-Colonel Turnbull, from Poona, a squadron of H.M.'s 14th light dragoons, and the 3rd Bombay light cavalry, from Kirkee, under command of Major Forbes, have received orders to hold themselves in readiness to march on Ahmednuggur on Monday, the 23rd Nov., where they will be joined by a company of the 3rd European regiment and a troop of the 14th light dragoons from Sattara; the whole to form a force for field service, which will probably be sent to strengthen General Rose's column in Malwa. A troop of the 3rd dragoon guards, from Kirkee, to be horsed from the 3rd Bombay light cavalry, are under orders to proceed to Sattara, to take the place of the troop of the 14th light dragoons there, ordered on field service. No. 18 light field battery, with reserve company of European artillery, has been ordered to join the Malwa field force from Ahmednuggur. We understand that a wing of a European regiment will in future be permanently stationed at Sattara, and a complete regiment of Europeans at Malligaum.—Poona Observer.

The Poona Observer states that Sir Hugh Rose, K.C.B., commanding the Nerbudda field force, left Poona for Matheran on Wednesday, the 25th of November, for the purpose of meeting Sir Robert Hamilton, Bart., resident at Indore, who is now on a visit there to the Right Hon. the Governor.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

NERBUDDA FIELD FORCE.

Bombay Castle, Nov. 25, 1857.—The Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that the two columns of the Bombay army, now serving in central India, under Brigadier C. S. Stuart and Brigadier C. Stuart, be combined in one command under the designation of the Nerbudda force. The two brigades will remain as at present, and Major-General Sir Hugh Rose, K.C.B., is appointed to command the whole.

PERSIA.

THE PERSIAN EXPEDITION.

Fort William Foreign Department, November 6, 1857.—Referring to the Notifications from this department, Nos. 140 and 185, dated the 18th June and 1st July last, in which the services of the Persian expeditionary force were acknowledged, the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council desires to express his obligations to the clergymen, who were attached to the force, and to certain officers whom Lieutenant-General Sir James Outram, K.C.B. omitted to notice in his despatch.

The Rev. Messrs. Badger, Watson, and Schwabe, and the Rev. Mr. Strickland, Roman Catholic clergyman, were assiduous in their attention to the spiritual wants of the officers and European troops during the continuance of the campaign, and have established a claim, as well to the gratitude of those who benefited by their ministrations, as to the thanks of the Government of India.

Captain Playfair, of the Bombay engineers, was field engineer under the late Major-General Stalker at the affair of Rushire and the capture of Bushire, and he acted in the same capacity at Khooshab, and again at Mohamreh, under the command of Lieutenant-General Sir James Outram. On all occasions, Captain Playfair made himself conspicuous by his zeal and activity, and won the approbation of his superiors.

Captain Good commanded a detachment of H. M.'s 64th foot, on the expedition to Ahwaz, and contributed to the signal success which was there achieved.

Lieutenant W. Gray, late deputy assistant commissary general, was in charge of the executive commissariat duties at Bushire, which were of an extensive and important character, and were conducted by that officer with commendable zeal and efficiency.

The services of these officers have been noticed by Lieutenant-General Sir James Outram, K.C.B., with much approbation, and the Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council has great pleasure in tendering to them the thanks of the Government of India.

The Right Honourable the Governor-General in Council has received official information of the evacuation of Bushire by the British troops on the 2nd October. The island of Karrack is the only spot of Persian soil which is still in the occupation of the British Government, and the relinquishment of that post only awaits the receipt of authentic intelligence by the officer in command, that the conditions of the treaty of peace concluded on the 4th March last, have been completely fulfilled by the Persian Government.

In making this announcement, it becomes the gratifying duty of the Governor-General in Council to record the sense which is entertained by the Government of India of the services rendered by Brigadier-General Jacob, C.B. and the officers under his command.

When Lieutenant-general Sir J. Outram, K.C.B. left Bushire in progress to Mohamreh, the command of the troops remaining at the former post was committed to Brigadier-general John Jacob; and subsequently, when the lieutenant-general was recalled to India, all the military and political authority which had been exercised by him devolved on Brigadier-general Jacob. The admirable discipline, order, and efficiency which have been maintained amongst the troops under Brigadier-general Jacob's command at Bushire, and the judgment with which he has discharged all his high and important functions, entitle that very distinguished officer to the warmest thanks of the Government of India.

The confidence with which Lieut.-General Sir J. Outram resigned his command into the hands of the brigadier general, has been fully justified by the issue. The British troops leave behind them in Persia a reputation, not for valour alone, but for discipline, moderation, and justice, and it is to Brigadier-general Jacob especially, and to the able officers by whom he was surrounded, that this gratifying result is due.

Brigadier-general Jacob, C.B. has expressed his obligations to the field force under his command.

The thanks of the Government of India are especially due to Brigadier Wilson, K.H.; Brigadier Stuart, commanding the cavalry at Bushire; and Brigadier Honner.

Colonel Trevelyan, commanding the artillery, has zealously and usefully aided Brigadier-General Jacob in matters beyond the ordinary range of his duty; and Major John Hill, commanding the engineers, has done excellent service.

To the officers commanding regiments, and to the heads of departments, high credit is due, for the perfect order and efficiency maintained during the whole period of occupation; and to none more than to Superintending-Surgeon Stovell, who has laboured to preserve the health of the army with assiduity and success.

Captain Felix Jones, of the Indian navy, political resident and civil commissioner of Bushire, has together with the officers under his orders, earned the best thanks of the Governor-General in Council for the mode in which his charge has been administered.

The various duties which have fallen to Commodore Rennie, Indian navy, since the cessation of hostilities, have been scarcely less important than those previously discharged by him; and through the ability and zeal of himself and the officers under his command, they have been performed in a manner to call for the marked approbation of the Governor-General in Council.

Finally, the Governor-General in Council begs to offer his cordial thanks to all the officers, the non-commissioned officers, and men, composing the force under the command of Brigadier-general Jacob, C.B. for their orderly conduct and their steady discipline during the occupation of Bushire, and to assure them that it will be his care to bring their services under the favourable notice of her Majesty's Government and the Honourable the Court of Directors.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor-General of India in Council.

G. F. EDMONSTONE.
Secretary to the Government of India.

THE following is the translation of an extract of a Persian letter from Ghuznee, dated 9th Soffar Sunnay Hazah, corresponding with 29th September, 1857:—"The political and general news is of very little importance. No recent news has been received from Iran (Persia). It is, however, reported that the ameer has received several despatches lately from his son Hyder Khan, the governor of Candahar, but the contents have not yet transpired. It is also rumoured that Taylor Sahib (probably Col. Taylor) and his party, accompanied by an Iranian Ilchee, or Persian ambassador, are expected shortly at Herat."

THE DELHI DESPATCHES.

NOTIFICATION.

Fort William, Nov. 5.—The Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council has received a despatch from Major-gen. Wilson, in continuation of that which was published in the notification of the 8th ult. and completing the narrative of the capture of Delhi.

The reports and returns which accompany this despatch, establish the arduous nature of a contest carried on against an enemy vastly superior in numbers, holding a strong position, furnished with unlimited appliances, and aided by the most exhausting and sickly season of the year.

They set forth the indomitable courage and perseverance, the heroic self-devotion and fortitude, the steady discipline and stern resolve of English soldiers.

There is no mistaking the earnestness of purpose with which the struggle has been maintained by Major-gen. Wilson's army. Every heart was in the cause; and whilst their numbers were, according to all ordinary rule, fearfully unequal to the task, every man has given his aid wherever and in whatever manner it could most avail to hasten retribution upon a treacherous and murderous foe.

In the name of outraged humanity, in memory of innocent blood ruthlessly shed, and in acknowledgment of the first signal vengeance inflicted upon the foulest treason, the Governor-General in Council records his gratitude to Major-gen. Wilson and the brave army of Delhi. He does so in the sure conviction that a like tribute awaits them, not in England only, but wherever, within the limits of civilization, the news of their well-earned triumph shall reach.

Major-gen. Wilson has testified to the earnest and efficient support which he has received from every branch of the force under his command.

To Major F. Gaitskill, who, on Brigadier Garbett being disabled by a wound, assumed the command of the artillery in the field, and to the officers and men of that arm; to Lieut.-col. Hogge, Director of the Artillery Depot, who volunteered his services as commissary of ordnance with the siege train; to Capt. J. Young, and to the other officers of that branch, the Governor-General in Council tenders his cordial thanks for their exertions during the whole siege.

To Lieut.-col. Baird Smith, for the able and successful conduct of the siege operations, under the discouragement of sickness and pain, the best thanks of the Governor-General in Council are eminently due. This distinguished officer was admirably seconded by Capt. A. Taylor, and the officers and men of the Engineer Brigade.

To Brigadier Hope Grant, C.B., commanding the Cavalry Brigade, and to Brigadiers J. Longfield and W. Jones, C.B., commanding the Brigades of Infantry, the Governor-General in Council offers his warm acknowledgments of their excellent service; as also to Col. Campbell, commanding H.M.'s 52nd Light Infantry; to Major C. Reid, Sirmoor Battalion; to Col. Jones, commanding 1st battalion, H.M.'s 60th Rifles; and to Col. J. Denniss, of H.M.'s 52nd Light Infantry, to whose care the charge of the camp was confided during the operations against the town. The manner in which these officers have discharged their duties is highly appreciated by the Government.

It is a matter of the deepest regret to the Governor-General in Council, that the mortal wounds received by Brigadier-General Nicholson in the assault, to the success of which he so eminently contributed, have taken from the army in India one of its brightest ornaments, and have deprived the State of services which it can ill afford to lose. The services rendered by Lieut.-col. H. Burn, attached as field officer to the 1st brigade of infantry, and by Capt. Seymour Blane (H.M.'s 52nd light infantry), Brigade-major to Brigadier-general Nicholson, have earned the approbation of the Government.

The Governor-General in Council cordially acknowledges the admirable manner in which the staff of the field force and the general staff of the army have performed their arduous duties, and to Brigadier-gen. Chamberlain, adjutant-general of the army; to Capt. H. Norman, assistant-adjutant-general; to Major E. S. Ewart, deputy-assistant-adjutant-general; to Capt. E. B. Johnson, assistant-adjutant-general of artillery; to the officers of the quarter-master-general's department, Capt. D. M. Shute and Capt. H. M. Garston; as also to Capt. W. S. Hodson, who has performed good service with his newly-raised regiment of irregular horse, and at the same time conducted with great ability the duties of the intelligence department; to Lieut. F. S. Roberts, attached to the artillery brigade as deputy-assistant-quarter-master-general; to Lieut.-col. Keith Young, and the officers of the judge-advocate-general's department; as well as to Capt. C. H. Barchard, Capt. J. R. Turnbull, Capt. H. D. Lowe, Lieut. R. C. Low, and to Major H. A. Ouvry, attached to the personal staff of Major-gen. Wilson, the Governor-General in Council offers his best thanks, for the zealous assistance which they have afforded to their commander and to the state. The Governor-General in Council has much pleasure in recognizing the valuable aid rendered to the force by the officers of the civil service who have been attached to it, and his lordship in council desires to record his approbation of the services of Mr. Hervey Greathed, whose untimely death is a heavy public loss; of

Mr. C. B. Saunders, and of Mr. R. H. Clifford, who made themselves most useful to the major-general in action; and of Sir T. Metcalfe, whose gallantry in conducting the assaulting column under Col. Campbell through the city was conspicuous.

While tendering his thanks to the officers, whose conduct on the occasion of the final assault of the city has been brought under his notice, the Governor-General in Council is anxious not to overlook the gallantry displayed on other occasions by several officers who were debarr'd by wounds or sickness from joining in the operations of that day. The distinguished services of Brig. St. G. Showers, of Col. A. M. Becher, quartermaster-general of the artillery, of Lieut. col. Seaton, C.B. 35th N.I., of Lieut.-col. Murray Mackenzie, Major J. Coke, and Capt. H. D. Daly, commanding the Guides, deserve the recognition, and have gained the approval of Government.

Lieut.-col. W. B. Thomson, deputy commissary-general, and the other officers serving in the commissariat department, are entitled to the thanks of the Governor-General in Council for the efficiency with which their duties were performed.

The arrangements made by Superint. surg. E. Tritton, for the care and comfort of the numerous patients in hospital, have been most satisfactory, and the Governor-General in Council has pleasure in offering to that officer, as well as to the regimental and staff officers of the medical department by whom he was supported, this acknowledgment of their good service.

The Governor-General in Council desires to express to the non-commissioned officers and men of H.M.'s 9th lancers and carabineers the great satisfaction with which he has received the report of the cheerful and effective assistance rendered by them to their comrades of the artillery in working the batteries.

To all the troops, European and native, to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men serving with the field force, his Lordship in Council offers his hearty thanks for the gallantry, perseverance, skill, and discipline which they have displayed throughout the service on which they have been employed.

Where so much has been done to command admiration, it is difficult fairly to select acts for particular notice. But the Governor-General in Council feels that no injustice will be done to any man if he offers a tribute of admiration and thanks to the brave soldiers, who, under Lieuts. Home and Salkeld, accomplished the desperate task of blowing open the Cashmere Gate.

From first to last, from the first advance of the devoted little band against the ramparts, throughout the perilous operation so successfully achieved, to the last act of the Bugler Hawthorne in tending his officer's wounds under a heavy fire, this deed was one of deliberate and sustained courage, as noble as any that has ever graced the annals of war. It will be the care of the Governor-General in Council, that the brave men, Englishmen and natives, who survive to share the glory of it, shall not go unrewarded, and that the memory of those who fell shall be honoured.

It is a satisfaction to the Governor-General in Council to find that in estimating upon a late occasion the eminent services rendered by the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab to the State during the siege of Delhi, and in expressing his earnest thanks for them, he has spoken the sentiments of the individual best able to appreciate those services at their true value. To the indefatigable exertions of Sir John Lawrence, Major-gen. Wilson frankly attributes his own success.

There remains to the Governor-General in Council the pleasing duty of noticing the part taken in the contest before Delhi by some of the neighbouring native chiefs.

The loyal and constant co-operation of the Maharajah of Patiala and his troops; the steady support of the Rajah of Jheend, whose forces shared in the assault; and the assistance given to the British arms by Jan Fishan Khan and Sirdar Meer Khan Sahib, well call for the marked thanks of the Governor-General in Council.

These true-hearted chiefs, faithful to their engagements, have shown trust in the power, honour, and friendship, of the British Government, and they will not repent it.

The Governor-General in Council will also have the gratification of thanking Maharajah Rundbeer Singh, of Cashmere, for the timely support given by the Jummoo Contingent, placed by his highness under the command of Captain Richard Lawrence. The conduct of the ruler of Cashmere has been that of a sincere ally.

From Major-gen. A. Wilson, commanding Delhi Field Force, to the Adjutant-general of the Army.

Delhi, September the 22nd, 1857.

Sir,—In continuation of my despatch of the 16th instant, I now have the honour to forward a report for the information of the Major-general commanding in the Upper Provinces, his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, and the Government, of the further operations of the force under my command since that date.

During the 17th and 18th, we continued to take up advanced posts in the face of considerable opposition on the part of the rebels, and not without loss to ourselves, three (3) officers being killed, and a number of men killed and wounded. On the evening of the 19th, the Burn Bastion, which had given us considerable annoyance, was surprised and captured.

On the morning of the 20th, our troops pushed on, and occupied the Lahore-gate, from which an unopposed advance was made on the other bastions and gateways, until the whole of the defences of the city were in our hands.

From the time of our first entering the city, an uninterrupted and vigorous fire from our guns and mortars was kept up on the Palace, Jumma Masjid, and important posts in possession of rebels; and as we took up our various positions in advance, our light guns and mortars were brought forward and used with effect on the streets and houses in their neighbourhood.

The result of this heavy and unceasing bombardment, and of the steady and persevering advance of our troops, has been the evacuation of the palace by the king, the entire desertion of the city by the inhabitants, and the precipitate flight of the rebel troops—who, abandoning their camp, property, many of their sick and wounded, and the greater part of their field artillery, have fled in utter disorganization; some 4,000 or 5,000 across the bridge of boats into the Dooab, the remainder down the right bank of the Jumna.

The gate of the palace having been blown in, it was occupied by our troops at about noon on the 20th, and my head-quarters established in it on the same day.

The great diminution of our strength by losses in action during the last few days, added to the severe sickness prevailing among the troops, has prevented my immediately organizing and sending a column in pursuit, but a force as under,* under command of Lieut.-col. Greathed, will march to-morrow morning towards Bolundshuhur and Allyghur, to intercept the rebels, whose intentions are said to be to cross the Jumna at Muttra. My intelligence, however, I regret to say, is very defective.

The king, who accompanied the troops, it is believed, for some short distance, last night gave himself up to a party of irregular cavalry, whom I had sent out in the direction of the fugitives; he is now a prisoner under a guard of European soldiers. Three of the shahzadas,† who are known to have taken a prominent part in the atrocities attending the insurrection, have been this day captured by Captain Hodson, and shot on the spot.

Thus has the important duty committed to this force been accomplished, and its object attained. Delhi, the focus of rebellion and insurrection, and the scene of so much horrible cruelty, taken and made desolate; the king a prisoner in our hands; and the mutineers, notwithstanding their great numerical superiority, and their vast resources in ordnance, and all the munitions and appliances of war, defeated on every occasion of engagement with our troops, are now driven with slaughter in confusion and dismay from their boasted stronghold.

The details of the operations have been so fully entered into in my previous despatch and annexed reports and returns from the various commanding officers, that little remains for me to say but to again express my unqualified approbation of the conduct and spirit of the whole of the troops, not only on this occasion, but during the entire period they have been in the field.

For four months of the most trying season of the year, this force, originally very weak in number, has been exposed to the repeated and determined attacks of an enemy far outnumbering it, and supported by a numerous and powerful artillery. The duties imposed upon all have been laborious, harassing, and incessant, and notwithstanding heavy losses, both in action and from disease, have been at all times zealously and cheerfully performed.

I beg to add my most cordial concurrence in the commendations bestowed by officers commanding brigades, columns, and detachments, on the officers and men named in their several reports; and I have to express my own deep obligations to those officers themselves for the valuable assistance I have at all times received from them.

To Major F. Gaitskell, who recently assumed command of the artillery in the field, consequent on Brigadier Garbett having been disabled by a wound, and to the officers and men of that distinguished arm, to whose energy and untiring zeal the successful issue of the operations is so largely attributable, I have to offer my hearty thanks. And particularly am I indebted to that excellent officer, Lieut.-col. Hogge, Director of the artillery depot, who volunteered his services as commissary of ordnance with the siege train, through whose able superintendence of the park, and arrangements for the supply of ammunition to the batteries, our artillery was enabled to deal out the destruction which was effected; as also to Capt. J. Young, deputy commissary, and Mr. J. Stolesbury, assistant commissary of ordnance, for their exertions during the whole siege.

To Lieut.-col. Baird Smith, chief engineer, who, in ill health, and whilst suffering from the effects of a painful wound, devoted himself with the greatest ability and assiduity to the conduct of the difficult and important operations of the siege—to his gallant and eminently talented second, Capt. A. Taylor, and to the whole of the officers and men of the engineer brigade, my thanks and acknowledgments are especially due for having planned and successfully carried out, in the face of extreme and unusual difficulties, an attack almost without parallel in the annals of siege operations.

To that most brilliant officer, Brigadier-general J. Nicholson, whose professional character and qualifications are so well known and appreciated, I am under the greatest obligations for the daring manner in which he led his column to the assault; and I deeply deplore that his services are for the present lost to the State.

To Brigadier Hope Grant, C.B., commanding the cavalry brigade, and to Brigadiers J. Longfield and W. Jones, C.B., commanding infantry brigades, I am deeply indebted; and I have to offer my best thanks to Col. G. Campbell, commanding H.M.'s 52nd light infantry, and to that intrepid and excellent officer, Major C. Reid, of the Sirmoor battalion, both wounded whilst gallantly leading columns of attack; as also to Col. J. Jones, commanding the 1st battalion 50th royal rifles—a regiment which has shown a glorious example both in its daring gallantry and its perfect discipline to the whole force—for the ability with which he covered the advance of the assaulting columns.

I have pleasure, also, in bringing favourably to notice the services rendered by Lieut.-col. H. P. Burn, attached as field officer to the 1st brigade of infantry, and by Capt. Seymour Blane, H.M.'s 52nd light infantry, major of brigade to Brigadier-gen. Nicholson.

Col. J. L. Dennis, of H.M.'s 52nd light infantry, whom I placed in charge of the camp during the operations, is entitled to my thanks and acknowledgments for the able dispositions he made with the troops under his command, for the due protection of his important charge.

To the officers of the general staff of the army, and to those of the staff of the field force, my cordial acknowledgments are due for the admirable manner in which they have performed their responsible duties.

To that very distinguished officer, Brigadier-gen. N. B. Chamberlain, adjutant-gen. of the army, who, though still incapacitated by a severe wound previously received, proceeded to the ridge at Hindu Rao's, and performed essential service after Major Reid had been wounded, and it became necessary to resume that position.

To Capt. H. W. Norman, assistant adjutant-gen. of the army, who, on this, as on each and every occasion, has been distinguished by his gallantry, zeal, and professional ability.

To that experienced officer, Major R. S. Ewart, deputy-assistant adjutant-general, and his gallant and energetic coadjutor, Capt. D. M. Stewart, deputy-assistant adjutant-general, who have conducted the duties of this important department with the force much to my satisfaction; and to Capt. E. B. Johnson, assistant adjutant of artillery, who volunteered to command the 24-pounder breaching battery, most ably and effectually carried out the duty assigned to him, and who rejoined my personal staff on the morning of the assault, and who has, throughout these operations, given me the most zealous and efficient support, I am greatly indebted for the assistance they have afforded me.

I beg also to bring very favourably to notice the officers of the quartermaster-general's department, Capt. D. C. Shute and Capt. H. M. Garston; and Capt. W. S. R. Hodson, who has performed such good and gallant service with his newly-raised regiment of irregular horse, and at the same time conducted the duties of the intelligence department under the orders of the quartermaster-general, with rare ability and success; also that active and gallant officer, Lieut. F. S. Roberts, attached to the artillery brigade, in the capacity of deputy-assistant quartermaster-general.

Lieut.-col. Keith Young, judge-advocate-general, also, and his deputies, Capt. T. C. Maisey and Capt. H. W. Wilson, most zealously assisted me in carrying my orders.

To the officers of my personal staff—Capt. C. H. Barchard, who has served with me first as my orderly officer, and subsequently as aide-de-camp, and to whose zealous and untiring exertions I am deeply indebted; to Capt. J. R. Turnbull, 2nd aide-de-camp; Capt. R. H. L. Lowe, and Lieut. R. C. Low, extra aides-de-camp, I am under great obligations for the zeal and readiness with which they on this, and all other occasions, have performed their duties. My thanks are also due to Major H. A. Ouvry, who attended me on the day of assault.

For the valuable aid at all times rendered by the officers of the civil service, who have been attached to the force, I have to record my warm acknowledgments. Mr. Hervey Greathed, agent to the deputy-governor, North-Western Provinces (whose subsequent sudden death I deeply lament), and Mr. C. B. Saunders, both of whom attended me in action, and made themselves most useful; Sir T. Metcalfe, Bart., whose gallantry in conducting Col. Campbell's assaulting column through the city was conspicuous; and Mr. R. H. Clifford, who was also in attendance on me, are all entitled to my thanks.

Whilst, however, in acknowledging the services of those officers whose good fortune it was to be present at the assault, and in the action of the 14th, I have only performed a grateful duty, I should be greatly wanting if I failed to record the names of those who have previously distinguished themselves, but who, incapacitated by wounds or sickness, were unable to join in the operations of that day.

Amongst these I have specially to notice Brigadier St. G. D. Showers, whose cool gallantry on the numerous occasions in which he has been engaged, has been conspicuous.

Also Col. A. M. Becher, Quartermaster-General of the Army, who, though prevented by a severe wound, received in June last, from taking an active part in the field, has at all times rendered me zealous assistance.

Lieut.-col. T. Seaton, C.B. of the 35th Native Infantry, attached to the force, a most valuable and experienced officer, of whose services I have been deprived owing to a wound received by him on the 23rd July.

* 1st troop 1st brigade horse artillery; 2nd ditto 3rd ditto ditto; No. 17 light field battery; 5th lancers; 1st, 2nd, and 5th Punjab cavalry; Hodson's horse (200); 2nd companies Punjab sappers; H.M.'s 8th regiment; H.M.'s 75th ditto; 2nd and 4th Punjab infantry.

† Mirza Moghul and Mirza Khayr Sultan, sons of the king; Mirza Abo Bakker, grandson, ditto.

That admirable officer, Lieut.-col. Murray Mackenzie, commanding the 1st Brigade of Horse Artillery, of whose services I have also been deprived by a wound which he received when in charge of the heavy batteries at an early stage of our operations.

That officer so distinguished in our frontier warfare, Major J. Coke, commanding the 1st Punjab Rifles, severely wounded at the head of his regiment on the 12th of August, and the gallant commander of the Guides, Capt. H. D. Daly, who was very severely wounded leading a most daring charge on the enemy's guns in the action of the 19th of June.

I need not observe how largely the success and efficiency of an army depends on the regularity of its supplies. Under circumstances of peculiar difficulty, in a district the population of which has been inimical, and in which civil authority has ceased to exist, this force has, from the commencement, been kept well and sufficiently provisioned with supplies of every description, the issue of rations to the soldiers having been as regular, both in quantity and quality, as in cantonments. My warmest thanks are therefore due to Lieut.-col. W. B. Thomson, deputy commissary-general, the admirable and indefatigable head of that department in the field; as also to Lieut. T. H. Sibley, principal executive officer to Lieut. Waterfield, and to the other officers serving in that department.

With the medical arrangements of Superintending-surgeon E. Tritton I have every reason to be satisfied, and he is entitled to my cordial acknowledgments. At such a trying season of the year, and in a notoriously unhealthy locality, the sickness and mortality have of course been heavy. In addition to those suffering from disease, the hospitals have received almost daily accessions of wounded men. The labours, therefore, of the Medical Department have been unceasing, notwithstanding there has not been at any time the slightest failure in the arrangements for the care and comfort of the very numerous patients.

Amongst those medical officers whose unwearied zeal and superior ability have come prominently before me, are, Officiating Superintending Surgeon C. McKinnon, M.D., who has been in medical charge of the 1st brigade horse artillery; Surgeon J. H. Ker Innes, 60th royal rifles; Surgeon J. P. Brougham, 1st fusiliers; Surgeon E. Hare, of the 2nd fusiliers; Assistant-Surgeon J. J. Clifford, M.D., of the 9th lancers; and Assistant-Surgeon W. F. Mactier, M.D., on the personal staff of the late Commander-in-Chief.

Credit is also due to Surgeon D. Scott, M.D., medical store-keeper.

The duties and offices of provost-marshal to the force have been conducted by a very deserving old non-commissioned officer, Sergeant-Major Stoud, 3rd brigade horse artillery, whom I recommend to favourable consideration for a commission.

The names of non-commissioned officers deserving of a similar reward I shall have the pleasure of submitting hereafter.

I should neither be fulfilling the repeatedly-expressed wishes of the artillery officers attached to this force, nor following the dictates of my own inclination, if I failed to acknowledge the valuable assistance which has, throughout the operations before Delhi, been most cheerfully given by the non-commissioned officers and men of H.M.'s 9th lancers, and the 6th dragoon guards, in working the batteries. Without it, owing to the comparatively small number of artillerymen, I should have been quite unable to man the batteries efficiently, or keep up the heavy fire which, aided by these men, I have happily been able to do. To these regiments, therefore, and to Brigadier Grant, who readily placed a certain number of his men at my disposal for such purpose, I tender my best thanks.

It would be an omission on my part were I to pass over in silence the good services and loyal conduct of one who has already been rewarded by the Government for the friendly assistance he rendered to our army in Afghanistan; I allude to the Nawab Jan Fishan Khan, who, with his brave nephew, Sirdar Bahadur Meer Khan, and their retainers, accompanied me from Meerut, was present at the actions on the Hindun, and has since taken part in nearly every action in which this force has been engaged.

Of the loyal services rendered to the State by the Rajah of Puttala, which must be so well known to the Government, it may not be considered necessary for me to speak; but it is incumbent on me, in my capacity as commander of this force, to acknowledge officially the great assistance the Rajah's troops have afforded me in enabling the numerous convoys of ammunition and stores to travel in security and safety to my camp under their escort and protection.

Equally is it my duty to bring prominently to the notice of Government the admirable service performed by the Jheend Rajah and his troops, under command of Lieut.-col. H. F. Dunsford. They have not only had very harassing duties to carry out in the constant escort of convoys of sick and wounded men, ammunition, &c.; but they have also aided me in the field on more than one occasion, and finally participated in the assault of the city.

Lastly, I trust I may be excused if I thus publicly acknowledge the all-important and invaluable aid for which I am indebted to the chief commissioner of the Punjab, Sir John Lawrence, K.C.B., to whose indefatigable exertions in reinforcing me with every available soldier in the Punjab, the successful result of our operations is, I unhesitatingly pronounce, attributable; and I take this opportunity of recognising the advantage derived from the presence of the troops of his highness the Maharajah Runbeer Sing in alliance with the British force, the moral effect of which has been great. And although unsuccessful, I regret to say, in the actual accomplishment of the part of the operations in which the Jummoo contingent was engaged on the 14th, I can attach no particle of blame to those troops, as I consider, under the circumstances in which they were placed, the very strong position which they had to attack, and the prolonged and determined resistance which they encountered from an enemy superior to them in number, arms, training, and experience, that they behaved under their gallant commander, Capt. R. C. Lawrence, and the other British officers serving with them, to whom my best thanks are due, as well as they could have been expected to do.

Captain Lawrence's report of his operations is annexed.

I have, &c. sir,

A. WILSON, Major-general, commanding Delhi Field Force.

From Major F. Gaitskell, commanding Artillery Brigade, to the Assistant Adjutant-gen., Field Force, Delhi.

Delhi, 19th September, 1857.

Sir,—I have the honour to submit, for the information of the Major-general commanding field force, my report of the operations of the artillery brigade under my command from the evening of the 6th to the morning of the 14th September.

The first guns (six 9-pounders, and two 24-pounders) were placed in a light battery on the evening of the 6th September to the left front of the Sammy house picquet, and about 950 yards from the Shah Bastion. These guns, with four heavy guns in the light batteries on the ridge, and two light guns at the Crow's Nest, were placed under the command of Captain Remington, of the 1st troop 1st brigade horse artillery, the light guns for the purpose of keeping the ground clear between the Shah Bastion and Kissengunge, and the whole to aid generally in the defence of our right flank. These objects were principally attained on several occasions during the time the siege batteries were in play, from the 8th to 14th September, in repelling the attacks of the enemy on our right (No. 1) siege battery.

No. 1 siege battery was commenced on the evening of the 7th of September, and although originally intended for ten guns, was sub-divided into two portions,—the one on the right, under Major Brind, to silence the fire of the guns on the Shah Bastion, distance 700 yards, containing five 18-pounders, and one 8-inch howitzer; that on the left, four 24-pounders, under Major Turner (until that officer was compelled to leave from severe sickness, when Major Kaye received the command), to ruin the defences, and keep down, as far as practicable, the fire of the Cashmere Bastion, distant 850 yards. The two portions of this battery not being sufficiently ready on the morning of the 8th of September, only two guns in each were enabled to open fire; but during that day and the following night the whole were got into position, and a steady and most efficient fire was kept up from the right portion until the assault on the morning of the 14th instant, being a period of seven and a half days, at a most sickly season of the year, and there being no relief, or only a partial one for officers and men. From the left portion the fire was kept up until the afternoon of the 10th, when the battery caught fire, and was destroyed; fortunately only a few hours before the guns were to have been removed to No. 2 battery.

On the night of the 10th September No. 2 battery, also consisting of two portions, was armed,—the right with seven 8-inch howitzers, and two 18-pounder guns, under Major Kaye, and the left, consisting of nine 24-pounder guns, under the command of Major J. H. Campbell, until the evening of the 11th, when, I regret to say, he was compelled, from a severe grape-shot wound, to make over the command to Captain E. B. Johnson. The right portion of this battery was placed at a distance of 500 yards from the Cashmere Bastion, and was designed to destroy the masonry parapet of the bastion, dismount the guns, strip off the musketry parapet in the left face for 200 yards, and destroy a small tower in the curtain. The fire from this portion of the No. 2 battery was sustained during the 11th, 12th, and 13th, by day and night, and with the greatest success. The left portion of this battery, nine 24-pounders, opened fire at a distance of 500 yards, for the purpose of effecting a breach in the curtain immediately adjoining the right flank of the Cashmere Bastion, about half-past five A.M. on the morning of the 11th September, and by nine o'clock every gun on the bastion was silenced, and until the night of the 13th September an incessant fire was kept up with five guns in making the breach, the other four being directed on the defences of the Cashmere Bastion, and of the parapet of the curtain.

The siege battery, No. 3, under Major E. W. S. Scott, was armed on the night of the 11th instant, with six 18-pounder guns at a distance of 160 yards from the left face of the Water Bastion, mounting six heavy guns and two light guns, and a fire was opened from four guns at one p.m. on the 12th; a greater number of guns could not be used at once, as the embrasures required constant repairs. There were also twelve 5½-inch mortars attached to this battery, under Capt. Blunt, which shelled the interior of the bastion and the ground to the left of the church. By one p.m. of the 13th instant, the wall was pierced, and a practicable breach of about 60 feet wide was made by dusk the same evening. It was subsequently ascertained that in addition to effecting the breach, four of the enemy's guns were rendered unserviceable, and the carriages of the two light guns destroyed.

No. 4 siege battery, under the command of Major Tombs, consisting of four 10-inch and six 8-inch mortars, was armed on the evening of the 9th September, but did not (pursuant to orders received) open fire until the morning of the 11th, from which date until the assault an incessant and destructive fire was kept up from the whole battery on the following points, viz., the Cashmere Gate and Bastion, the church, Skinner's house, and the Water Gate and Bastion.

The several batteries ceased their fire on the morning of the 14th, shortly before the assault was made.

I beg to recommend to the most favourable notice of the Major-general commanding, the services of Majors Brind, Campbell, Scott, Turner, Kaye, and Tombs; Capts. Remington, Johnson, and Blunt, for the admirable manner in which they exercised the duties of their respective commands; and I cannot praise too highly the conduct of every officer, non-commissioned officer, and soldier, who performed their duties with the greatest energy, and bore the constant exposure and hardship with the utmost cheerfulness, and I beg to recommend their services as recorded in the reports of officers commanding batteries, herewith forwarded, to the major-general's favourable notice. I have also to acknowledge the services of Capt. the Hon. A. Anson, H.M.'s 84th regiment, and the officers of other branches of her Majesty's and the Company's services who volunteered to serve with the artillery, and who have been reported of most favourably by commanding officers of batteries.

My best acknowledgments are also due to Lieut.-col. Hogge, commissary of ordnance, for the arrangements he made in his departments; likewise to Lieut. J. S. Frith, my brigade major, for his services during the operations, and the assistance he has afforded me at all times.

I desire also to report the valuable services rendered by detachments of H.M.'s 6th dragoon guards (carabineers) and 9th lancers, who did duty in the several batteries, and who by their steady conduct, gained for themselves the highest approbation from the several officers commanding batteries.

I have to deplore two gallant officers of the artillery—Lieut. Hildebrand, who was killed in No. 2 battery on the 8th September,—an officer who had performed much valuable service during the time the force has been at Delhi; and Capt. R. C. H. B. Fagan, who was killed in No. 4 battery on the evening of the 12th. This officer, whose career during the whole period that the force has been at Delhi, was marked by unceasing energy and conspicuous devotion to his profession, had gained for him the respect of officers and men in every branch of the force.

The casualties among the non-commissioned officers and men in the several batteries was not, I rejoice to state, great, and principally caused by the light guns which the enemy brought out against the siege batteries during the period under report.

A roll of casualties, from the 6th to the 14th instant, is forwarded.—I have, &c. (Signed) F. GAITSKELL, Major, Commanding Artillery Brigade.

From Major F. Gaitskell, commanding Artillery Brigade, to the Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, Field Force, Delhi.

Delhi, 19th September.

Sir,—In continuation of my letter, of this date, I have now the honour to report the operations of the artillery brigade on the 14th of September, during the period of and after the assault.

The orders for the assault having been received during the night of the 13th September, immediate arrangements had to be carried out for the relief of the officers and men of the horse artillery; and three detachments of foot artillery were told off, consisting of sixty, twenty, and twenty men, each under a subaltern, to accompany the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd columns of assault respectively, in order to take possession of the guns on the ramparts, and turn them on the city.

These arrangements were, as far as practicable, carried out. The left half of the 1st troop 1st brigade horse artillery were unable to join Major Reid's column, as there were not sufficient foot artillerymen to relieve the men of that troop on the right batteries.

The troop of horse artillery, under Major Tombs, with the cavalry brigade, was actively engaged with the enemy, who were in a ruined suburb near Pahairpoor, outside the Cabul Gate of the city, where their infantry, supported by guns, occupied the ruined mud houses at a distance of about 250 yards. There being no infantry with these guns, which were unable to dislodge the enemy from their position, and while holding their own, our guns suffered very severely, for in addition the enemy brought grape from a heavy gun at the Lahore Gate to bear on them, thereby compelling the two advanced guns of the troop to retire about twenty yards, and the enemy's infantry advancing, was only held in check by repeated rounds of grape. At this time the right half-troop of Captain Remington's troop, under Lieutenant Lindsay, joined; but still the enemy continued a very heavy fire of grape and musketry, causing many casualties among men and horses. Some of the Belooch Battalion now joined, and the enemy's fire gradually slackened, and Major Tombs's detachment retired slowly, and in good order, after two heavy guns had by his orders been gallantly spiked (under a galling musketry fire) by Lieutenant E. B. Traill.

Two pieces of Captain Money's troop of horse artillery were detached under Lieutenant C. Hunter, who opened fire on the enemy's cavalry and infantry, who were making towards our rear, and directed the fire on Kissengunge until the enemy had retreated beyond the range of his guns.

The remainder of the horse artillery, consisting of the headquarters and remainder of Captain Money's troop (as also Major Turner's troop, which was to have accompanied the 1st and 2nd columns of assault, but from the men not having been able to be relieved from the siege battery, where they were stationed, in sufficient time), was left for protection of the camp with the troops under the command of Colonel Dennis, H.M.'s 52nd regiment.

No. 14 light field battery, under Major Scott, was attached, on the morning of the 14th September, to the reserve column under Brigadier Longfield; and at 10 A.M., two guns were posted at the street next the College Garden, two at the Cabul Gate, and two at the street passing Skinner's house; but were not actively engaged.

Two guns of No. 17 light field battery were attached to the first column of assault, and two to the second column; but all four were subsequently detached, under Captain Bourchier, to support the cavalry brigade, where they relieved Major Tombs's troop of horse artillery, which had suffered very severely in men and horses; and, after opening fire on Kissengunge, and checking the enemy's advance from that direction, were, in the evening, with their four guns, posted with the cavalry brigade at Ludlow Castle.

I beg especially to bring to the notice of the major-general commanding, the conduct of Major Tombs, his officers, and men, which was in strict accordance with their past gallant services.

I also recommend to the favourable notice of the major-general, the services of Majors Scott and Turner, Captains Bourchier and Remington, and Lieutenants Wilson, Lindsay, Traill and C. Hunter, and all the non-commissioned officers and men under their command. I enclose the reports of officers commanding, and trust that the services of the artillery brigade will be considered to have been such, during a long and arduous period, as to elicit the approbation of the major-general commanding the force. I have, &c. (Signed) F. GAITSKELL,

Commanding Artillery Brigade.

From Lieut.-Colonel R. Baird Smith, Chief Engineer, Delhi Field Force, to the Assistant Adjutant-General, Delhi Field Force.

Head-Quarters, Delhi, 17th Sept.

Sir,—I have the honour to submit herewith, for the information of the major-general commanding, the following report of the operations carried on by the engineer of brigade under my command, during the siege and capture of Delhi.

2. To make these more intelligible, I may first detail very briefly the leading and characteristic features of the place.

3. The eastern face of the city rests on the Jumna, and during the season of the year when our operations were carried on, the stream may be described as washing the base of the walls. All access to a besieger on the river front is, therefore, impracticable. The defences here consist of an irregular wall with occasional bastions and towers, and about one-half of the river face is occupied by the palace of the king of Delhi and its outwork—the old Mogul Fort of Selimghur.

4. The river may be described as the chord of a rough arc formed by the remaining defences of the place. These consist of a succession of bastioned fronts, the connecting curtain being very long, and the outworks limited to one crown-work at the Ajmere Gate and martello towers, mounting a single gun at such points as require some additional flanking fire to that given by the bastions themselves. The bastions are small, mounting generally three guns in each face, two in each flank, and one in embrasure at the salient. They are provided with masonry parapets about twelve feet in thickness, and have a relief of about sixteen feet above the plane of site. The curtain consists of a simple masonry wall or rampart sixteen feet in height, eleven feet thick at top, and fourteen or fifteen feet at bottom. This main wall carries a parapet loopholed for musketry eight feet in height and three feet in thickness. The whole of the land is covered by a berm of variable width ranging from sixteen to thirty feet, and having a scarp wall eight feet high; exterior to this is a dry ditch of about twenty-five feet in height, and from sixteen to twenty feet in depth. The counterscarp is simply an earthen slope easy to descend. The glacis is a very short one, extending only fifty or sixty yards from the counterscarp; using general terms, it covers from the besiegers' view from one-half to one-third of the height of the walls of the place.

5. These details will, I trust, be sufficient to give a general conception of the nature of the defences of Delhi. They are, in a word, modernised forms of the ancient works that existed when the city fell before Lord Lake's army in 1803. They extend about seven miles in circumference, and include an area of about three square miles.

6. The ground occupied by the besieging force presents some features deserving of notice here, as having exercised a most important influence on the plan and progress of the works of attack. On the western side of Delhi, there appear the last outlying spurs of the Aravelli mountains, represented here by a low ridge which disappears at its intersection with the Jumna, about two miles above the place. The drainage from the eastern slope of the ridge finds its way to the river along the northern and north-western faces of the city, and has formed there a succession of parallel or connected ravines of considerable depth. By taking advantage of these hollow ways, admirable cover was constantly obtained for the troops, and the labour of the siege most materially reduced. The whole of the exterior of the place presents an extraordinary mass of old buildings, of all kinds of thick brushwood and occasional clumps of forest trees, giving great facilities for cover, which, during the siege operations at least, proved to be, on the whole, more favourable to us than to the enemy.

In anticipation of the siege, means had been taken to store the engineer park with all the materials and tools likely to be required during the operations, the siege train placing the artillery means in an equally satisfactory state of efficiency, ground was broken as soon after its arrival as possible, being on the night of September the 7th, 1857.

7. The project of attack submitted by me to the major-general commanding, and honoured with his sanction, provided for a concentrated, rapid, and vigorous attack on the front of the place, included between the Water or Moira and Cashmere Bastions, provision being made at the same time for silencing all important flanking fire, whether of artillery or musketry, that could be brought to bear on the lines of advance to be taken by the assaulting columns. Due care was also taken to protect the exposed right flank of the trenches from sorties. The left was secured by being rested on the river, and by the occupation of the Koodsee Bagh—a very strong post in front.

8. The best information procurable indicated that, on the front of attack, the fire of from twenty-five to thirty pieces might have to be subdued. To effect this, fifty-four siege guns were available, and were distributed as follows:—

Siege battery No. 1, for ten pieces,* by which six were to be directed against the defences of the Shah of Mooree bastion, with the object of ruining them and preventing the flank fire from bearing on the advance of the assaulting columns. The remaining four 24-pounders were directed against the Cashmere bastion, with the object of diverting its fire from the covering and working parties engaged on No. 2 battery.

Siege battery No. 2, for eighteen pieces,† designed to breach the curtain to the right of the Cashmere bastion, to destroy the defences of the bastion itself, and to strip off the parapet for about 200 yards on each side of the breach, and thus deprive infantry of all cover.

Siege battery No. 3, for eight heavy guns and twelve cohorn mortars,‡ designed to destroy the defences of the Moira, or Water bastion, and to maintain a heavy fire of shells on both the Water and Cashmere bastions. In the original project, the site of battery was about 330 yards from the Water bastion; but subsequent examination making it doubtful whether the position was an effective one, Capt. Taylor pushed a reconnaissance in advance to the custom-house or within 160 yards, and finding there an excellent site for a breaching battery, reported the circumstance to me. I obtained at once the major-general's sanction to this bold advance, and it is satisfactory to be able to say that battery No. 3 was constructed with remarkably few casualties, and proved one of the most efficient of the series. It was, however, limited to six breaching guns, and in the demolition of the light parapets was aided by 9-pounders.

Battery No. 4, for the heavy mortars§, to shell the whole of the ground between the Water and the Cashmere bastions, and the localities in the neighbourhood where the enemy would be likely to find shelter.

9. On the extreme right four heavy guns were left in position, and on an advanced plateau on the ridge, a battery for six field guns|| was constructed, by which the only route open to the enemy's sorties would be swept by grape. Although the enemy gave some annoyance with light guns in this direction, he was unable to make a single effective sortie.

10. At different times between the 7th and 11th, these bastions opened fire with an efficiency and vigour which excited the unqualified admiration of all who had the good fortune to witness it. Every object contemplated in the attack was accomplished with a success even beyond my expectations, and I trust I may be permitted to say, that while there are many noble passages in the history of the Bengal artillery, none will be nobler than that which will tell of its work on this occasion.

11. On the night of the 13th, the breaches in the curtain between the Water and Cashmere bastions were examined personally by Lieuts. Greathed, Medley, and Lang, of engineers, who reported both in excellent condition for assault. No. 1 siege battery had effectually disposed of the Mooree bastion; No. 2 had completely destroyed the musketry cover near the main breach; No. 3 had done the same near the Water bastion breach, and it was evident that the place was ripe for the assault. On reporting the circumstance to the major-general, he issued instant orders, naming the next morning or that of the 14th for this critical operation.

12. The details of the assault will be best laid before the major-general by the brigadiers commanding the different columns. I will therefore only state here that the distribution of the engineers' officers was made:—

1st column, under Brigadier-gen. Nicholson:—Capt. A. Taylor, Lieuts. Medley, Bingham, and Lang, and Ensign Chambers.

2nd column, under Brigadier-gen. Jones, H.M.'s 60th:—Lieuts. Greathed, Hovenden, and Murray, and Ensign Gustavinski.

3rd column, under Brigadier Campbell, H.M.'s 52nd:—Lieuts. Home, Salkeld, and Tandy, and Ensign Nuthall.

4th column, under Major Reid: Lieuts. Maunsell and Tennant.

Reserve column, under Brigadier Longfield:—Lieuts. Ward and Thackeray. These officers accompanied the columns to which they were attached during the assault, and I grieve to say that a large proportion fell wounded, more or less dangerously, under the heavy fire of the enemy.

13. It only remains for me, in closing this report, to bring under the favourable notice of the major-general commanding, the officers of the brigade whose merits have been conspicuous.

To my second in command, Captain Taylor, director of the trenches, I have been indebted for the most constant, cordial, and valuable assistance throughout the whole period of the operations. Gifted with rare soundness of professional judgment, his advice has been sought for by me under all circumstances of difficulty or doubt, and I find that I cannot express too strongly to the major-general my sense of the valuable services this officer has rendered.

To Capt. Chesney (very severely wounded), brigade-major of engineers, I have also hearty acknowledgments to make for the uniform efficiency, zeal, and intelligence with which he has conducted the duty of his office.

Lieutenants Greathed and Maunsell, directing field engineers on the left and right attacks respectively, have earned my warm approbation by the manner in which they performed duties involving great labour and exposure. Both guided columns of attack, and both, I grieve to add, were severely wounded while doing so.

The gallantry with which the explosion party, under Lieutenants Home and Salkeld, performed the desperate duty of blowing in the Cashmere Gate in broad daylight, and in the face of the enemy, will, I feel assured, be held to justify me in making special mention of it. The party was composed, in addition to the two officers named, of the following:—

Sergeants John Smith, A. B. Carmichael, and Corporal F. Burgess, alias Joshua Burgess Grierson, of the sappers and miners; Bugler Hawthorne, H.M.'s 52nd; 14 native sappers and miners; and 10 ditto Punjaub sappers and miners. Covered by the fire of H.M.'s 6th rifles, this party advanced at the double towards the Cashmere Gate; Lieutenant Home, with Sergeants John Smith and Carmichael, and Havildar Madhoo, all of the sappers, leading and carrying the powder-bags, followed by Lieut. Salkeld, Corporal Burgess, and a section of the remainder of the party. The advanced party reached the gateway unhurt, and found that part of the drawbridge had been destroyed; but passing across the precarious footing supplied by the remaining beams, they proceeded to lodge their powder against the gate. The wicket was open, and through it the enemy kept up a heavy fire upon them. Sergeant Carmichael was killed while laying his powder, Havildar Madhoo being at the same time wounded. The powder being laid, the advanced party slipped down into the ditch to allow the firing party under Lieutenant Salkeld to perform its duty. While endeavouring to fire the charge, Lieutenant Salkeld was shot through the leg and arm, and handed over the slow match to Corporal Burgess, who fell mortally wounded just as he had successfully performed his duty. Havildar Tiluk Singh, of the sappers and miners, was wounded, and Ram Hetch Sepoy, of the same corps, was killed during this part of the operation.

The demolition having been most successful, Lieut. Home, happily unwounded, caused the bugle to sound the regimental call of the 52nd regt. as the signal for the advance of the column. Fearing that amid the noise of the assault the sound might not be heard, he had the call repeated three times, when the troops advanced and carried the gateway with entire success.

I feel assured that a simple statement of the facts of this devoted and glorious deed will suffice to stamp it as one of the noblest on record in military history. Its perfect success contributed most materially to the brilliant results of the day, and Lieuts. Home and Salkeld, with their gallant subordinates, European and native, will, I doubt not, receive the reward which valour before the enemy so distinguished as theirs has entitled them to.

Lieut. Home mentions with special approbation the cool courage of Sergt. John Smith, and while sincerely regretting their loss, he states that the gallantry shown by Serg. Carmichael and Corporal Burgess, could not have been surpassed. Bugler Hawthorne's conduct has also been particularly commended. This brave man, after performing his own dangerous duty, humanely attached himself to Lieut. Salkeld, bound up his wounds under a heavy musketry fire, and ultimately had him removed without further injury, and I beg to commend him most cordially to the favourable notice of the major-general.

The following native officers and sepoy of the sappers and miners are reported by Lieut. Home to have shown the most determined bravery and coolness throughout the whole operations. Havildar Madhoo, who accompanied the advance under Lieut. Home; Soobadhar Toola, Jemadar Bisram, Havildars Tiluk Singh and Ramtaroy, and sepoy Sahib Sing, who were with the firing or reserve parties. The remarkable courage shown by the native officers and men in assisting their wounded European comrades deserves to be mentioned as showing the excellent feeling between them.

Lieut. Medley (wounded) was appointed to guide the 1st division of the 1st column to the main breach, which he had personally examined the night before, and though shot through the arm, continued with the column till it was established in the Cabul Gate. Lieut. Lang was appointed to similar duties with the 2nd division, and both officers have earned my best thanks by the gallant and efficient manner in which they did their work. Lieut. Hovenden (wounded) conducted the ladder party of the 2nd column, and here, as on all occasions, showed the intelligence and gallantry which have made his services so valuable during the siege.

I beg also to bring under the notice of the major-general the good service on this occasion of Lieut. Bingham, an old and most meritorious officer, whose gallantry in action on previous instances had led the Government to confer upon him the commission of lieutenant. He commanded a party of the corps of sappers and miners in the assault of the main breach with his accustomed bravery, and I respectfully recommend him for favourable consideration.

To Lieut. H.A. Brownlow (dangerously wounded), who had charge of the engineer park, I have to offer my most cordial acknowledgments for his incessant exertions to expedite the works. This officer was dangerously wounded while carrying to the 3rd column materials and tools which it was supposed to be in need of.

I have only further to bring under the notice of the major-general commanding, the admirable conduct of the remaining officers and men of the brigade. None could have displayed a higher and better spirit than they have done, and whether in the trenches, in the assault, or during the occupation, they have been forward and zealous in every duty. I may be allowed to refer especially to the gallantry and devotion of the sappers and miners under their acting commandant, Lieut. Maunsell—a remnant of the corps which mutinied in May last. Throughout the whole operations these men have shown a distinguished bravery and fidelity to their salt, and it has been my agreeable duty to bring from time to time special instances of their qualities to the notice of the major-general. The Punjab sappers and miners under their commandant, Lieut. Gulliver (of whose valuable services I was deprived during the siege by his severe illness), and their acting commandant, Lieut. Home, have done excellent service, and give the best possible promise of being an efficient and soldier-like corps.

The pioneers, under Lieutenant Bingham, have proved to be a most useful and fearless body of men. Though designed for works only, and being unarmed and only rudely organized for the occasion, they have shown perfect readiness to work under fire, and have taken their turn in the most exposed and dangerous positions it has been necessary to occupy.

I take the liberty of mentioning here that since I joined the camp I have received most valuable aid in military arrangements from my assistant (in the civil department), Mr. Harry Marten.

I deeply regret the heavy list of casualties which accompanies this report. In Lieutenant Tandy the corps has lost one of its most gallant and promising young officers; but I earnestly hope that the Government will be only temporarily deprived of the services of the wounded, all of whom, I am happy to be able to report, are doing well.

I have, &c.

Chief Engineer, Delhi Field Force.

From Brigadier J. Hope Grant, commanding Cavalry Brigade, Delhi Field Force, to the Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, Head-quarters, Delhi, September the 17th, 1857.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of Major-general Wilson, that, according to instructions received, I proceeded before day-light on the morning of the 14th with 200 of H.M.'s 9th lancers, and 410 natives from the Guides, 1st, 2nd and 5th Punjab cavalry, and Hodson's horse, three guns of the 1st troop horse artillery, and four guns of the 2nd, to the neighbourhood of the 1st field battery, where I remained till the assault of the town had commenced. At about six o'clock the major-general sent me instructions to proceed to the front. I formed up opposite the walls of the town, the 9th lancers forming the advanced party, the irregular cavalry the service, and proceeded till I came to the Moree bastion, which was in our hands. We advanced to the Cabul Gate; and at this point a most heavy fire of grape and musketry was opened upon us, the grape coming from the Lahore Gate, and the musketry from the gardens and houses of Kissengunge on our right between 200 and 300 yards off. Major Tombs, who was in command of the guns, as fine an officer as there is in the Company's service, drove the enemy out from our right flank, and succeeded in spiking two guns in battery: one an 18-pounder, and the other a 2-pound iron gun. We retired a short distance to get out of the service fire that was opened upon us; but, in so doing, the enemy came out in great numbers through the gardens, and it was necessary to retain our position to prevent the enemy from taking our batteries and the Cashmere Gate. A party, consisting of an officer and eighty of the infantry Guides, came down to our support, and, though small in number, went gallantly into the gardens and took up a position in a house close to the battery. I regret, however, to say the officer in command, a most gallant young fellow, Lieut. Bond, was wounded in the head and had to be taken away; but the Guides held out most bravely till they got surrounded in the house and were in great danger. A detachment of the Beelooch battalion, under command of Lieut-col. Farquhar, however, came to their assistance and brought them away in safety. The fire now slackened, and we were enabled to retire a short distance, where we had little to fear.

2. I beg leave to state I have never seen, in the whole course of my life, so much bravery and so much noble conduct displayed by men as was the case in the brigade I had the honour to command. Major Tombs and the two other officers under him in command of the two troops—Lieut. Wilson and Lieut. Lindsay—as well as the adjutant, Sankey, did their duty in a manner most praiseworthy, and the enemy were completely checked by the fire from their guns. In the 1st troop, 1 European and 1 native were killed, 4 horses killed and 9 wounded. In the 2nd troop, 1 European and 1 native killed, 17 Europeans and 13 natives wounded, 13 horses killed and 9 wounded, and 1 officer's charger. Nothing could be finer than the conduct of the 9th lancers—one squadron commanded by Capt. French, and the other by Capt. Sarel, the whole by Capt. Drysdale. Not a man flinched from his post, though under this galling fire for two hours, and when a poor fellow got knocked over, it seemed to put the men in good spirits. I am sorry to say, however, the 9th lancers had 38 men wounded, 61 horses killed, wounded, and missing, and the officers lost 10 horses.

3. The behaviour of the native cavalry was also admirable. Nothing could be steadier, nothing could be more soldier-like than their bearing. The Guide cavalry, commanded by Capt. Sandford (a most excellent and useful officer), on out-post duty, lost one native officer killed, one non-commissioned officer, and fourteen privates. Lieut. Hodson commanded a corps raised by himself, and he is a first-rate officer, brave, determined, and clear-headed. Lieut. Watson, commanding the 1st Punjab cavalry, Lieut. Probyn, commanding the 2nd, and Lieut. Youngusband, the 5th, are also most excellent officers. I was afterwards joined by Capt. Bouchier's battery, which was of great service, and enabled us to hold our position.

4. I beg especially to bring to the notice of Major-general Wilson the names of the officers mentioned in this despatch, and also that of Capt. Hamilton, my brigade-major, a most excellent officer in every respect, ready and willing to do his duty whenever he is called upon. His horse was shot upon this occasion.

5. Also that of the Hon. Capt. Anson, my acting aide-de-camp, who got wounded in the hand by a musket shot. He is most useful and energetic, and promises to be a first-rate officer. Also Capt. Rosser, of the carbiniers; and Capt. Hall, of the 4th irregular cavalry, who were also extra aides-de-camp on that day. The former, I am sorry to say, was struck by a musket-ball in the head, and there are little hopes of his recovery. The other had his horse shot under him. I beg also to mention the name of Lieut. Jones, deputy-assistant-quartermaster-general, who is most zealous and attentive to all his duties. Col. Custance, of the carbiniers, commanded the reserve, which he did to my satisfaction. I regret I am unable to give returns of the casualties in several of the regiments of native cavalry, as I have not yet received them; but the whole shall be sent as soon as practicable.—I have, &c.

(Signed) J. HOPE GRANT, Brigadier,
Commanding Cavalry Brigade, Delhi Field Force.

From Captain W. Brookes, to the Assistant Adjutant-General, Field Force.

Camp before Delhi, Sept. the 17th, 1857.

Sir,—In compliance with an order received from Lieutenant-colonel Herbert, 75th regiment, I have the honour to forward, for the information of Major-general Wilson, commanding field force, the following report of the proceedings, so far as they are known to me, of the 1st column of attack, under Brigadier-general Nicholson, who was unfortunately severely wounded on the day named, and obliged to relinquish the command.

The regiments composing the 1st column:—Detail of artillery; 300 men H.M.'s 75th regiment; 250 1st European Bengal fusiliers; 500 2nd Punjab infantry—which were to assault the breach in the Cashmere Curtain Gate, were under arms at 3 A.M. on the morning of the 14th, and moved to the assault as follows:—The 1st fusiliers, led by Brigadier-general Nicholson in person, escalated the left face of the Cashmere Bastion. Her Majesty's 75th regiment and 2nd Punjab infantry, covered in splendid style by a portion of H.M.'s 60th rifles, moved to assault the breach on our left of the Cashmere Gate. Colonel Herbert, 75th, being wounded on the glacis, the command of this portion of the assaulting column devolved on myself, and it is with great pleasure that I testify to the gallant conduct of all the troops engaged. Lieutenant Fitz-Gerald, H.M.'s 75th regiment, led up the breach most nobly, and I regret that this officer's death from a grape-shot immediately afterwards renders my venturing to bring his name to the notice of the general commanding useless. The column, on being established within the city, re-formed, and agreeably to orders from Brigadier-general Nicholson, moved towards the right. During this movement the enemy maintained a heavy flanking fire, and inflicted much loss on the column. Our loss was also considerable. On reaching the various batteries, Moree, &c. a party of men were left to occupy them, and the column dashed on at a rapid rate. On reaching the head of the street at the Cabul Gate, the enemy again made a resolute stand, but were speedily driven forward. A portion of the 1st column was halted here, and proceeded to occupy the houses round the Cabul Gate; a portion of the 75th, commanded by Captain Freer, H.M.'s 27th regiment attached, supported by myself, continued the pursuit, accompanied by some men of other corps, 60th rifles, 1st European Bengal fusiliers, &c. On advancing about 200 yards along the rampart road, which here became so narrow that scarce four men could stand abreast, the enemy opened a heavy and destructive fire from an iron gun on the wall and a small brass gun on the pathway, together with musketry from behind a barrier on the road. I regret to say that notwithstanding repeated charges upon this narrow channel, the troops did not succeed in effecting a passage. The loss was so severe both in men and officers, that I felt it my duty to desist, after two hours, from any further attempts. Brigadier-general Nicholson at this period joined us, and while endeavouring to induce the men to renew the attempt was severely wounded, and finding that each effort only caused further loss without success, I finally drew off the men and retired to the Cabul Gate. Brigadier Jones's column joined us here, and I placed myself under the Brigadier's orders.—I have, &c., (Signed) W. BROOKS, Captain 75th Regiment.

From Brigadier William Jones, Commanding 2nd Column, to Major-General Wilson, commanding Field Force, Delhi.

Cabul Gate, Delhi, Sept. the 17th, 1857.

Sir,—I have the honour to report that the 2nd column, consisting of H.M.'s 8th regiment, 2nd fusiliers, and 4th Sikh regiment of infantry, paraded, agreeably to order, on the morning of the 14th instant, and immediately moved down to the attack of the Water Bastion. The column was told off into a storming party, supports, and reserve. The former consisted of 75 men of H.M.'s 8th regt., under the command of Capt. Baynes, and 75 men of the 2nd fusiliers, under the command of Capt. Hay, late 90th N.I.; the supports of 175 men of H.M.'s 8th regiment, 75 men of the 2nd fusiliers, and 50 men of the 4th Sikh infantry.

Brigadier-General Nicholson having communicated with me, we arranged that the 1st and 2nd columns should move forward simultaneously, as soon as the skirmishers of the 60th royal rifles had covered our front. This having been done, the 2nd column advanced through the breach in the most gallant manner, and took possession of the walls without the slightest check. The moment the column entered the Treasury Garden, it turned to its right, and proceeded along the wall under the ramparts as far as the Cabul Gate, where it established itself, having left a party in charge of the Moree Bastion, and thrown out picquets in commanding position along the right and left of the canal.

One of the enemy's guns on the Cabul Gate was immediately turned upon the Lahore Gate, from which the enemy were firing grape and round shot.

I cannot speak too highly of the conduct of the troops under my command, and my best thanks are due to Lieut.-colonel Greathed, commanding her Majesty's 8th regiment; to Captain Baynes, of the same corps, who led the assault; to Captain Boyd, commanding 2nd fusiliers; and to Captain Rothney, commanding the 4th Sikh infantry; also to Lieutenant Greathed, of the engineers, who gallantly conducted the party carrying the ladders, until he was unfortunately wounded; and to Lieutenant Hovenden, of that corps, who was also wounded in the performance of the same dangerous duty.

I am also much indebted to my immediate staff, Capt. Burnside, her Majesty's 61st regiment, my Brigade-Major, and Lieutenant Sloman, her Majesty's 61st regiment, my orderly officer, who rendered me every assistance during the operations.—I have, &c.,

Commanding 2nd Column.

From Colonel G. Campbell, commanding H.M.'s 52nd Foot, and in command of the 3rd Column of Assault, to the Adjutant-General of the Army.

Delhi, 16th September, 1857.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the major-general, the operations of the 3rd column of assault, which was under my command on the morning of the 14th instant.

It consisted of 240 of H.M.'s 52nd, 500 of the 1st Punjab Infantry, and 260 of the Kumaon battalion. On the order for the several columns to advance, the explosion party at once proceeded towards the Cashmere Gate, upon which they advanced with most fearless intrepidity. The explosion was accomplished successfully; but I regret to say that one of them fell. Immediately upon the report of the explosion, the storming party, consisting of a company of H.M.'s 52nd, under the command of Capt. Bayley, advanced with a cheer, and, overcoming all resistance, speedily secured the gateway; the supports, consisting of fifty men of H.M.'s 52nd, fifty of the Kumaon battalion, and fifty of the 1st Punjab Infantry, followed the storming party at a distance of fifty yards. The entire column having entered the main-guard, and re-formed as speedily as possible, proceeded to carry out the orders issued by the major-general, viz., to advance upon the Jumma Musjid, and, if possible, to occupy it as well as the Kotwallie. Before quitting the neighbourhood of the walls, some of the enemy being still within the Water Bastion, I detached a party to clear it out, which was done at the point of the bayonet, the enemy who escaped the bayonet jumping over the parapets on to the river-side, where they were destroyed. We cleared the adjoining cutcherry compound, also the houses in its neighbourhood, the church, and the Gazette press compound. The column carrying everything before it without much opposition, I proceeded through the Cashmere Durwaza Bazaar, marked out as our line of advance. Hearing that a gun was placed in position bearing down the street, upon arriving at the point where the gun could be seen, I detached a party to get to its rear, through a by-street; but before this party arrived at this point, the gun was taken with a rush, without loss, except Lieut. Bradshaw, who, regardless of danger, received a discharge, which killed him on the spot. We proceeded without opposition through the Begum's Bagh. Upon arriving at the gates which open on the Chandnee Chouk, the gate of the Dureeba was found to be shut. This difficulty, however, was speedily overcome, through the good conduct of a native, Mahun Singh, a chuprassie, who, accompanied by five men of the 52nd, volunteered to endeavour to open it. The column then passed up the Dureeba without opposition, except from musketry from a few houses. Upon arriving at the turn which brings the Musjid into view, and at about 100 yards distant, side arches were found to be bricked up, and the gate itself closed. It was too strong to be forced open without powder-bags or artillery, neither of which were with me,—the former in consequence of the engineer and his party having fallen, and the latter not having been able to enter the Cashmere Gate, as the bridge had been destroyed, and, moreover, the houses on each side the street were filled with the enemy.

I remained at this point about half an hour, in the hope of hearing of the successful advance of the other column at the Lahore and Ajmere Gates. At the expiration of this period, many men having fallen by the fire from the surrounding houses, I judged it expedient to fall back upon the Begum's garden, which we held for at least an hour and a half under a heavy fire of musketry, grape, and canister.

Capt. Ramsay, of the Kumaon battalion, who had diverged to the right from the column, and had been in possession of the Kotwallie for some time, here rejoined the column. Having communicated with the head-quarters, and ascertained that the first and second columns had not advanced beyond the Cabul Gate, I fell back upon the church.

The operations of the column, I regret to say, were attended with considerable loss; but the number of those who fell I am at present unable to state.

It now becomes my duty to bring to the notice of the major-general the gallantry and good conduct of all the troops concerned, more especially her Majesty's 52nd light infantry, who led the column from first to last, and who, I consider, fully maintained its high reputation. The officers to whom I am more particularly indebted are Lieut. Salkeld, of the Engineers, who personally fastened the powder-bags to the gate, fixed the hose, and although fearfully wounded, contrived to hand to a non-commissioned officer of the sappers and miners the light to fire the train; Lieut. Home, of the engineers, who also accompanied the explosion party; Capt. Bayley, her Majesty's 52nd, who commanded and led the storming party, and who was unfortunately wounded approaching the gate; Capt. Cross, her Majesty's 52nd, who commanded the supports; Major Vigors, who commanded her Majesty's 52nd; Capt. Ramsay, who commanded the Kumaon battalion; Lieut. Nicholson, who commanded the 1st Punjab infantry, and who, I regret to say, was wounded shortly after the entry was effected; Capt. Syngé, her Majesty's 52nd, who acted as my brigadier-major to the column.

I have further the gratification of bringing to the especial notice of the major-general the invaluable assistance I received from Sir T. Metcalfe, who was at my side throughout the operations, and fearlessly guided me through many intricate streets and turnings to the Jumma Musjid, traversing at least two-thirds of the city, and enabling me to avoid many dangers and difficulties.

It is difficult to select individuals from the ranks, where all behaved so well, who may have particularly distinguished themselves; but I have no hesitation in specifying the following non-commissioned officers and soldiers as deserving of peculiar reward, viz. the non-commissioned officers of the Sappers and Miners, who formed the explosion party; Bugler Robert Hawthorne, H.M. 52nd, who accompanied the explosion party, and sounded the signal to advance; No. 1,104, Sergeant-major Streets, H.M. 52nd, whose gallantry and good conduct were conspicuous up to the time he was severely wounded; No. 2,764, Lance-corporal Henry Smith, H.M.'s 52nd, who carried away a wounded comrade under a heavy fire of grape and musketry in the Chandnee Chouk; No. 1,836, Lance-corporal William Taylor, H.M.'s 52nd, whose conduct was conspicuous throughout the operation.—I have, &c.

(Signed) G. CAMPBELL, Col. Commanding H.M.'s 52nd, and the Column of Assault.

I am unable to state the names of the non-commissioned officers of the Sappers and Miners who were with the explosion party.

From Brigadier J. Longfield, commanding Reserve Column, to the Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, Field Force, Delhi.

Delhi, September 17.

Sir,—I have the honour to report, for the information of the major-general commanding the field force, that in accordance to orders received, I took the command of the reserve column, as under,* at half-past three o'clock, the morning of the 14th inst.

The whole of her Majesty's 60th rifles, commanded by Lieut.-col. Jones, were detached for the purpose of covering the free attacking columns.

The Belooch battalion, under command of Lieut.-col. Farquhar, were, according to orders, detached to the advance batteries.

When about two-thirds of the way from the camp to the Cashmere Gate, I received orders to reinforce the attacking column. H.M.'s 61st regiment, under command of Lieut.-col. Deacon; and the right wing of the 4th Punjab infantry, under command of Capt. Wild, were sent forward.

The remainder of the reserve column, namely, the left wing of the 4th Punjab infantry and the Jheend force, under command of Lieut.-col. Dunsford, then proceeded, the attack on the Cashmere Gate being successful.

The Jheend force occupied the Cashmere Gate and the main guard.

The 4th Punjab infantry assembled at the church and formed part of a column of attack on the college and ground.

A party of H.M.'s 60th rifles and the 4th Punjab infantry had already compelled the enemy to withdraw the gun they had placed at the gate of the college compound. Captain Wild then charged up to the house with his corps and gained the building with a loss of three sepoy and two native officers killed, and twenty-two sepoy wounded.

The Belooch battalion were directed to reinforce Major Reid's column, and subsequently took post at the college.

H.M.'s 60th rifles on rejoining the reserve, proceeded to Ahmed Ali Khan's house.

H.M.'s 61st regiment, under command of Lieut.-colonel Deacon, which had been already detached to support the attacking column, proceeded to the Cabul Gate.

A return of the casualties that took place has already been forwarded.

I have a great deal of pleasure in stating that I received every assistance and support from the commanding officers, namely, Lieut.-colonel Jones, H.M.'s 80th rifles; Lieut.-Colonel Beacon, H.M.'s 61st regiment; Lieut.-colonel Farquhar, Belooch battalion; Lieut.-colonel Dunsford, Jheend force; and Captain Wild, 4th Punjab infantry.

Captain Nicholl, major of brigade, and Captain Campbell, 2nd fusiliers, my orderly officer, rendered me every assistance in their power.—I have, &c.,

J. LONGFIELD, Brigadier, Commanding Reserve Column.

To Major W. S. Ewart, Deputy A. A. General, Camp.

Delhi, 17th September.

Sir,—At dawn on the 14th September the column of attack on Kishengunge, in the order and strength subjoined, 15 men 60th rifles, 200 men Sirmoor battalion, 160 men 1st fusiliers, 200 guides, 25 Coke corps, 65 Kumaon battalion, 80 her Majesty's 61st regt., total 780, was drawn up at the Subzee Mundee Serai, under command of Major Reid.

The Jummoo contingent commenced the attack before our artillery had arrived, and Major Reid, wishing to support the attack, moved down the road in a column of fours, covered by twenty-five riflemen in skirmishing order.

The enemy opened fire from the bridge over the canal, and from behind walls and the loopholed serai of Huhrengunge; Major Reid fell wounded in the head. The fall of their gallant leader checked the advance of the Goorkas. The fusiliers came to the front at the double, led by Captain Worford.

The rush of the rifles and fusiliers placed them for a moment in possession of the breastwork at the end of the serai; but those men, unsupported, were unable to maintain the position under the heavy flanking fire to which they were exposed.

The native troops lined a garden to the right of the road, and Lieut. R. H. Shebbeare, whose gallantry in this trying affair was the admiration of every one, with a few of the Guides and some Europeans, took possession of a mosque. Every effort was made here to re-form the troops and charge the enemy's position, but without success, though many officers sacrificed themselves in the attempt.

As I observed columns of the enemy's horse and foot taking ground to our right, and I saw they were in great force to our front and left flank, I considered the object of the attack so far gained in having directed the attention of the enemy from the main point of attack. Fearing also that the enemy's great strength might encourage him to attack our batteries on the hill, I thought it right, as I had succeeded to the command on the fall of Major Reid, to re-occupy the position from which we had been withdrawn. This was accomplished with little further loss, under cover of Crow's Nest Battery, which fired shrapnell a few feet over our heads, and with the most admirable precision and fatal effect to the enemy.

This battery was commanded by Lieut. H. I. Evans, of the artillery.

I cannot close this report without mentioning the noble way in which two officers and one sergeant fell in the attack. Captain

* Rank and File:—H.M.'s 60th rifles, 300; H.M.'s 61st regiment, 250; Belooch battalion, 300; 4th Punjab infantry, 550; Jheend force, 300; Total, 1,400.

G. G. McBarnet, attached to the 1st Bengal fusiliers, died at the head of his men at the first rush, and Lieutenant A. W. Murray, of the Guides, was killed while gallantly seconding his immediate superior, Lieutenant Shebbeare, who was himself struck by two balls.

I am much disappointed in learning that Sergeant Dunleary, of the fusiliers, a man whose conduct was conspicuous throughout, was killed in the field.

Annexed is a statement of our loss, which, I regret to say, has been very heavy. I have, &c.,

D. D. Muter, Captain, H.M.'s 1st batt. 60th royal rifles.

PROMOTION IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

We have reason to believe that the statement which appeared in many of our contemporaries as to the temporary cessation of promotion in the Bengal regiments, is altogether erroneous. Unless we are greatly mistaken, it will be found that the promotion will continue as in ordinary times.

A MARE'S NEST.

A CONTEMPORARY, chiefly remarkable for his affectation in repudiating the popular and phonetic orthography of oriental names, has commenced the translation of certain papers recently published at Lucknow—we beg pardon, at Lakhnau, and which are supposed to throw a new and powerful light on the origin of the present mutiny. It is, in truth, a notable discovery; but, unfortunately, it so happens that these incendiary documents are nothing more or less than reprints of papers circulated by Moulvie Ishmael, the founder of the sect of Wahabees at Delhi (see the Indian Mail for August 31, No. 323). The Moulvie was a learned Mahomedan, who espoused the cause of Syud Ahmed, a gentleman troubled with visions, and dreams, and spiritual experiences. This enthusiast having, at last, completely lost the balance of his mind, raised the green flag, and proclaimed a holy war against Runjeet Singh. The Moulvie became the right hand of the saint, whose sayings and ejaculations he carefully noted down and circulated among the faithful. The end of these holy men, however, was not peace. The arm of the flesh prevailed against them, and the followers of the Prophet were compelled to succumb to the superior prowess of the disciples of Nanuk. The inspired writings of the Moulvie at the same time disappeared from the eyes of the profane, and were not again heard of until the commencement of the year 1856. At that period the Friend of India got hold of these mysterious papers, and announced a Jihad against the Hindoos of Oude. Serious disturbances, indeed, did take place, and Hindoos and Mahomedans fought with the fury of zealots, around the temple of Hunooman. Should our purist contemporary be desirous to obtain more ample information on the subject, we beg respectfully to refer him to the files of the Indian journal above-named, wherein he will find a sufficient quantity of effervescing platitudes to satisfy the most morbid craving for—twaddle.

ABOLITION OF THE DOUBLE GOVERNMENT.

HER Majesty's ministers have officially notified their intention of bringing before Parliament a bill for the immediate abolition of the "double government" of India and the ministerial journals call upon the British public to admire this fresh instance of high moral courage on the part of the premier. We confess that we are at a loss to understand in what that vaunted courage consists. Any attack upon constituted authorities and corporate bodies is certain to be popular with the vulgar masses, who are subject to feelings and impulses, but incapable of forming an opinion for themselves, or of retaining it aright when suggested by others. The hereditary respectability of the Court of Directors has, naturally enough, long since excited jealousy and ill-will among that numerous class of her Majesty's subjects who resemble the Prince of Salem only in being "without father, mother, or descent." The cuckoo-cry is ever that the Court is too exclusive; that its patronage is restricted to a few families closely connected by intermarriages; that it misgoverns India through lust of power and lust of dividends; and, finally, that it is immersed in hopeless and helpless ignorance on all matters relating to the people and country intrusted to its stewardship. These, no doubt, are serious charges, and, if true, quite sufficient to justify, and even to necessitate, the immediate suppression of the Court. But the evidence hitherto adduced tells directly in its favour, and exonerates it from every imputation but that of being controlled by a higher Board, to the infinite prejudice of India itself. Let us consider, in the first place, what sort of persons they are who constitute this Court of Directors, and by whom they were elected. We shall find that by far the greater number of them are gentlemen possessed of large local experience, who have acquired a practical knowledge of the inner nature of Indian questions by a lengthened residence in the country, and who, since their return to their native land, have earnestly devoted their time and attention to that special department of public affairs. The majority of the Court have been selected for the honourable post they now hold, by the votes of the shareholders of India Stock, while the others have been appointed by the Crown, on the alleged grounds of their specific qualifications. It would be difficult to conceive a less objectionable mode for the formation of a free, independent, and enlightened Council; and in one respect alone has this Council been found wanting, and that is—in power. If the empirical tendencies of the present generation can be satisfied with nothing less than organic changes—if it be really determined that the Court shall give place to a Council, at least let that Council be possessed of plenary, if not despotic power. A paternal, perhaps a military despotism, is the only form of government which Asiatics are capable of appreciating. They must be ruled by the "hand of iron;" nor is it at all necessary to conceal it beneath the "silken glove." We trust, therefore, that the new machinery will be both powerful and permanent, and that amendments and alterations will not be introduced in every new session of Parliament. There is nothing so much unsettles and disquiets the Asiatic as the fear of change. He prefers the evil to which he is habituated, to apocryphal blessings which he neither desires nor comprehends. Whatever be the changes now made, they must be of as final a character as the fallibility of human judgment will permit. Indeed, we fear that this fallibility is already shown in the popular clamour for the abolition of the Court. There has been a mutiny of the sepoy army, and it is therefore presumed that the Directors were answerable for it. It would have been quite as logical and just to have suppressed the House of Lords because of the sufferings of our troops in the Crimea. It is certain that the Court had no means of foreseeing such an unprecedented catastrophe, much less of guarding against it; and when they did take active measures to put down the revolt, they were systematically hampered and impeded by the Board of Control. If the double government be defective—and on this one point there can be but one opinion—at once abolish the Board, remove this incubus, and leave the Court free to act as well as to protest. Let the Court be vested with real power, and then it will not shrink from the responsibility of its doings. But do not condemn it for the shortcomings of others, or hold it answerable where it had no option. But if the Directors, with all their personal and acquired knowledge of Indian matters, are deemed unfit to govern that country, by what miracle is it to be guided aright when neither the helmsman nor any other of the crew is acquainted with the channel and its many hidden dangers? It has passed into a proverb, that the world is ruled with infinitesimal doses of wisdom, and this homœopathic system is apparently to be tested in its full force in the case of unhappy India. And for this the premier is to be lauded to the skies as a man of "high moral courage," because he yields to the slightest pressure from without, and has no other idea of keeping the lead than by taking the wind out of the sails of his rivals. His lordship is doubtless reconciled to the overthrow of an ancient and honourable body of men who have won and maintained an empire for their ungrateful country, when he reflects upon the additional amount of patronage likely to come into his own hands. The House of Commons, already sufficiently subservient, will scarcely venture to oppose a premier who can dispose of appointments enough to provide for all their younger sons and nephews. Surely, the liberal press will do well to think of this. It may be comparatively easy and little hazardous to abolish the Court of Directors, but it will be a very different task to shake a ministry based on the "good things" of India. Besides, it may be fairly asked if this is the most opportune season for such radical innovations. Is it just or generous to the Court? Is it expedient and profitable for the people of India themselves? Is the question itself likely to be calmly discussed at a moment when men's hearts are still wildly throbbing from the effects of the terrible agitation they have so long had to endure? But if none of these reasons avail to check the unreasoning impulse of the multitude, we repeat, let the new Council be all-powerful, let it consist of men thoroughly versed in "Asian mysteries," and let it retain the patronage. Act otherwise, and we may bid a long good-night to our Indian empire.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

If the gift of speech were not actually bestowed upon man to enable him to disguise his feelings, one is at times tempted to believe that it was at least intended to supply the lack of ideas. During the recent debate at the India House, for instance, on the subject of pensions to Lady Neill and Mrs. Nicholson, much idle verbiage was employed, if not as a mask for real sentiments, certainly with the effect of displaying considerable ignorance combined with an envious and fault-finding disposition. The palm for garrulity was, as usual, won by Mr. Malcolm Lewin, with Mr. Serjeant Gazelee as a tolerable second. According to the former gentleman, the mutiny of the Bengal army would not have occurred had Lord Ellenborough been Governor-General, with Sir Charles Napier as Commander-in-Chief. Mr. Lewin is, of course, entitled to hold such opinions as are suited to his intellectual calibre, nor do we object to his giving them expression, except on his own account. His views are not likely to have much weight with any one but himself, though it is almost incredible that even he could have been in earnest in making the assertion that the presence of those two illustrious men would have sufficed to avert the sepoy revolt. If such were really his opinion, his knowledge of the native character must be extremely limited, and to little purpose can he have studied the rise and progress of this unparalleled delusion. But the true solution of Mr. Lewin's extraordinary mis-statements on Indian matters may be found in the personal spite he is known to cherish towards the Court of Directors. It was simply to gratify a petty feeling of vindictiveness that he permitted himself to make an ill-natured remark, such as ancient spinsters are supposed to indulge in when speaking of a bosom friend—behind her back. In the same spirit he afterwards alleged that the Court was notorious for its niggardly acknowledgments of the merits of its servants; whereas the liberality of the Court has almost passed into a proverb. One curious feature of this debate was the very unusual eagerness displayed by some of the Proprietors to force the Directors into a larger expenditure than they deemed just or expedient. The Chairman was even compelled to remind them that it was not their own money they were so anxious to vote away. But this intimation only made them more keen to be liberal and munificent. Nothing was too great to be given away that did not proceed from their own pockets. It is a suspicious-looking circumstance, however, that the Times, in its report of this meeting, should have omitted the little but important word "not," and thus made the Chairman to say that it was their own money with which they were dealing: the natural inference being, that he would not have objected to a liberality which should cost him nothing. We are not, indeed, surprised at any unfairness on the part of the Times, nor are we unused to idle declamation from the Proprietors of India Stock. At the same time we cannot but think it would have been more creditable to the leading journal to have corrected such a vital error; while, on the other hand, the utter nonsense so volubly emitted at these general courts quite reconciles us to the early extinction of the proprietary body. There is little doubt that the boisterous, vulgar, and ill-conditioned speeches perpetrated by such rhetorical nonentities as Messrs. Lewin, Gazelee, and Jones, have done much to lower the East-India Company in the eyes of the public, and have thrown upon the Court of Directors the opprobrium that justly belonged to their systematic opponents and revilers. On the occasion under review, Mr. Jones was favourably distinguished by his silence—probably attributable, however, to his absence—for which he amply atoned by his verbiage at the General Quarterly Meeting.

THE "TIMES" AND THE NEW INDIAN ARMY.

THE Times has of late more than once put forth a grave and rather startling assertion, that the same number—or, at all events, with but little increase—of European troops with which we have hitherto held India, will be sufficient to hold it hereafter. The last article enunciating this dogma is suggested by a letter in its columns of the 19th December, signed by "A Soldier," and dated Cawnpore. The first argument in support of this theory is, "Considering what a third of this number (70,000 or 80,000 men in the letter) have shown themselves capable of doing within the last six months." When we review the extraordinary and terrible events of those six months, we can come but to one conclusion, that a special Providence has worked for us throughout. At the commencement of the mutiny, as the Irishman said, "it was more by good luck than good guiding" that we held our own at Meerut, where there was a preponderance of the European element, before Delhi, as well as at other points, and even in Calcutta itself. "We have no enemies whatever in India, every native state being reduced to dependence, and all having now shown that, under the greatest temptations, they cannot be induced to forsake our sovereignty for any other." "We have no more enemies to fight" is a cry that has been tolerably familiar to most Anglo-Indians for the last thirty years, yet there have been constantly-recurring local disturbances,—in Arracan—in Cachar—among the Coles, Bheels, Moplahs, and other countless subdivisions of races that inhabit the peninsula. Two years ago only, there occurred a troublesome insurrection of miserable and beggarly Sonthals, little more than one hundred miles from the seat of government,—a people who had been living under our rule for nearly a century. "No more enemies," forsooth! Are Bhurtpore, Burmah, Coorg, two Afghan campaigns, Scinde, Gwalior, two Sikh wars, Burmah again, and lastly Persia, already forgotten? The last two, indeed, are not actually in India, but far too closely allied with our interests there to be excluded from the list. The causes of the Burmese and Persian wars still exist,—two standing bugbears, one on the eastern and the other on the western frontier,—Herat, i.e. Russia, and Ava. The first is at any moment a fertile causa teterrima belli; as for the second, the march of time will, without doubt, outrun his golden-footed majesty, and see him succumb, like his betters, to the "manifest destiny" of Britain. When the present sagacious ruler of the Douranee Confederation pays the debt of nature, who can say what chance, and the efforts of a few "politicals," may not bring forth during the strife that must inevitably ensue? When the present enlightened ruler of Nepal dies, a Pharaoh may come who will not know Joseph as Jung Bahadoor has known him. The mass of the populace has been faithful throughout, doubtless. They had no sympathy with the rebellious sepoys; on the contrary, they had a notion that, under British rule, rupees might safely be acquired in the pursuit of peaceful occupations; whereas, on the other hand, their traditions and their apprehensions told them what might be expected from an army of mutineers commanded by native upstart adventurers. Let them but fancy, at some future date in critical times, that their especial class interests are to be invaded, or some other ingenious fabrication of the kind, and who will answer for the degree of gullibility they may choose to exhibit? Then there is no lack of predatory ruffians,—Goojurs, Ranjurs, Gonda, Boondailas, Rohillas, the scum of large towns and the men who feed the jails,—who, in any future crisis, would keep the surface of native society in a sufficient state of feverish excitement to warrant the exhibition of a strong wholesome sedative. Who would have answered for the loyalty of those districts through which Nana Sahib and Koor Singh have passed, if either had possessed the dangerous qualities of a Hyder Ali or a Sivajee? The Times continues: "The native princes, as our correspondent writes, have been almost universally faithful;" and "if they have been faithful now, they are in no degree likely to be faithless hereafter." The scriptural warning to "put not your faith in princes," sounds startlingly ominous when applied to the descendants of the house of Sivajee—Mahrattas—as are Scindia and Holkar. Dundoo-punt Neenajee, commonly called Nana Sahib, pseudo-heir of the ex-Feishwa Bajee Rao, is a concentrated essence in himself of all that a Mahratta is capable of doing, even without the genius of the great founder of the race, Sivajee, or of the late Jeswunt Rao, Maharajah of Indore. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots?" Can the princes of Rajpootana, the chiefs of Oudeypore and Jyepore, "descendants of the sun and moon," be counted on any more than their Rajpoot brethren now in arms against us, and who have so lately eaten our salt? Here is a sketch of the Rajpoot race, drawn with amazing fidelity, by an accomplished and successful writer. The Rajpoots are, says Miss Martineau, "men believing nothing, and insisting upon everything they were accustomed to; with no faith, but plenty of superstition; servile to power, and diabolically oppressive to helplessness; prone to self-torture, without any power of self-denial; bigoted to home and usages, without available affections or morality; smooth in language and manners, while brutal in grain; incapable of compassion, while disposed to good-nature; good-tempered in general, with exceptions of incomparable vindictiveness; timid for a twelvemonth, and then madly ferocious for a day, or heroically devoted for an hour; frivolous and fanatical; liars in general, and martyrs on occasion; scoundrels for the most part, and heroes by a rare transfiguration." Judging from history, and especially from recent events, which completely justify this masterly delineation of character, what amount of prescience that the Times can boast of would warrant the hazardous assumption of a belief in Asiatic fidelity? We have seen what power of combination existed in the Bengal army. Had the mutineers been permitted to mature their plans, where should we have been? In such an event, it would not have been hard to tell the effect on the mass and on the native chiefs. The old saying of "prevention is better than cure," is too good to be slighted. A sufficient European force is the surest and only preventive, and even 60,000 regular European troops in the peninsula are by no means too many for that purpose. The idea of a Christian militia is, in our opinion, most worthy of acceptance. The thorough colonization of the country by Europeans will have an effect even more powerful than mere military occupation; but this will take many years to accomplish effectually. To encounter the possible enemies we have before enumerated, when Europeans to any extent would be totally superfluous, a better description of force than mere "police levies," such as we have now, will be necessary. If armed, disciplined, and commanded by European officers, not much difference would exist between the new and old battalions. They would still form a sort of standing army, capable of combination. The question of the formation of police on a new and improved footing forms a subject for separate consideration. The question of the re-organization of the "new Indian army,"—a term to which the Times takes violent exception,—to be properly appreciated and discussed, requires more time and space than we can at present accord to it. A small and compact auxiliary "native army" would, in our opinion, serve our purposes better than any clumsy reconstruction of "local" and "police" levies tacked on to a "grand army." If we have no "native army," who, we should like to know, is to do the thousand-and-one duties from which Europeans in such a climate should be exempted, and which mere "nujeeb" battalions could not do? The expense would not alarm us; for we will venture to say that 50,000 or 60,000 European troops, with an auxiliary native force in proportion, capable of taking the field at any moment, will not entail one rupee more of expenditure than the late overgrown, anomalous, arrogant, and suicidal force called the Bengal army, which we have hitherto kept up.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT HOME, B.E.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—In the report of Col. Campbell, commanding the 3rd column of attack, as published in the despatches of Major-Gen. Sir A. Wilson, Bart., K.C.B., on the capture of Delhi, the following paragraph occurs:—

"The officers to whom I am more particularly indebted are Lieutenant Salkeld, of the engineers, who personally fastened the powder-bags to the gate, fixed the hose, and although fearfully wounded, contrived to hand to a non-commissioned officer of the sappers and miners the light to fire the train; Lieut. Home, of the engineers, who also accompanied the explosion party," &c. &c.

Being fully persuaded that the gallant Lieut. Salkeld (had his valuable life been spared) would himself have qualified the above report, I hope I may be permitted, in justice to the memory of a dearly-beloved son, to publish a statement of what actually took place at the blowing-in of the Cashmere gate of the city of Delhi, as reported to Major-Gen. Wilson by the chief engineer, Col. Baird Smith. It is evident that Col. Campbell could not have received the chief engineer's report when he penned that above quoted, as Col. Baird Smith clearly states that Lieut. Home, of the engineers (the senior officer), was charged with the duty of "leading and carrying the powder-bags, followed by Lieut. Salkeld, Corporal Burgess," &c. &c. This having been accomplished by Lieut. Home, "the advanced party slipped down into the ditch to allow the firing party under Lieut. Salkeld to perform its duty." Each of these much-lamented officers, therefore, undertook a separate part in this devoted and glorious deed, which they fulfilled with heroic intrepidity, and both are, consequently, entitled to the highest encomiums; and I cannot help feeling that equal publicity should be given to their gallant exploits.

Hoping you will do me the favour to give publicity to this letter in your widely-circulated journal,

I remain, yours faithfully,

R. HOME, Major-General Bengal Army.

Parade, Epsom, December 24th, 1857.

THE "CANDIA."

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—You have been misled by the Indian papers in announcing the arrival of 692 men on board the Candia. That steamer actually carried 26 officers and 8 men, belonging to the 19th, 20th, 34th, 42nd, and 97th regiments, from Southampton, on the 15th of August, and arrived at Calcutta on the 5th of November. I cannot conceive how the public papers could have fallen into such an error as to the number of officers and men of the Queen's service who proceeded to India by the Candia, a vessel that was not engaged, directly or indirectly, by the East-India Company. There were other officers of Her Majesty's service who went out as passengers per Candia, but only 8 rank and file of the 42nd Highlanders.

Your obedient servant,

SCRUTATOR.

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Special General Court of this Company was held at their house in Leadenhall-street on Wednesday, Dec. 16, 1857, for the purpose of laying before the proprietors of East-India Stock, for their approbation, resolutions of the Court of Directors, granting to Major-General Sir Archdale Wilson, Bart., K.C.B., an annuity of 1,000*l.*, and to Lady Neill, the widow of the late Brigadier-General Neill, and to Mrs. Nicholson, the mother of the late Brigadier-General John Nicholson, special pensions of 500*l.* per annum, respectively.

PENSION TO SIR ARCHDALE WILSON.

The Chairman.—Gentlemen, I feel that my duty as Chairman of the Court of Directors imposes upon me this day a very arduous task. It is not that I doubt for a moment the cordial concurrence of the Court of Proprietors in the resolutions passed by the Court of Directors, appreciating as we all do most highly the services of Major-General Sir Archdale Wilson; but what I feel is that I am not competent to speak in adequate terms of the great services which that officer has rendered, equally to India and to England. Speaking on military matters, I must claim the indulgence of the Court. The services of General Wilson from the moment he entered into the service of the Company have been highly meritorious. Previous to 1846 he was employed in several matters of great importance, by which his habits of business, as well as his military character, raised him high in the estimation of the Indian Government. I find that when he was at home on furlough, and the invasion of the Sikhs in our provinces took place, during the administration of Lord Hardinge, General Wilson volunteered to return to his duty, and that this action on his part was highly appreciated by the Court of Directors. Afterwards, during the Sikh war, he was employed in Brigadier-General Sir Hugh Wheeler's force, who, in his despatches, said that Lieut.-Colonel Wilson had written so modestly of the artillery, that it was his (Sir Hugh Wheeler's) duty to state that the exertions of General Wilson, and of all those who were under him, were most zealous and successful, and he was recommended by Sir Hugh Wheeler for honourable distinction for services rendered by him in the Punjab. I am sorry to say those honours were not at that time bestowed upon him. He commanded the station at Dumdum in 1854, and was on the military board in the same year. He then came to England on furlough in May, 1855, and returned to his duty in January, 1856. In March, 1856, he was appointed Brigadier-Commandant of Artillery, and to exercise the command of the station at Meerut. In June, 1857, happily for many, Brigadier Wilson was appointed to the head of the artillery at Meerut, and consequently he had the command of the army from Meerut which was despatched to General Barnard at Delhi. It would be in the recollection of every one the two battles which he fought between Meerut and Delhi with greatly inferior numbers to those of the enemy, and that in both instances he was singularly successful, defeating the enemy with great slaughter and taking many prisoners. Subsequently he moved on to Delhi and joined Sir Henry Barnard the day before the attack on the heights of Delhi. Sir H. Barnard acknowledges the services of General Wilson in the strongest terms. It was a gallant action, fought at the end of a long march when the men were fatigued. But General Barnard most wisely determined not to stop with the business half done, and in determining to take the whole of the heights he was most ably supported by Sir Archdale Wilson. The consequence of all his was, that General Wilson acquired, at an early period of the campaign, a high reputation; and when General Reid was obliged to resign the command of the army, he made over the command to Brigadier-General Wilson, and I find in the general orders these words, used by General Reid:—"Of Brigadier-General Wilson's merits it is unnecessary for Major-General Reid to speak. His judgment, gallantry, and conduct have been conspicuous since he led his small but victorious band from Meerut, up to this day; and it only remains for the Major-General to congratulate the forces before Delhi on being placed under so able a commander as Brigadier-General Wilson." From the time that General Wilson took the command there was a marked alteration in the tactics of the siege. I saw yesterday the only gentleman who has arrived in this country who was present at the siege and at the storming of Delhi, and who did not leave the place until it was completely in our hands. I allude to Captain Lowe. I asked that gentleman whether there had not been at the time of General Wilson's taking the command a marked alteration in the tactics of the siege. He said there had been, but that he attributed no blame whatever to the former Generals; because, he said, it was necessary in the first instance to show our ability to attack the mutineers; and that if we had shown ourselves open to their attack, and that we were liable to be cut off, they would have operated upon our rear, which would have led to the worst results. But at the time that General

Wilson took the command, the effect which had already been produced justified a different policy. Well, the siege was begun, and our forces were pushed up to the walls of the city. For all this, be it remembered we are indebted to the indomitable energy and foresight of Sir John Lawrence. On the 14th of Sept. the assault was made. You are as well acquainted, probably, with all the circumstances that led to the capture of Delhi as myself; but it is impossible to speak upon the subject without using terms of the highest praise of the wonderful gallantry evinced by our troops and without bearing testimony to the credit due to the general commanding during those six days of most perilous conflict. Those who know what it is to contend against a mob in the streets like the conflicts at Paris may conceive what it was to contend against a regular soldiery prepared beforehand, having the houses loopholed, and every preparation made, and even trains laid of bottles of beer and brandy to induce our troops to drink—a device which in too many instances unhappily succeeded. Well, even under all these disadvantages, and under the vast disproportion of the numbers of the besieged and besiegers—the numbers being in the case of a siege absolutely reversed—yet, notwithstanding these enormous difficulties, insuperable, as I believe, by any but British troops, the assault was successful; and I am happy to say that our troops were most gallantly seconded by the Sikhs, who are spoken of in the highest terms of praise by Captain Lowe. Bearing in mind the diseases and the difficulties with which they had to contend, I think that in the annals of British warfare no greater feat has ever been recorded than the capture of the city of Delhi. (Cheers.) But don't take my word for it. I am but a reader in this matter; hear what Sir Colin Campbell, that old veteran soldier, says. He says:—"It is impossible to be too lavish of praise for the untiring energy, the invincible fortitude, and splendid gallantry by which this force has been distinguished, from the general in command to the private soldier in the ranks. All have done their duty most nobly, and the steadfast courage of the men has enabled the general to carry out his enterprise in spite of scanty means and a deadly season." This encomium has no doubt gone to the heart of every soldier, British or native, from the general to the private. It is stated in a notification, that "most cordially does the Governor-General in Council join in the high encomium passed upon Major-General Wilson and his brave troops by General Sir Colin Campbell from whom praise so hearty and so just will not fail to be appreciated by every soldier, British or native in the army of the north-west." Well, the result has been that the services of General Wilson have been recognized and rewarded by his Sovereign, who has bestowed upon him the honour of Knight Commander of the Bath and the dignity of a baronet. Her Majesty has also appointed him major-general in the army, and it now devolves upon us to do our duty towards him. (Hear, hear.) When the Prime Minister, in the House of Commons, moved for a corresponding pension to General Havelock he stated that the East-India Company claimed as their privilege to reward their own officers. I confidently feel that the most earnest economist will not deem the revenue of the East-India Company misapplied in rewarding the services of men who have rendered an essential benefit to India as well as to England. (Hear, hear.) I believe that the best interests of the people of India are involved in the re-establishment of British supremacy in that country. (Hear, hear.) My opinion also is that such is the feeling of the people of India themselves. (Hear, hear.) Therefore it is that I cannot feel the smallest hesitation in recommending to this Court the adoption of the vote unanimously come to by the Court of Directors. (Hear, hear.) One word more. It has been seen that her Majesty's Government are prepared to recommend an extension of the pension to General Havelock to his successor, that is, to his son. It would have been very irregular for me to have put a rider on the resolution before the Court, if there had been a similar claim in the case of General Wilson. But General Wilson has not a son; if he had I should have thought it my duty to propose a similar extension of the pension. But his not having a son is my sole reason for not making a proposal of such an extension of the pension. I now move the adoption of the following resolution:—

"That, as a special mark of the sense which this Court entertains of the skill, sound judgment, steady resolution, and gallantry of Major-General Sir Archdale Wilson, Bart., Knight Commander of the Bath, in the operations which resulted in the storm and capture of Delhi, by which, under the blessing of Divine Providence, the reputation of the British arms and nation has been nobly sustained, an annuity of 1,000*l.* be granted to Sir Archdale Wilson, to commence from the 14th of September, 1857, the day on which Delhi was stormed."

Sir Frederick Currie, Deputy Chairman.—I rise to second the motion. After what you have heard from the chairman with reference to facts of which you are as well informed as we are, all having an equal opportunity of ascertaining the merits of General Wilson, I think it would be almost an insult to this Court if I were to enter at any length into arguments to induce you to assent to this resolution; I therefore content myself with simply seconding the motion.

The question was then put, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

PENSIONS TO LADY NEILL AND MRS. NICHOLSON.

The Chairman.—I will now lay before you the claims of Brigadier-General Neill and Brigadier-General Nicholson. We are now about to speak of the services of men who have passed from us, and we are endeavouring to show our sympathy to the survivors of two most gallant officers who had most faithfully served the East-India Company as brave soldiers, and who had, unhappily for their country and their families, died nobly in the discharge of their duties. Therefore we must speak comparatively in bated breath, with feelings of sorrow mingled with our gratitude and admiration for their great services. General Neill belonged to the Madras army, and held the command of the Fusiliers of that Presidency. He served in the second Burmese war, and received the thanks of the General commanding and of the Governor-General for his services; but it was not till his arrival at Bengal in March, 1857, that he commenced that career of distinction which, alas! has been too short for his country, and for his family, though not for his fame. (Hear, hear.) He was sent from Madras, and arrived at Allahabad on the 11th of June, and immediately assumed the command of the station. He afterwards served at Benares at a most critical moment, just at the time when the sepoys at that station were upon the very edge of the mutiny. He assumed the command of the station on Brigadier Ponsobly becoming unfit for duty in consequence of a coup de soleil. With extraordinary vigour and energy he opened fire upon the mutineers and drew them out of the station, and was thereby the means not only of saving the station of Benares, but of the whole of that province. Indeed, it is impossible to estimate too highly the service he rendered to India by that single act, because no one could say what might have been the consequence if the mutiny at Benares had been successful. It would have been impossible to have calculated the consequences which would have resulted had all communication between Benares and Allahabad been stopped. His exertions on that occasion met with the warm approbation of the Commander-in-Chief. He then proceeded to Allahabad, where he rendered signal service; and we all know the part he took in his advance from Allahabad to Cawnpore. He with a few hundreds forced his way through a strong position occupied by thousands of mutineers to the station of Cawnpore. For these services he deserved our warmest acknowledgments, and would to God he had lived to receive them. (Cheers.) From Cawnpore he accompanied General Havelock in all his advances and all his retreats, and, most unhappily for his country, his widow, and his family, he lost his life on the last occasion, when General Havelock and General Wilson forced their way to the residency at Lucknow. I will merely add to this memoir of General Neill's brief career—for all the great services performed by him were crowded within a very few months—the words of the Governor-General in Council, in which he says that he cannot refrain from expressing the deep regret with which he hears of the death of Brigadier-General Neill. Brigadier-General Neill, during his short but active career in Bengal, had won the respect and confidence of the Government of India. He had made himself conspicuous as an intelligent, prompt, self-relying soldier, ready of resource, and stout of heart; and the Governor-General in Council offers to the Government and to the army of Madras his sincere condolence upon the loss of one who was an honour to the service of their presidency. Her Majesty has been pleased to notify that if General Neill's life had been happily spared, it was her gracious intention to confer upon him the dignity of Knight Commander of the Bath. The Queen has graciously allowed his widow to bear the title which she would have borne if her husband had lived. (Cheers.) I now turn to the late Brigadier-General John Nicholson, whose case is distinguished in one remarkable respect from that of the two other officers whose names I have brought before you. General Nicholson's life has been one continued service in India. He was born in 1822, and entered the service in 1839. He was simply a regimental captain; and yet, in spite of the jealousy which the system of seniority created, this gallant man, who was not thirty-five years of age on the day he unhappily died, had risen to the rank of brigadier-general, commanding a division of the army before Delhi. (Cheers.) I believe I may say that he held that command and exercised his powers without exciting the smallest spark of jealousy on the part of any of his brother officers. (Cheers.) Great must have been the force of his character. The respect shown to him by the whole army is the highest tribute that could be paid to his memory. I believe that since the time when the senior officer surrendered to young Clive that command which by right belonged to him for long services, there has never been a voluntary submission of command to so young a man, and that simply because of the foresight of Sir John Lawrence, who saw that he was the right man to be put in the right place. He fought through the whole of the Afghanistan campaign, and served with his regiment in the Sutlej campaign of 1845-46. He was in 1847 appointed to a civil office, and in the capacity of political agent performed great services in the two Punjab wars. My hon. friend on my right (Sir F. Currie) was then Resident at Lahore; and he can speak of the services which Captain Nicholson rendered on that occasion; and I shall ask him to undertake the duty of stating what those services were which Captain Nicholson rendered at such an early period of his career. I remember my friend stating in his letters that Captain Nicholson, with that modesty which is characteristic of greatness, generally reported in private letters, written upon scraps of paper, a brief statement of what he had done, but giving himself no sort of praise. Passing over his services at Lahore, I may state that he was engaged in action with the Sikh forces at Chillianwallah and also at the battle of Gujrat. For his service in the Punjab he was promoted by special brevet to the rank of major, and received a medal and a clasp. In January, 1850, he quitted India on furlough to Europe, and mark what was his course. Instead of spending his time in England and enjoying himself, his first object was to obtain letters of introduction to some leading generals commanding large armies on the continent, and to spend his time in visiting those armies and acquiring military knowledge from observation of their system. (Cheers.) In November, 1851, he returned to India, and was re-appointed deputy-commissioner in the Punjab. At the beginning of the outbreak Sir John Lawrence appointed Major Nicholson assistant-commissioner of the Peshawar division, and shortly afterwards, at the head of a movable column, he attacked and utterly destroyed the Sealkote mutineers. After performing these and other services in the Punjab he was sent by Sir John Lawrence to Delhi. Not many days after his arrival at Delhi he was sent out to attack a force which had been sent by the enemy to intercept our siege train, and after marching eighteen miles he came up with the enemy at Nujughur, and completely routed him. Captain Lowe, with whom I have conversed, said that he was present at that engagement, and that the enemy fought desperately, but that the valour of our troops was superior even to their desperation, and the rebels were most thoroughly beaten; but to show the character of the man, he said that General Nicholson so much exposed himself as actually to be in danger of being shot by his own men. His conduct in this engagement was praised in the highest terms by General Wilson. He was subsequently appointed to the command of a column of infantry at the assault of the city of Delhi. On the 14th of September the assault was delivered at four points. The first column, under Brigadier-General Nicholson, assaulted the main breach, their advance being admirably covered by the first battalion of her Majesty's 60th rifles, under Colonel J. Jones. The operation was crowned with brilliant success, the enemy, after severe resistance, being driven from the Cashmere bastion, the main guard and its vicinity in complete rout. The firm establishment of the reserve rendered the assaulting columns free to act in advance, and Brigadier-General Nicholson, supported by Brigadier Jones, swept the ramparts of the place from the Cashmere to the Cabul gates, occupying the bastions and defences, capturing the guns, and driving the enemy before him. During the advance, just in the corner at the point of the Cashmere-gate, there came a terrible fire from two 24-pounders, and it was while calling upon the men to attack those guns that Brigadier-General Nicholson was most unhappily shot and dangerously wounded. Captain Lowe says that nothing but great strength of body and of mind could have enabled any man to bear up under such a wound as General Nicholson then received. It is impossible to speak without deep emotion of the early death of so gallant a soldier (cheers) and of so admirable an officer. (Cheers.) His whole life was one continued career of devotion to his duty. He was perfectly insensible to fear. But he fell as a soldier desires to fall, only too early for his country—he fell in the discharge of his duty in pushing forward his victorious troops towards the consummation of a glorious victory. (Cheers.) It is proposed to grant to his mother a pension of 500*l.* a year. This is the second son she has lost in India. I recommend the following resolutions to your cordial approbation:—

"That as a mark of the high sense entertained by this Court of the services rendered by the late Brigadier-General Neill, on whom Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to confer the posthumous dignity of Knight Commander of the Bath, a special pension of 500*l.* a year be granted to the widow of that distinguished officer, in substitution for the pensionary allowance to which Lady Neill is entitled under the regulations for the grant of pensions to the widows of officers killed in action with the enemy."

"That in recognition of the brilliant career and eminent services of the late Brigadier-General John Nicholson, on whom also Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to confer the posthumous dignity of Knight Commander of the Bath, a special grant of 500*l.* per annum be made to the mother of that distinguished officer, in substitution for the pension to which that lady would be entitled under the regulations of the service."

SIR F. CURRIE: I beg leave to second the resolutions; but it seems to me altogether unnecessary that I should ask this Court in passing the resolutions unanimously. The Chairman has pointed to the fact that General Nicholson once served under me in the civil service, although his duty was at that time as much military as civil; but in consequence of Captain Nicholson very seldom writing anything about himself or of his own doings, it was not often that I had an opportunity of noticing his own merits; but I can inform the Court that Lord Dalhousie on one occasion wrote to me a private letter, in which he said, "I am by no means satisfied why Captain Nicholson's name is kept back." There is nothing upon record which can surpass the bravery of Captain Nicholson on the occasion of his services at Attock. In my letter, when resident at Lahore, to the secretary of the Governor-General, dated January 28, 1849, I stated that Captain Nicholson, "having secured Attock by turning out the Sikh garrison and substituting one on which he placed dependence, hastened on to Hazara Abdal to prevent a junction with Sirdar Chutter Sing, and the regiment moving up at his call from Kahoota, to co-operate generally with Captain Abbot and to keep in control the inhabitants of the Khatir districts, with whom he was well acquainted. But Captain Nicholson's services in the Punjab and upon the Sutlej, in 1847 and 1849, will be found fully set forth in the papers. But I must in general terms bear my testimony to the very high estimation I entertained of Captain Nicholson's character. He was one of my assistants during a most important period for eighteen months. He was associated with many eminent men, among whom were Mackeson, Cooks, Edwardes, Herbert, Abbot; but among them all prominently stood forth, as a practical man and a most useful officer, General Nicholson. But he was a man whose services I felt it difficult to bring before the Government, because he would not bring them before me. I however knew what those services were from others. He was a man certainly of the highest personal courage, recklessness, and daring. These, to be sure, were mere military virtues; but I never saw them excelled. But his tact, his judgment, his energy, his indomitable inflexibility of purpose, and, as a natural consequence of these, numerous qualities, his influence over others, were such as I have never seen in any other man. You will, I feel sure, gladly seize the opportunity of conferring an honour on the memory of such a man.

The resolutions were again read by the Secretary.

Mr. Lewin.—I rise to move the following amendment:—

"That the sum of £500 proposed as an annuity to Lady Neill does not represent the sense of this Court, and is inadequate for the support of a lady holding the position of the widow of a K.C.B., and, adverting to the great services of General Neill, to the high position he had acquired as a soldier and a General, this Court is of opinion that an annuity of £1,200 would more adequately represent the station in society which Lady Neill would have enjoyed had her husband not fallen in the service of his country. And this Court is of opinion that the rewards proposed in the cases of Generals Havelock and Wilson are wholly inadequate to meet the requirements of justice and the merits of the individuals."

It is unnecessary for me to say that I do not oppose these to any one of the parties; nor do I intend to enter into the services of these individuals, because they have been amply entered into by the chairman and deputy-chairman. With regard to the merits of those services, I entirely and completely concur with what has been said respecting them. But the wonder that I feel is that, when the chairman used such language towards these three men, he should have proposed such inadequate rewards for their services. In the case of Lady Neill especially, I think the sum proposed to be given to her is unworthy of us. Had her husband lived, she would have been in high station and enjoying a large income: and is the fact of her being deprived of her husband a reason why she should be kept comparatively poor? You have spoken of General Neill, and have shown that he was a man of the greatest possible merit. You found him at Cawnpore; and then you learn that he was killed: and how do you conclude the history of his services? Why, by proposing that his widow should have a pension of £500 a year. I defy any man conversant with the history of the Indian service to find a person in that service superior to General Neill. Having alluded to General Neill, I will now refer to the rewards you have bestowed upon other general officers. I do not mean to speak in depreciation of those other officers; still they did not accomplish what General Neill did. According to your own words he saved your empire. No doubt, if he had not kept open the road between Calcutta and Benares, Cawnpore would not have been saved. Take the case of Sir John Keane; he went to Guznee, he was an officer of great merit, he took the command of the army and marched to Cabul. But the very best that could be said of the service in which he was employed was that it was a marauding expedition. But what did you do for Sir John Keane? You gave him a pension of £2,000.

The Chairman.—We did not give him a pension, but the Queen made him a peer.

Mr. Lewin.—It is perfectly well known that this Court can confer rewards; though on some occasions they are made not on your recommendation, but in spite of it. With regard to General Wilson you recommend a pension of 1,000*l.* a year, and he has been made a baronet. I ask whether the taking of Delhi is not a greater event than the taking of Guinee. Urgent orders were sent out from this country to take Delhi. Well, General Wilson took it. And yet he is to be paid for his services exactly the same as the services of Sir Thomas Which were rewarded. But were the services of those two generals equal? In the resolution proposed by you, the words "in substitution for the pensionary allowance" occur, I wish to ask for an explanation. What I would propose is, that instead of the 500*l.* per annum being in substitution for, it should be in addition to all other claims which Lady Neill may have.

The Chairman.—By the regulations, the widow of an officer killed in action is entitled to 120*l.* a year for life. This pension of 500*l.* a year, is in substitution of the 120*l.* a year.

Mr. Lewin.—I know there is a feeling out of this Court that this reward to Lady Neill is not sufficient. I believe Lady Neill has a great number of children, and I cannot conceive how she and her family can subsist on so limited a sum. I beg to move my amendment.

Mr. Locke (M.P. for Southwark).—I rise for the purpose of seconding this proposition, and I do so upon this ground—that with regard to the resolution as it is at present put to the Court, it does not appear to me to embody all the facts of the case, because I have no explanation given to the question—namely, as to what this pension of 500*l.* a year was to be the substitution of. Therefore we are placed in this position,—that we are to be led to a decision under the supposition that the sum of 500*l.* a year is to be given to these ladies, whereas, in point of truth and of fact, no such sum of money is about to be voted to them. We have had a statement from the chairman, namely, that the sum of 120*l.* a year at all events is to be taken from the 500*l.* But I understand there is another fund, namely, the military fund, to which the widows of these officers are as much entitled as the gentlemen around me are to their dividends.

The Chairman.—The resolution won't affect that claim.

Mr. Locke.—I am exceedingly happy to hear that it will not affect that claim. The purpose of my rising was to elicit that answer. According to the rules and regulations laid down here it seems that the sums proposed to be given to these ladies are exactly of the same amount as has hitherto been given under similar circumstances. But it does appear to me that the sum of 500*l.* a year is exceedingly small. Let us, as proprietors of the East-India Company, do as far as we can as men and fellow-countrymen to reward those who have done our work out in India, and who have done it so nobly. Let us do that which is right and just, and commensurate with the duty they have performed. I therefore have very great pleasure in seconding the amendment that has been moved by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Serjeant Gazelee.—I quite agree with Mr. Lewin and the gentleman who has just spoken, that we can decide what is due to our officers, and that we need not follow the course which the Government may take in distributing their rewards. We are quite able to consider what our own officers merit. It appears to me that these grants have been brought forward and put in a vote together improperly. I should have thought that you would have put them one by one before us. There appears to me certain anomalies in these grants. I understand that Lady Neill has nine children. I say that 500*l.* a year is a sorry pittance for this poor lady. It ought not to include the 120*l.* a year which her husband would have been entitled to. Don't haggle when you are distributing these rewards for a paltry 120*l.* a year. It may be the last grant you will have to give. (Laughter.) I am quite sure the chairman is a liberal man. Then I say at least give her the 120*l.* a year. I cannot go so far as Mr. Lewin, who goes to the other extreme. But give her the 120*l.*, and let the pension be 700*l.* or 800*l.* a year. So far as to Lady Neill. I come now to the case of Mrs. Nicholson. I think you don't show the difference between the case of Lady Neill and that of Mrs. Nicholson. As I understand she being a mother and not a wife, she would not be entitled to anything from the Government on account of her son's death.

The Chairman.—She would be entitled to 80*l.* a year.

Mr. Serjeant Gazelee.—Well, she gets 80*l.* a year; but she has no title to support; she has no children to support, she has no money taken away from her. Surely, Lady Neill should be entitled to more. I don't say that Mrs. Nicholson should have less than you propose to give her. But she is, I understand, seventy years of age. Then, for God's sake, deal with her liberally. If it is your heart's wish to give more; show yourselves men, and show that you are independent of the Government.

The Chairman.—I admire my hon. friend's warmth upon the subject. I will inform him what it is I am willing to accede to. It is this, that these pensions shall be in addition to and not in substitution of these ladies' pensionary allowances to which they would be entitled by the regulations.

Mr. Lewin.—I should be satisfied if the honourable Chairman would extend his views a little farther.

The Chairman.—I am willing to make the 500*l.* a-year clear of all deductions.

Mr. Lewin.—I think 500*l.* is not enough.

Mr. White.—That is, you use the words "in addition to" instead of "in substitution of," the allowances to which these ladies would be entitled. I congratulate the Court in having obtained the concession made by the Chairman.

Mr. Lewin.—I am not quite sure that this a regular way of disposing of my amendment; though I would certainly prefer to withdraw it than lose everything.

Mr. Locke.—I presume that the resolution as altered will be put to the meeting as the original motion, when I conceive it will be competent for any one to move to substitute any other sum than 500*l.* as proposed. I seconded the amendment of the hon. gentleman for the purpose of bringing this question of amount fully before the Court. I shall be most happy to support any resolution for increasing the sum beyond 500*l.*

Mr. Lewin.—I would be willing to substitute 750*l.* in place of the 1,200*l.* which I originally proposed. These gentlemen were not going to have titles; though had they been Queen's officers we know they would have been made peers.

The Chairman.—Sir Henry Havelock is a Queen's officer, and he receives precisely the same reward and distinction as are given to Sir Archdale Wilson. I having made a concession on the part of the Court of Directors, I hope the honourable member will on his part concede to the Court. It should be remembered that it is not our own money that we are voting away. The Directors are as well disposed to be generous as this Court of Proprietors can be; but there must be a limit to these things. I hope the Court will not disturb the unanimity that has prevailed on the part of the Directors on this subject.

Mr. Helps.—I beg to ask how the proposition at present stands. Will the resolution contain the words "in addition to," instead of "in substitution of?"

Mr. Lewin.—The Chairman originally proposed that the sum of 500*l.* should be in lieu of the 120*l.* to which Lady Neill would be entitled, and the 80*l.* to which Mrs. Nicholson would be entitled. What I propose is that the sum of 750*l.* should be paid to these ladies, independently of all other claims, on the ground that whatever we do on this occasion should be distinct from every other subject.

Mr. Dent.—I think 750*l.* should be granted, instead of 500*l.* I really consider this as a special occasion, and therefore precedent should not be quoted. For, according to the Chairman's own statement, if General Neill did not, by giving a check to the mutiny, save India, he saved all that part of the country which enabled us to keep up our communication with Delhi. I conceive that for General Neill's services, and for General Nicholson's services, a reward of 500*l.* a year is most inadequate. With regard to General Havelock, the Government have granted him a pension of 1,000*l.* a year, and which is to be continued to his son.

The Chairman.—I was comparing the case of General Havelock with that of General Wilson, and not with the case of General Neill.

Mr. Dent.—Well, General Neill's services were scarcely inferior to those of General Wilson.

Mr. Lewin.—And to General Nicholson's mother also. (Cries of "No," "no!")

Mr. Serjeant Gazelee.—I shall be quite satisfied with the increased grant being made to Lady Neill. I think the fact of her having a title to maintain, and having nine children, distinguishes her case from that of General Nicholson's mother.

Mr. Locke.—If I could see any distinction between the two cases, I should not object to coincide with the learned Serjeant; but after remarks you, sir, made to-day with respect to the services of General Nicholson, it would indeed be most invidious to vote one sum to Lady Neill, and pass over the mother of General Nicholson with a smaller amount. The claims of Lady Neill are very strong, inasmuch as she has a rank and station to maintain; but we ought not to be niggardly on this occasion, and therefore, if the motion has not been seconded as to both, I beg to second it.

Mr. Helps.—The fact appears to be, Mr. Chairman, that you have done your work only too well. (Hear, and laughter.) You have so enforced upon the Court the claims of these two officers, that you have raised in every man's mind a regret to give them so pitiful a reward as your first proposal. You have lowered it down to the lowest point, because you have considered the pockets out of which the money is to come. But the real question is not who is to pay, but what has been deserved—what have been the services of these men. As the reward is vicarious—as one is represented by the mother and the other is represented by the wife—I think it would be very invidious if any distinction were made. Therefore, I shall support this additional sum in both cases. There is another practical question to be considered, and that is the different ages of these two ladies. It is perfectly true that the mother of General Nicholson has not a title to support. But then, on the other hand, considering that she is a lady of seventy years of age, the value of her pension will not be equal to that which is to be granted to Lady Neill. As at present advised, I cannot think that 750*l.* a year is too large a sum for these ladies to receive, who have suffered by the death of two eminent generals whose great gallantry in our service in India will be remembered for ages to come.

Mr. Clark.—I cannot give a silent vote on this occasion, considering the qualifications of these respected and noble officers, and the claims which their high qualities have upon us. I understand that the pension to Lady Neill will not be continued to her children. Will it or will it not?

The Chairman.—No.

Mr. Clark.—Nor to the descendants of Mrs. Nicholson?

The Chairman.—No.

Mr. Clark.—Can anything be so niggardly?

The Chairman.—I will endeavour to state, as shortly as I can, what these ladies will separately receive. I was wrong in saying that Mrs. Nicholson was entitled to receive anything from the Regulation Fund on her son being killed in the field before the enemy. Lady Neill is entitled to receive 120*l.* a year from that fund, supposing her claim is not barred by this resolution. The grant is extended to the mother of the deceased officer when she is shown to be in low pecuniary circumstances. Then, besides the 120*l.* a year, Lady Neill will receive 20*l.* a year from the Compassionate Fund; and she will receive from the Military Fund, quite independent of the service itself, for herself and children, between 500*l.* and 600*l.*

Mr. Dent.—Yes; but that is a sum derived from a fund to which her husband has contributed, and is not a benefit conferred by the Company.

The Chairman.—I must say, from my own knowledge, that some of Lady Neill's children have already been provided for.

Mr. Lewin.—By promise of patronage, perhaps; but how is she to educate them?

Mr. Remington.—Before you put the resolution, I wish to make one remark. You said that why you could not increase the pensions beyond 500*l.* a year was, that we are not voting away our own money. But let me remind you, that if there is any money whatever coming into your treasury, it is owing entirely to the services of Generals Havelock, Wilson, Nicholson, Neill, and other eminent and gallant men, many of whom have lost their lives to save the East-India Company whatever revenues they now possess.

The Chairman.—Although it is very ungracious, I must proceed to put the amendment to the vote.

On a show of hands, the Chairman declared that the amendment was negatived.

A division was then demanded, when the numbers were—

For the amendment	18
Against it	31
Majority against the amendment				13

During the absence of the reporters—

Mr. Locke addressed the Court. On our readmission he was stating that the amendment which had just been negatived referred not only to the case of Lady Neill, but also to that of Mrs. Nicholson; and although he could not see any difference in principle between the two cases, still, as other hon. proprietors were of opinion that there did exist a difference, he begged to move, as an amendment, that the sum of 750*l.* be granted as a pension to Lady Neill, independent of all other claims.

Mr. Serjeant Gazelee.—You have mentioned that we are not voting away our own money. That has always had a consideration with me whenever we have been called upon to vote pensions; but I never heard the fact stated by the Chairman when we granted 5,000*l.* to Lord Dalhousie. (Cries of "Oh!") Ay, but I know it, and you shall know it. It was never involved then. I differ entirely from my learned friend in this instance, because Lady Neill's is a distinct case from that of Mrs. Nicholson. Lady Neill is the wife, and Mrs. Nicholson is only the mother; therefore, the cases are quite different. I do hope that the Court will come into my proposition.

Mr. Lewin.—The amendment now proposed is to vote 750*l.* to Lady Neill and only 500*l.* to Mrs. Nicholson. I wish to get as much as I can, if I cannot get all; and therefore I accept the amendment.

Mr. Helps.—The numbers of the division were not declared.

Mr. Dent.—Oh, yes; they were 31 to 18.

Mr. Helps.—There is very little principle involved in the question; because the principle of granting the pension is conceded on both sides of the bar, and the question is only one of amount, on which any one might give an opinion. I therefore do hope that the Directors will concede to the will of the majority among the Proprietors themselves.

The amendment was then put, and on a show of hands the Chairman declared it to be negatived.

The Court then divided, when the numbers were—

For the amendment	20
Against it	31
Majority against the amendment				11

The Chairman then put the original resolution as amended by omitting the words "in substitution of" and inserting the words "in addition to," which was carried without a division.

The Court then adjourned.

EAST-INDIA HOUSE, Dec. 23.

A Quarterly General Court of the East-India Company was held at their house in Leadenhall-street, on Wednesday, the 23rd of December, 1857.

Mr. R. D. Mangles, M.P., Chairman of the Court of Directors, in the chair.

The minutes of the last Court were read.

The Chairman.—I have to inform the Court that the warrants for the half-yearly dividend on the East-India Company's Stock are ready for delivery, and will be paid on the 16th January next.

The Chairman.—I have to inform the proprietors, that this Court has been made special for the purpose of submitting for confirmation the resolutions of the general court on the 16th instant, approving the resolutions of the Court of Directors on the 2nd instant, granting to Major-General Sir Archdale Wilson, Bart., G.C.B., an annuity of 1,000*l.*; and to Lady Neill, the widow of the late Brigadier-General Neill; and to Mrs. Nicholson, the mother of the late Brigadier-General John Nicholson, special pensions of 500*l.* per annum respectively, in addition to the allowances to which they are entitled under the regulations.

The Secretary having read the resolutions,

The Chairman said:—I have now to move that this Court do confirm the resolution granting to Major-General Sir Archdale Wilson, Bart., K.C.B., an annuity of 1,000*l.*

Sir F. Currie (Deputy Chairman),—I beg to second the motion.

The motion was put and agreed to unanimously.

The Chairman.—I now move that the resolution granting a pension of 500*l.* a year to Lady Neill and Mrs. Nicholson respectively be confirmed.

Sir F. Currie.—I second the motion.

Mr. Lewin.—I will state my reasons why I think the resolution should be rejected. I consider that 500*l.* a year is not sufficient for a lady on whom the Queen has conferred the honour of the order of the Bath. To sustain that rank, an increased expense is necessarily incurred. It should also be remembered that Lady Neill has nine children; and although some of them are said to be provided for, after a certain time, as cadets, still, in the meantime, they have to be supported and educated, and how is Lady Neill, with 500*l.* a year, to educate those children so as to enable them to pass the necessary examinations before entering the army?

The resolution was then confirmed.

REPRESENTATION OF INDIA.

Mr. Jones.—I ask that the Secretary do read the motion of which I have given notice.

The Secretary then read the following:—

"That it is due to the advancing intelligence of the people of India that a deputy from each university in the several presidencies be maintained at the public expense in this country, with a view to inform the proprietors as to the wishes and complaints of the people of India."

Mr. Jones.—I think it cannot fail to have occurred to this Court that since these sad events have taken place in India no debate has been had and no observations have been made in the Court with reference to those transactions. I think it would be very desirable that we should hear to-day the opinions of th

Court of Directors in reference to the causes of these disasters, and to the future conduct which the Government of India should pursue. It is said that the sepoys are entirely separated from the general population, and that this is only a sepoy mutiny. Now, in looking through the proceedings of Parliament, and on referring to the petitions that have been presented, I find a large amount of discontent existing among the people of India, which I think answers the question, what is the cause of this outbreak? The Rev. Dr. Duff, of Calcutta, is opposed to your opinion. He states, in a letter to the Rev. Dr. Tweedie, that the people are decidedly in favour of the sepoys, and adds, that "after escaping from the murderous hands of the mutineers, British gentlemen and ladies have, in particular instances, experienced kindness at the hands of the common villagers, but that in a far greater number of instances they have experienced quite the reverse." I think there is sufficient to account for these mutinies, and to prove that, instead of the sepoys being the originators of them, they have been acted upon by the people. One of the chief causes of discontent, I believe, is to be found in the alteration which has been made in the law of inheritance by the Indian Government. A petition from the Hindoo committee at Calcutta, which was sent over here in 1850, contained a clause in which the petitioners almost predicted what would shortly happen. That clause ran thus:—"Should this inroad upon their religion be allowed by your Honourable Court, your memorialists expect no outbreak at present—no present disturbance; but they expect—and they would not do their duty as loyal subjects of the British crown if they did not candidly state their belief—that if this odious attack on the Hindoo religion shall become law, her Majesty will have eighty millions of Hindoo subjects in India dissatisfied and discontented." With respect to the law of inheritance in India, it appears to be built upon these grounds. The Hindoo acquires the possession of property, not for his present personal comfort, as we do in this country, but for the safety of his soul in a future state. When he dies, not having power to will his property away, it necessarily falls into the hands of his son, either by lineal right, or by adoption, by whom it is held as a sacred trust that he should perform certain periodical ceremonies to secure the soul's repose of him who had first acquired it. It was also a rule of Hindoo law, and as a consequence of the law of inheritance, that if the party failed to fulfil the trust, he should be deprived of the property, and that some other descendant should take the property, and perform the services. Now what have you done? You have said to the Hindoo—You shall inherit the property of your ancestor, but you shall not inherit it with those obligations, for the very purpose of your performing which your ancestor acquired it. By our refusing to recognize the law of adoption, which is part of the law of transmission of property, we have absorbed the territories of the native princes into our own dominions; and if there be any truth in Lord Ellenborough's allegation, that the sepoys felt an interest in the compliments paid to the native princes, surely the converse must be true, and that discontent must exist in the minds of the sepoys, when injury was inflicted upon the native princes. Not content with having injured the native princes and dishonoured the Hindoo religion, Lord Dalhousie disgraced Sir Charles Napier, the best friend the sepoys ever had. But the crowning evil of all is the annexation of that very territory in whose capital our troops have so long been pent up, but from which they are now at last so happily relieved. Still, I do not lay the whole blame of these transactions upon Lord Dalhousie, for he has been but the tool in the hands of higher powers. The noble lord was sent out to India in 1848, but in the preceding year, 1847, Sir Robert Peel declared that there was a principle at work between ourselves and Asiatic nations that forbade us to apply the same rules in our intercourse with them as we should apply to the nations of Europe. Such was the statement made by the leading men of his day; and Lord Dalhousie only carried out the idea embodied in that statement of Sir Robert Peel. But what have been the results of our occupation of India? We have, during the tenure of our rule, especially during the last twenty years, been diffusing European notions among them; we have introduced our European education, both English and vernacular: English at the presidencies and the vernacular in the provinces. We have 25,000 scholars in the Government schools, and 75,000 in the missionary schools. One hundred thousand are thus every five years supplied to Indian society, charged with European notions. Can we expect that they shall be content with their position? Must not European learning give European principles? What constitutes the spur to exertion among yourselves? Is it not that last infirmity of noble minds, the attainment of honour? Are they less sensitive than you? In your dispatch you speak of the great advantages to result, morally and commercially, from the establishment of universities in India. What is the great stimulus to learning, but advancement? If you give them representative power you will quicken their zeal for learning. I have heard that at the last examination at University College prizes were carried off by the natives of India in several departments; and that to the successful competitor in the department of zoology, the Professor bore the flattering testimony:—"Not merely, sir, are you the best and most successful man of the year, but the most intelligent pupil we have ever had." It may be said that in the more subtle development of the intellect the Hindoos are equal to ourselves, but that in the practical ends of life they are far our inferiors. But those Hindoos who have most advanced themselves have done so in those very branches of practical knowledge considered the most useful to mankind. It was the textile fabrics of India, the elements of colour, and the beauty of design which produced the most effect on the manufactures of this country. And what is the state of the press in India? I find that there are published in Calcutta alone, seven daily papers, three bi-weekly, eleven weekly, five bi-monthly, eight monthly periodicals, nine quarterly, and eight yearly, a larger issue than Edinburgh, Dublin, or any city but London, can exhibit. There is evidence enough to show that a strong anxiety exists in the minds of the natives of India to know the truth. These are proofs that it is not safe for us to neglect this growing desire for self-government. Our own universities send members to Parliament in consideration that they are able to instruct the people upon those questions which are necessary to be understood for the nation's welfare. Now, I think that the proprietors of this Court greatly need instruction, and I am of opinion that the instruction they require could not be conveyed to them in a more effectual form than by the personal presence of men from India who shall be deputed from each university in the several presidencies in that country. I am also of opinion that the position of those gentlemen should be made a lucrative one, and that they should be made members of the direction. What we want, is to draw closer the bonds which unite England with India. This must be done by recognizing the new features of Indian society. The reliance of England henceforth must be on her army primarily, but eventually on her Anglo-Indian population whom we have raised up in that country. The hon. proprietor concluded by moving his resolution.

Mr. Lewin.—I rise to second the motion, but I do not agree with all its details. I should be sorry to express my dissent from any motion which would have the effect of introducing the representative system in India; but I do not approve that those men should be paid, because it would sacrifice their independence. This mutiny has been nothing more than a crisis which was certain to come at last, as the natural result of the oppression of the people, and of the annexation of the territories of the native princes. A more gross and scandalous act of injustice was never imputable to the British Government than the annexation of Oude. At the same time, you have kept the natives in a state of subjection and degradation. You do not allow them to attain stations of eminence. It is true, in Bengal you permit them to be judges in suits to a certain amount; but still you do not place them on an equality with Europeans. This must create a most rankling spirit against us. Also I agree with the hon. mover as to the ignorance of members of Parliament on matters relating to India. There is a degree of ignorance on Indian affairs among members of Parliament which has not only astonished but has almost disgusted me. If you had been as independent as you are able, and as independent as you are encroaching, I believe you would never have been threatened with loss of power. For, however desirable it may be to get rid of the double government, I do not think it is desirable to get rid of you. I think there is more honesty to be found here than can be found at the West-end. I am glad to say so; and I only regret that you have not been more independent. If you had you would have been upheld by the public, and the Government would never have dared to attack you.

Mr. Mackenzie.—I rise to oppose the motion, because I believe that nothing could more speedily bring your Indian empire to a calamitous end. The natives of India ought to be much indebted to Mr. Jones for his speech in their favour, but if it were translated into the vernacular and transmitted to them, they would merely look upon it as nonsense. Whatever the future form of the government of India may be, the first duty is to give ample protection to life and property, cheap, speedy, and efficient justice, a good police, and a guarantee to the people of their ancient rights and customs; but they must not be put into situations of trust and of importance, which, with their present ignorance, prejudices, and immorality, they are totally unfitted for. There is scarcely a native employé in all India but is open to corruption, and the higher the salary they receive the greater is the bribe they demand.

Mr. Clark.—I am desirous to make a few observations upon this subject, because I look at the question in a different aspect from that which the hon. mover has taken of it. I believe that he deals in fiction, and not in fact. But I would ask this single question, what would become of India if we were at this moment to withdraw ourselves from it? Why, there would be one scene of carnage throughout the length and breadth of India; there would be no civilized government, but the strongest would get off the best. In wielding the government of a country like India, it is impossible to be always right; but if there is a large per-centage of good to India, then, in my opinion, that is good government. The general result has been that, when you have deposed princes, you have protected the people and ameliorated their condition. The people have never enjoyed the protection of property, but have always been obliged to bury their money in order to secure it from plunder by their rulers.

The Chairman.—I do not propose to follow the hon. gentleman who has brought forward this motion through all the details of his very able and eloquent speech. There is one single point to which I wish more particularly to allude, and that is, whether the recent melancholy events have been the result of an insurrection, or merely of a military mutiny. Now both the mover and the seconder of the motion jumped at once to the conclusion that it was an insurrection of the people, and that the sepoys had merely been the instruments of the people. This certainly is contrary to the general belief; but the hon. mover has referred to certain petitions which had been presented to the House of Commons, in which it was stated that discontent prevailed among the people of India. I suppose he referred more especially to a petition presented to the House of Commons in 1850. In that petition the missionaries expressed their belief that a strong feeling of discontent existed among the people of Bengal, and also their fear that the rankling feeling of dissatisfaction with the government would display itself in an insurrectionary movement, and that the people would at last be driven by that feeling into the commission of outrage and violence. Now, what are the facts of the case? Why, that with the exception of certain tribes who have led a predatory life from generation to generation, and who always plunder wherever they can, from one end of India to the other there has been no rising of the people. In Bengal many of the stations were totally defenceless, and a vast number of them have had no sepoys at all for several years. At these stations there is no other force to overawe the people than the weak police establishment; yet neither at Chittagong nor Dacca has there been any rising of the people. A partial insurrection occurred at Patna; but, with that exception, there has been no rising of the people whatever. In the province of Behar, where the people are a military, manly, self-reliant race, and from which many of the sepoys have been drawn, two remarkable facts occurred which are worthy of notice in considering the question whether it is an insurrection of the people or of the military. At the time the sepoys mutinied at Patna the civil authorities of the two districts of which Chuppra and Mozufferpoor are the capitals, were ordered by the resident commissioner to leave those stations and come to the capital of the province, Patna. The civil authorities at once retired in obedience to orders; and what was the result? So far from the people showing any hostility to the government, or acting by themselves in an insurrectionary manner, at Chuppra a Mahomedan gentleman took the command of the station, and assumed the protection of the town, and the direction of the populace; and there was not only no rising of the people, but when the civil servants returned to the station and resumed their position, that gentleman and the people acting under his orders handed back to the authorities the treasury safe, the gaol safe, and the town safe and in perfect order. Does that look like a feeling of hostility on the part of the people against the government of India? Is that any evidence on their part that they desire a change? Again, at Mozufferpoor, a small party of twelve irregular cavalry, who had mutinied and murdered their commanding officer, Major Holmes, attempted to plunder the treasury, but were driven back by the police. They next made an attempt to plunder the town, but were again driven back by the police and inhabitants, who rose and resisted instead of aiding the mutineers. And then at Mozufferpoor, as at Chuppra, when the government authorities returned they found the treasury intact, the prisoners in the gaol all safe, and the population of the town as peaceable and quiet as when they left it. Look again at the state of things at Hyderabad, in the Deccan. Up to the latest advices it was in the most perfect state of order, and there was every appearance of good faith being observed towards us on the part of the native ruler. As an illustration of this, I will mention the following incident:—A short time ago a Mahomedan preacher was engaged in delivering a sermon in the principal mosque at Hyderabad. The sermon was upon the ordinary points of the Mahomedan faith, but whilst it was being delivered a Mussulman fanatic in the congregation rose and exclaimed—"Oh! it is all nonsense. This is not the sort of advice to give us at such a time. The only thing to be preached at this moment is a crusade against the unbeliever"—meaning the British Government. The preacher rebuked the man, and told him he was mistaken in applying the term "unbelievers" to English Christians, who were believers in one God as Mussulmans were. The man continuing his attempts to incite the people to violence, the preacher took the opportunity of desiring a friend to give notice of what was passing to Salar-jung, the minister, who at once hastened down to the mosque, arrested the fanatic, and carried him off to prison. Does that show any feeling of hostility towards the English Government? Up to this time Salar-jung has kept the city and province perfectly quiet, and the contingent force which is maintained at Hyderabad has acted with the utmost fidelity, and with the greatest success against the mutineers. The same has taken place on the part of the Mahratta chiefs. Scindia and Holkar—and eminently Holkar—have proved themselves in every instance our faithful friends. I ask whether these facts do not prove beyond question or doubt that the movement is a movement only of the sepoys—a military mutiny, and not an insurrection of the people? By the last mail from India I received a letter from Sir John Lawrence, in which that eminent individual expresses his most decided opinion that the movement was a purely military movement on the part of the sepoys, instigated by their believing that they were masters of the position, and that the power of India was in their hands. He also used this expression, that they had the feeling of the Pretorian guards of ancient Rome, and seemed to think they might give away the empire. This view of the matter I believe to be the correct one, and to be justified by the facts of the case, by the way in which especially the districts around Delhi have settled down into a state of order, and paid their revenue without irregularity or deduction, for directly the mutineers were driven out of the city the inhabitants returned spontaneously and most gladly to order under the British Government. The attempt to work out a representative system of government has, I believe, failed in every country in the world, except, perhaps, where the people are of Anglo-Saxon descent. What we have seen in France, in Spain, and in other countries is certainly not calculated to induce us to believe that the people of India are fit for representative institutions. But supposing they were, is the best mode for carrying out the principle, and for enabling the people of India to make known their wishes and complaints to this country, that of giving to them representatives to be chosen from the Indian universities? Supposing the gentlemen of England, the iron-masters of Staffordshire, the copper-miners of Wales, the stocking-manufacturers of Nottingham, the crape-manufacturers of Norwich, the bankers and merchants of London, in such a case, wished to make known their wants and complaints to Government, would they select their representatives from the universities of Oxford and Cambridge to make those wishes and complaints known? What do the inhabitants of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay know of the general wishes, wants, and complaints of the people of those presidencies? Just about as much as the members from the universities of Oxford and Cambridge would be supposed to know about all those wants and interests I have mentioned. Therefore I do not think that either the people of India are fitted for a representative Government, or if they were, that the members of the Indian universities are qualified to represent them. For these reasons I am obliged to oppose the motion.

Mr. Helps.—I should like to make one or two observations before the close of this debate. I entirely agree with you that the hon. proposer of this motion has not proposed a feasible scheme for the end he has in view. But I don't think there is any parallel between the universities of this country and those of India. It is necessary that India should be represented by persons acquainted with Indian subjects, the Indian language, and also with the English language. I presume that that is the principal reason that has induced the hon. mover to propose that representatives from the Indian universities should come among us. Again, I agree with the mover that it is of the greatest importance that sound, accurate knowledge of India should be found in this Court. How is that to be secured? Why, by electing members into your hon. body who have had long experience of Indian affairs. That appears to me a much more natural way of obtaining an accurate knowledge of Indian affairs than the adoption of the motion. The only specific wrong of which the proprietor has represented the people of India to complain is this, that we have altered a most iniquitous law of inheritance. (Hear, hear.) Not very long ago it was the law applicable to the descent of landed property in Ireland, that real property was forfeited by the profession of the Roman Catholic religion. That law has since been repealed. That is precisely analogous to the principle on which the Indian Government has acted. They have said that no man shall suffer in his property by reason of his professing that which he believes to be religious truth. This is the only thing with which you are charged. But two or three days ago there was a fact communicated to us by the Times, of which you have taken no notice whatever. (Hear, hear.) If that statement be founded in fact, I am afraid the motion of the hon. proprietor comes a little too late, and that our days are already numbered. (Hear, hear.) I would therefore respectfully ask you what has passed, so far as it is fit to be revealed, between the Government and yourselves, with regard to the abolition of what is called the double government of India? (Cheers.)

The Chairman.—I expected that this question would be put to me; but if it had not, I should have felt it my duty to state the facts to which it relates. I have to inform the Court that the deputy chairman and myself saw Lord Palmerston, by appointment, on Saturday morning last, and that his lordship then communicated to us that it is the intention of her Majesty's Government to propose to Parliament, when it meets again at the beginning of next year, a bill for the purpose of placing the government of the Queen's East-Indian dominions under the direct authority of the Crown. (Loud cries of Hear.)

Mr. Jones rose to reply, when

Mr. Serjeant Gaselee rose and said:—We have heard one eloquent speech; I hope we shall not have another. But the whole thing is perfectly ludicrous; and therefore I beg to suggest that before the Crown disposes of us, let us do the thing properly—dispose of ourselves, and take up our hats and be off. (Laughter.)

Mr. Jones.—I shall not detain you five minutes. It is supposed that this Court will very quickly be dissolved; but what the prime minister has threatened to do may nevertheless need not be done. The Government have long threatened to reform the corporation of London; but that corporation has hitherto been strong enough to baffle the Government, and I hope it will continue so. I hope all corporate institutions will successfully resist the centralizing power, and that they will assist in giving to the population of India an opportunity of entering into your corporation. I hope that the same principle by which you upset Fox when he attempted to destroy you, will upset Palmerston when he shall make a similar attempt. It has been suggested to me that I should withdraw my motion, and seeing what is the feeling of the Court, I will leave it to your consideration.

The Chairman.—Do you withdraw it?

Mr. Jones.—Yes.

The Motion was accordingly withdrawn.

Mr. Lewin.—I wish the secretary to read the words of my motion.

The secretary then read the following:—

"That the disasters that have lately occurred in our Indian territories have been owing to a want of foresight on the part of the Indian Government, and to a neglect of the means which were at hand to control them. That to the supineness and apathy of the Home Government of India is attributable the want of timely military aid, which it was in its power to supply by means of steam-vessels, which would have arrested the slaughter of our troops and countrymen, and averted the danger which now threatened the garrison of Lucknow."

Mr. Lewin.—I will detain the Court but a very few minutes. My first proposition is, that the Government of Bengal knew perfectly the menaces that had been thrown out long before the outrages were committed, and that they were warned of what was about to come to pass. So early as the 8th of February, General Harsey stated, that all the sepoys at Calcutta had been tampered with. On the 11th of February, the Government were informed that they were on a mine. Notwithstanding all these warnings, no troops were sent out from this country to India till the 28th of July, and then about 400 troops were sent in a sailing-vessel—the Robert Lowe. About this time, Mr. Colvin, the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, a man who highly distinguished himself at the commencement of this outbreak, issued a proclamation. You have been since disposed to annul that proclamation; and yet, on the 8th of July, 1857, it met with your entire approval.

The Chairman.—That was his first proclamation: it was not the proclamation.

Mr. Lewin.—I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. Helps.—Do not go on to blame the Court now that they are going out. (A laugh.)

Mr. Lewin.—I cannot help it; they have brought it all on themselves. (Laughter.) Without detaining the Court further, I beg to move the resolution.

The Chairman.—Is the motion seconded?

Mr. Jones.—I will second the motion for the purpose of hearing any observation the Chairman may have to offer.

The Chairman.—The only observation I shall make is to put the question.

The motion was then put and negatived.

BULLION SENT TO INDIA.

The Chairman.—I have had a question put to me by Mr. Mackenzie, who wishes to know what is the amount of silver bullion sent to India by the East-India Company between the 1st of August and the 5th of December, and on what terms that bullion has been raised. I beg to state that the amount of bullion conveyed to India, at the urgent requisition of the Government of India, between the dates specified is 752,701*l.*, which was purchased at various prices—namely, 61½*d.*, 61½*d.*, 59½*d.*, and 59½*d.*, per ounce. The bullion was purchased in the market.

Mr. Mackenzie said, nothing could be more injudicious than raising a loan in this country at 6 per cent. when they had an open loan in India at 5 per cent. As the interest of money in India was always much higher than in this country, to give 6 per cent. here would at once prevent any chance of getting any money in India to meet the Government requirements. He begged to ask whether 6 per cent. was not given by the Government?

The Chairman.—The money was raised for the general purposes of India at 6 per cent.

Mr. Mackenzie.—Whatever money is required for India ought to be raised in India alone.

The Chairman.—The money has been raised at as cheap a rate as it could be got. An urgent requisition was made to us, and we should have betrayed our trust towards the Government of India if we had neglected to comply with that requisition. They wanted the money to enable them to carry on the operations of the Government, and also to carry on the war, and it was our bounden duty to comply with their request. (Hear, hear.)

"THE DOUBLE GOVERNMENT."

Mr. Serjeant Gaselee.—Is it the intention of the Court of Directors to appoint an early day to take into consideration the gracious message of the prime minister? (Laughter.)

The Chairman.—I only received this letter this morning, and the matter has not yet come under the consideration of the Court.

LORD DALHOUSIE'S PENSION.

The Chairman.—Mr. Lewin has just handed to me a notice of motion for the next Court, and which I shall read to the Court:—"That it is expedient to reconsider the grounds upon which an annuity of 5000*l.* has been granted to the Marquis of Dalhousie, and to inquire whether the insurrection now raging in India is not attributable mainly to the measures of that noble lord." Now, I decline to receive a notice of such a motion; and I do so upon the ground that the annuity to Lord Dalhousie having been granted under all the forms required by Act of Parliament, we have no power to cancel that grant. I shall put it to the Court, therefore, whether I ought to receive the notice or not.

Mr. Serjeant Gaselee.—I cannot but express my disgust at the pension having been granted; but since it has been granted, I should feel a reluctance to discuss it again, and rather leave it to the delicacy of the noble marquis.

Mr. Lewin.—I have no wish to attack Lord Dalhousie, nor any wish to take the pension from him. So far from it, I give Lord Dalhousie great credit for what he has done in India. I wish to God he had been there during the last six months. But I say the grounds on which the grant was made is wrong; and my opinion is that many of the estates which were taken from the native princes should be given back to them.

The Chairman.—I move that this notice of motion be not received.

Mr. Lewin.—On what ground?

The Chairman.—I think it would stultify the Court to receive a notice of a motion which we have no right to entertain. Lord Dalhousie has as much right to the pension as he has to his estate.

Mr. Serjeant Gaselee.—I enter my protest against that doctrine.

Mr. Jones.—I move as an amendment that the question be submitted to the law officers of the East-India Company, whether this Court has power to entertain the motion.

Mr. Serjeant Gaselee.—I shall second the amendment, because I doubt whether the Court has power to reject the notice.

Mr. Lewin.—I consider the conduct of the chairman is an act of despotism. It is too late, perhaps, to stand up for the independence of the Court; still it is a case in which the independence of the Court is involved.

Mr. Prinsep.—The hon. gentleman wishes not to touch the pension, but to consider the grounds upon which it was granted. Now, suppose an Act of Parliament was passed, and an hon. member gave notice that he would move its reconsideration, but that he did not intend to impugn the act itself, but only the grounds on which it was passed, would any such motion be entertained by Parliament? We should be putting ourselves in an absurd position if we were to allow any such notice of motion to be published.

The Chairman.—With regard to the amendment, I beg to say that this Court is quite competent to judge of its own proceedings. The hon. gentleman says I wish to act in an arbitrary manner, and that my conduct is an act of despotism; if it is, it is a despotism which belongs to all authorities.

The question was then put, and it was decided that the notice of motion should not be received.

SCINDE RAILWAY.

A special meeting of this company was held on the 17th Dec., at the office, Gresham-house, Old Broad-street, for the purpose of authorizing the issue of shares to the amount of 500,000*l.*, to be entitled to a guaranteed interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum. Mr. Andrews, the chairman, presided.

The Chairman explained that it was necessary they should raise the additional capital to enable the company to carry out contracts that had been too long delayed. They were bound by the original agreement with the East-India Company to pay to them on this additional capital 25 per cent. by the 17th of March next, and to enable the shareholders to meet this demand as early as possible, it was proposed that two calls of 2*l.* 10*s.* each should be made. This would give them as long a period of time for the payment of the amount as circumstances would admit of. The estimated cost of the line, as calculated by the Government engineers, was about 750,000*l.* The East-India Company, however, had given a guarantee on 500,000*l.* only, and the board now asked the shareholders to permit the original capital to be doubled; not that the board thought the whole of the additional 500,000*l.* would be required, but the granting of that amount would put the company in a proper position to complete the line with advantage to themselves. He concluded by moving a formal resolution authorizing the creation and issue of additional capital to the amount of 500,000*l.*, for the completion of the Scinde Railway, in shares of 20*l.* each, to be offered to the existing shareholders in the proportion of one new share for one old share in the present guaranteed capital of the company, the first call of 5*l.* being payable by two instalments of 2*l.* 10*s.* each on the 29th of January and the 15th of March next.

✱ Sir H. Maddox, in seconding the resolution, said the cost of the works, including rolling stock, would be between 7,000*l.* and 8,000*l.* per mile. He trusted the whole outlay would not exceed 800,000*l.*

The resolution was put and carried.

After some observations on the capabilities of the port of Karachi, and the advantages of the railway, a vote of thanks was passed to the chairman and directors, and the meeting separated.

GUNBOATS FOR INDIA.—Messrs. Rennie and Sons have completed three of a number of small high-pressure iron gunboats, ordered by the East-India Company for river service in India. The principle on which these boats are constructed having been proved to answer the expectations anticipated with regard to speed, draught of water, &c., ten others are ordered to be built forthwith. They are fitted with two screw propellers, having one under each quarter, each engine being distinct and capable of being worked alone, which will enable the vessel to turn and slow round speedily in a very narrow compass. One boiler works the pair of engines. They were last week despatched on a trial trip down the river, having an engineer officer from Woolwich dockyard to verify the proceedings. Their rate of speed amounted to nine knots per hour, and draught of water only twenty-four inches. For the purpose of transporting these vessels to their destination, they are prepared so as to disconnect the entire hull, and enable their being stowed in a ship's hold. One 12-pounder gun is mounted amidships. The total length from stem to stern is about seventy-five feet, and width twelve feet.

BOOKS.

The Sepoy Revolt: its Causes and its Consequences. By HENRY MEAD. John Murray.

Mr. Mead himself prepares his readers, in his preface, for something more than a mere narrative of the mutiny of the Bengal army. This volume, he tells us, is the result of ten years' experience as an Indian journalist; but, we shrewdly suspect, other ten years might have passed without the world being benefited by his valuable observations on men and things, had not the personal vanity of Mr. Henry Mead been grievously affronted. This gentleman, it seems, was temporarily engaged to conduct the Friend of India during the absence of its editor,—of course, with the understanding that he would adapt himself to the ordinary spirit and tone of that journal. The selection of such a substitute surprised many friends and supporters of the paper, as he was known to be a bitter and systematic opponent of Government, simply because it was the Government. But, on the other hand, it was impossible to find any journalist in India possessed of a larger and more intimate knowledge of Indian questions, or who could impart his information in a more clear, lively, and agreeable manner. His discretion, however, was not equal to his abilities. He himself says that "to the unfettered journalist in India, abuse of the Company and its rule is a necessity of his existence." Without pausing to investigate the truth of this dogma, we would remind Mr. Mead that he, at least, was not "unfettered," and that consequently this assumed law of existence did not apply in his case. Nevertheless, he thought proper to "travel out of his record," and to convert the Friend of India, the quasi-official organ of Government, into a channel for bitter sarcasm and fierce invective. The very first journal that incurred the displeasure of the authorities was the one which, at other times and under other guidance, had proved their staunch advocate and champion. The Friend of India was warned, and its temporary editor compelled to abdicate the seat of honour. It would perhaps be unfair to expect that Mr. Mead should blame himself for this sudden and ignominious fall from his "pride of place." Such expectations would at least be disappointed. Mr. Mead aspires to be a martyr, and in his indignation has written a book against the Government of India in general, and Lord Canning in particular. He is especially irate with his lordship, and can hardly speak of him with common patience. If Mr. Mead could be relied upon as an authority, there never was such a poor, weak, timid, brainless being in this world as the present Governor-General; nor was ever country so misruled as Hindostan under its English magistrates. Fortunately, there lies an appeal from this judgment, which is by no means borne out by the facts adduced. The utmost the author succeeds in proving is his own virulence, and the undisputed fact that here and there members of the civil service have committed grave errors—in most cases, from placing too much confidence in their native assistants and advisers. As for the Court of Directors, the most terrible sarcasm Mr. Mead can find to hurl at their devoted heads is in speaking of them as "the grocers in Leadenhall-street." Surely, this is unworthy of a writer of his experience and acknowledged ability. Everybody knows that the directors are not grocers, that as a corporate body the East-India Company have nothing whatever to do with trade or commerce, and that if all Asia were annexed to their dominion to-morrow they would not be one farthing the richer. It is therefore a silly, vulgar, and pointless innuendo. Possibly, Mr. Mead has become so accustomed to the use of personalities in the course of his Indian experience that he cannot at once divest himself of the bad habit. It is the more surprising, however, as we are informed that he himself greatly disapproved of personal allusions on the part of journalists, during the brief period he edited the Delhi Gazette; but, perhaps, that was owing to his being himself so frequently made the butt for the caustic wit of his facetious contemporary at Meerut. Nevertheless, with all its faults and shortcomings, Mr. Mead's volume is likely to be well received by the public; and had he confined himself to the story of the sepoy revolt, it would have been justly popular, both for the horrible interest of its incidents and the sprightly style in which they are narrated.

INDIAN PAMPHLETS.

1. A Selection of Articles and Letters on various Indian Questions. By HODGSON PRATT, B.C.S. Chapman and Hall.
2. India. By RICHARD CONGREVE. John Chapman.
3. Thoughts on the Indian Crisis. By "CIVICUS." Effingham Wilson.
4. Observations on a Scheme for the Reorganization of the Indian Army. By BRIGADIER-GENERAL JOHN JACOB, C.B. Smith, Elder, and Co.
5. Manual of British Government in India. By E. R. HUMPHREYS, LL.D. Longman & Co.
6. The Scinde Railway and Indus Flotilla Companies: their Futility and Hollowness demonstrated. By S. H. CLARKE. Richardson, Brothers.
7. Euphrates versus Suez; or, Which is the Shortest? By A. BARRISTER. Effingham Wilson.

1. The pamphlet at the head of the above list contains various able and interesting articles on Indian matters, for the most part contributed to the Economist. It is well worthy of careful perusal, as exhibiting the opinions of a gentleman eminently qualified to form a calm and enlightened judgment on the important questions now occupying so large a portion of public attention. Unhappily we have space for only one extract.

"At present the social stigma attaching to the name of Christian is so great, that the weak and pliant Hindoo cannot generally find the requisite strength for the excommunication which baptism involves. He may call himself anything else—a Vedantist, a Deist, or an Atheist; and so long as he conforms to some of the principal ceremonial observances, he is not persecuted. The neighbours still have their processions and music, the women their sweetmeats, and the priest his offerings; so no one suffers: and, therefore, it is a matter of no consequence what he believes. But directly Christianity is embraced, and caste is lost, there is an end of these things. Besides, Christianity is hated for other reasons than these: hated by hypocritical Vedantists and shallow sceptics quite as bitterly as by the old Hindoo worshippers of Vishnu and Siva,—because it rebukes their immorality, selfishness, falsehood, and cowardice,—hated, because it does not flatter their intense arrogance and conceit—because it tells them that a consciousness of their sinfulness and moral degradation is the first step in the true path. * * In Bengal the Romish Church does little or nothing towards the conversion of the natives. I have never seen or heard of a Catholic missionary in that part of India. The priests (Portuguese, Italians, and Irish) perform the mass for their small congregations, and do but little, if anything, else. The bulk of their congregations consists of Portuguese half-castes; and I have never seen so ignorant and debased a population calling itself Christian. Their language is a jumble of Portuguese and Bengal; while their habits, food, and manners differ very little from those of the low Mahomedan population. The following anecdote will illustrate their mental and moral condition. A Portuguese half-caste, residing at a station where a priest had been for some years in charge of a Catholic congregation, came, during the temporary absence of the latter, to the Protestant chaplain and expressed his wish to have his children baptized. The chaplain, knowing that the man was leading a life of open immorality, questioned him as to his motives in making this request; when he replied, 'O, of course they must be baptized, or they will lose their caste.' I was residing at the station where this conversation took place."

2. Mr. Richard Congreve is a disciple of M. Auguste Comte, and proposes to apply the principles of Positive Philosophy to the examination of political questions. According to the rules of Positivism, the policy which England is bound to adopt towards India is "simple in the extreme. It is, that we withdraw from our occupation of India without any unnecessary delay, within the shortest period compatible with due arrangements for the security of European life and property, and with such measures as shall be deemed advisable in the interest of Indian independence and good government." Mr. Congreve honestly expresses his belief that his opinions will not be popular, but he calls upon the women of England—the gentle sex being tolerably "positive" on most subjects—to "make their voice heard (bless them!) and brush aside the sophisms of interest or passion." We earnestly beg of them to do nothing of the kind, but to confine their brushing to "doing their hair."

3. "Civicus" is a classical scholar, and, in a pleasantly written article, warns his countrymen against the employment of foreign mercenary troops in India, because Hannibal's Gallic levies, emasculated by their luxurious repose at Capua, failed him in the hour of need. "If you look in the maps of the 'old, I warrant, you shall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. * * For there is figures in all things."

4. Brigadier-General John Jacob, C.B., is not satisfied with being an actor on the world's stage: his ambition is to be enrolled in the scriptorum chorus. He has, therefore, again rushed into print, and, as usual, with indifferent success. Not every one is born to be a Tasso—equally skilled to wield the sword and the pen. The brigadier proposes that the Queen of England shall immediately assume the title of Empress of India, and that "all candidates appointed to the Indian service be educated at a military college in England." But he has omitted to say in what manner he would have these appointments conferred. If India is to pass under the direct government of the Crown, it may be presumed that a considerable portion of the patronage will be exercised by her Majesty's Ministers. Is it not to be feared, then, that under a corrupt or ambitious Minister, an undue influence may be extended over the House of Commons by this accession to his means of bestowing favours? The independence of the representatives of the people is, without doubt, of far greater moment to the country than the introduction of fanciful improvements into the organization of the Indian army. The brigadier, however, does not appear to look far a-field. He is, beyond all contradiction, an excellent cavalry officer, but Pegasus is not the charger he has been accustomed to bestride. His printed pamphlets have hitherto failed to add lustre to his reputation. Let him be content to write his name in the blood of his country's foes, and leave the ink-bottle to less adventurous scribes.

5. Dr. Humphreys' Manual will be found useful to those who ask only for a mere outline of the principal facts relating to the gradual subjugation of India by the British. His little volume gives as full and correct a notion of Indian matters, as a human skeleton would afford of the character and attributes of man. It possesses, however, the excellent virtue of brevity, and the geographical and biographical index appears to have been carefully and accurately compiled.

6. Mr. Clarke has fallen into the very common fault of mistaking analogy and illustration for argument. Because ships still sail down the Thames with full cargoes, notwithstanding the existence of a railway from London to Southampton, he infers that the tortuous passage of the mouths of the Indus, will be preferred to the use of the railway from Kotree to Kurrachee. Mr. Clarke has only succeeded in demonstrating his own "futility and hollowness."

7. The last pamphlet on our list is an able and triumphant reply to an article in the Quarterly Review, entitled "The Suez and Euphrates Routes to India," and generally attributed to the pen of Mr. Layard. The reviewer took great pains to display his own familiarity with Burchardt, and then went out of his way to misquote and pervert the prospectus of the Euphrates Railway Company. These mis-statements are cleverly shown up by A. BARRISTER, and Mr. Andrew's character as an honourable, practical, and useful citizen, fully vindicated.

Sporting Scenes amongst the Kaffirs of South Africa. By Captain A. W. DRAYSON, R.A. Geo. Routledge and Co.

It appears to be almost a law of nature that in newly-discovered lands the hunter should precede the colonist, just as the latter is the precursor of the trader and the missionary. Love of adventure is usually the most powerful motive that induces men to abandon the comforts of civilized life, and betake themselves to the exploration of unknown regions. The superiority of their arms and their higher order of mind, naturally cause them to become objects of reverence to the simple natives, and thus an advantageous opening is made for permanent settlers, as well as for those who are allured by the prospect of a profitable barter. Captain Drayson was one of these daring pioneers of civilization. For many months he encamped among the Kaffirs, studying their character and habits, in the intervals of his expeditions into the bush in search of yet wilder and more savage animals. His experiences of men and beasts are pleasantly described, and still further illustrated by a number of exceedingly effective coloured engravings by Harrison Weir. The following remarks on the Kaffirs' soldierly qualifications will be read with especial interest at the present moment, when so many suggestions are being offered for the reorganization of the Bengal army, without having recourse to its former elements :—

"There is a great mistake prevalent in the minds of most English people, and that is, their habit of under-rating the Kaffir as a foe. He is looked upon as a naked savage, armed only with a spear, and hardly worth powder and shot. But in reality the Kaffirs are a formidable race, and, from their skill in many arts in which we are deficient, are much to be dreaded. Nearly every frontier Kaffir is now provided with a gun, thanks to the English traders, and very many have horses. The Kaffirs, being also particularly active and always in excellent training, make splendid light infantry. I believe it was Napoleon who remarked that legs won as many battles as arms: should this be true, the Kaffirs certainly have a great advantage over us, as they can go three miles at least to our two. Although indifferent marksmen, they are not inferior to the average of our private soldiers, and they are fast improving. Their training from childhood consists in a course of assagy-throwing and a cunning way of approaching and surprising an enemy. A Kaffir is also seasoned by hardship from childhood, and keeps fat and sleek on the roots and berries which he picks up, occasionally eked out with scraps of meat; while Englishmen rapidly lose their form and flesh by living on the tough old ox that is killed and immediately served out to them as rations. The individual courage of the frontier Kaffirs is undeniable, and they have given many proofs of it."

By an easy transition we pass from the Kaffirs to an amusing encounter with, what Sydney Smith used to call, "our poor relations." One cold morning, being indisposed to sleep, Captain Drayson took his gun and sallied forth to see the sun rise.

"Suddenly I heard a hoarse cough, and on turning saw indistinctly in the fog a queer little old man, standing near and looking at me. I instinctively cocked my gun, as the idea of bushmen and poisoned arrows flashed across my mind. The old man instantly dropped on his hands, giving another hoarse cough, that evidently told of consumptive lungs; he snatched up something beside him, which seemed to leap on his shoulders, and then he scampered off up the ravine on all-fours. Before half this performance was completed I had discovered my mistake. The little old man turned into an ursine baboon, with an infant ditto, who had come down the kloof to drink. The old man's cough was answered by a dozen others, at present hidden in the fogs. A large party of the old gentleman's family were sitting up the ravine, and were evidently holding a debate as to the cause of my intrusion. I watched them through my glass, and was much amused at their grotesque and almost human movements. Some of the old ladies had their olive-branches in their laps, and appeared to be 'doing their hair;' while a patriarchal-looking old fellow paced backwards and forwards with a fussy sort of look. He was evidently on sentry, and seemed to think himself of no small importance. This estimate of his dignity did not appear to be universally acknowledged, as two or three young baboons sat close behind him watching his proceedings; sometimes with the most grotesque movements and expressions they would stand directly in his path, and hobble away only at the last moment. One daring youngster followed close on the heels of the patriarch, during the whole length of his beat, and gave a sharp tug at his tail as he was about to turn. The old fellow seemed to treat it with the greatest indifference, scarcely turning round at the insult. Master Impudence was about repeating the performance, when the pater, showing that he was not such a fool as he looked, suddenly sprang round, and catching the young one before he could escape, gave him two or three such cuffs, that I could hear the screams that resulted therefrom. The venerable gentleman then clucked the delinquent over his shoulder, and continued his promenade with the greatest coolness. This old baboon evidently was acquainted with the practical details of Solomon's proverb. A crowd gathered round the naughty child, who, child-like, seeing commiseration, shrieked all the louder. I even fancied I could see the angry glances of the mamma, as she took her dear little pet in her arms, and removed it from a repetition of such brutal treatment."

Captivity of Two Russian Princesses in the Caucasus. Translated from the Russian, by H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS. Smith, Elder, and Co.

No long time after the declaration of war between Russia and Turkey, the Sultan conferred upon Shamil the high-sounding, but unmeaning title of Viceroy of Georgia. As if to give reality to this shadowy honour, the mountain chief led his barbarians into the fertile plains of Kahetia, ravaged the lands, and carried off a long train of captives. Among these were the Princess Anna Chavchavadzey and her sister, the Princess Varvara Orbeliani, with their children and domestic servants. These ladies had formerly occupied a distinguished position at the Court of St. Petersburg, and in their own country were looked up to with peculiar reverence as the granddaughters of George XIII., the last independent sovereign of Georgia. This narrative of their adventures and sufferings will, no doubt, possess great interest for a large circle of personal friends and acquaintances; and, from the minuteness of its details, it seems to have been especially written for a quarri-private circulation. It has many claims, however, upon the sympathies and curiosity of a far larger public. This is the first familiar account that has yet been given to the world of Shamil's "interior." We are here presented to his three wives, and to the other inmates of his seraglio, and are shown how the Prophet-warrior, unconquered by Russian arms or gold, is powerless to control three ignorant, ill-educated women. A curious light, too, is incidentally thrown on the social manners of the Russians themselves. The immense, impassable abyss that yawns between the Czar of All the Russians and his most potent subjects, is strongly contrasted with the familiarity that subsists between the highest nobles and their serfs; the home-born slave, however, is, in all places and at all times, a spoiled and petted member of the family. But the first point likely to command the attention of the reader, is the similarity between the early sufferings of the captives, and those endured by our own countrymen in India, and mostly from a similar cause—religious fanaticism. The pictures of saints, with which every room in a Russian house is provided, were destroyed or subjected to coarse ridicule, and books supposed to relate to the Christian religion were either torn or cut to pieces. The ladies themselves were treated with the most unfeeling barbarity. Their clothes were stripped off their backs; and when the Princess Chavchavadzey rejoined her fellow-prisoners after their first separation, her sole garment was a chemise and one slipper. Thus slightly attired she had been exposed all night to the piercing cold and damp of an alpine region. During part of the journey into the mountains, the youthful Princess Nina Baratoff had her elbows pinioned together, nor was the rope removed until after she had fallen from her horse into the Alazan. Indeed, all the ladies were constantly thrown from their horses, and otherwise injured in climbing or descending the steep mountain paths, and in forcing their way through dense thickets. The amount of fatigue they continued to endure seems almost incredible, and is only paralleled by the worst hardships so heroically supported by Englishwomen in India. The children were usually put into sacks and thrown across a horse's back. The fate of one of these little ones was very sad. The Princess Chavchavadzey had been permitted to carry in her arms her infant, Lydia, still a babe at the breast, but as her strength gradually failed, she became quite unable to maintain her hold; one of her hands, besides, being firmly secured to the girdle of the horseman behind whom she rode.

"The only arm which she had at liberty for the support of her child was becoming more and more numb; and it was impossible to extricate the other from the Murid's girdle. The Princess was on the point of letting the infant escape from her convulsive embrace. At last her arm fell almost powerless, and with it the weeping Lydia. The Chechnian galloped on faster and faster. The mother still held the little girl by one foot; but, swinging to and fro, she was dashed at one time against the stirrup, at another against the side of the horse. Either the Murid was determined not to stop, or he was unable to hear the mother's entreaties. In another second the mother's fingers had loosened their feeble grasp, the child fell with a shriek to the ground, and the whole troop of flying mountaineers rode over the body. * * * Altogether there was a great deal of heroism displayed by the Christian captives, and a considerable amount of barbarity by their Mussulman conductors. During the passage of the torrent, the Princess Baratoff observed one of the Georgian children, who had been separated from its mother, crying violently, to the great annoyance of the Lesghian who had taken charge of it. The mountaineer at last took the child by the legs, dashed its brains out against a rock, and threw it towards the abyss which received the stream somewhat lower down."

In the midst of all their sorrows and sufferings, however, frequent peals of laughter must have been elicited by the fantastic distress of Madame Drancey, the French governess. Shakspeare has often been taken to task by superficial critics for the strange jumble of deep affliction and broad farce that occurs in many of his most splendid creations. But his scenes are true to nature; and in real life anguish and humour, the tragic and the comic, are ever mingled together in mocking confusion. The first intimation of danger to the inmates of the château of Tsenondahl, was the reflection of a fire on the other side of the Alazan. According to Mme. Drancey, "it was picturesque." While the robbers were taking the princesses downstairs to the groundfloor, the French lady remained on her knees, covering her face with her hands. Suddenly she felt herself seized par un homme à la tête nue et rasée, à la figure rouge, sentant je ne sais pas quoi. Je me sens portée par ce monstre, &c. &c. The staircase, however, gave way, and the monster and the lady rolled together to the bottom. Her misfortunes now fairly commenced by the robbers tearing off her clothes, and leaving her absolutely nothing excepté ma chemise, mon corset, et mes bottines de Paris. In this sad plight she was made to sit down on the steps of a laundry, and hold the bridles of two horses—an animal previously an object of her especial terror. While acting as a horseboy, the sanguine spirit of the Parisienne rose within her, and bade her live in hope; for in three years she would be able to teach one of these monsters the French language, and so prevail upon him to assist her return to her dear native land. No doubt, part of the plot would consist in the monster becoming desperately enamoured of the wearer of the chemise, the corset, and the bottines de Paris. Soon afterwards she was mounted on horseback, behind a mountaineer, and directed to lay hold of his girdle. As her summer apparel was wetted in crossing a small river, a gallant monster came up, and offered her a cloak and a handful of flour, which he took out of his pocket. The cloak was accepted, but the elements of a simple banquet were declined with disgust. The rest of the journey to Shamil's camp was performed in the midst of a herd of oxen, who were constantly pressing up against her horse. One of these animals afterwards served her as a pillow. At night-time the chief of the party invited her to share his cloak, but she informed him, in the French language, that she was not accustomed to sleep with strangers, and accordingly lay down by herself, with her head resting on the broad back of an ox—a second Europa. Nor was this the only indignity to which she was exposed, for being obliged to accomplish part of the journey on foot, she occasionally fell behind the horsemen, whose leader then touched her up with a whip. In vain the unfortunate lady poured out upon him a full volume of abuse in the choicest Parisian. Equally in vain did she curse the moon in the same pleasant tongue, from a vague impression that the Mahomedans worshipped the orb of night. The monsters understood not a word that she uttered, but whipped her whenever she lagged behind. Well might she characterize her persecutors as des gens durs. At another time she "asked for something to drink; and the 'benevolent Moulla' brought her some water in a leather bag, shaped like a tobacco-pouch, with a silk cord to hold it by. The Moulla, who was on horseback, held the pouch by a cord, and presented it to Mme. Drancey, who, however, objected to the dirtiness of the Moulla's hands, and, as he was putting it to her lips, grasped it tightly in her own, thus forcing all the water out, and drenching herself from head to foot." After reaching Dargi-Veddeno, and becoming inmates of Shamil's seraglio, the governess was duly impressed with the bearing of the eldest wife, and remarked: "Elle n'a l'air distingué." She was greatly discomposed, however, by the shrill monotony of the Mussulman chants, and stopping her ears, would exclaim: "Ah! j'en ai bien assez de ces prières." When one of Shamil's sons visited him, accompanied by his wife, the latter could not with propriety even so much as meet her husband. This excessive modesty was characterized by Madame Drancey as prudery, qui masque la nudité de l'impudeur, et qui met à tort tous les points sur les i. On her release from captivity she expressed her intention of returning to Paris, where, it is maliciously observed, "she will write and publish to the world revelations of her captivity with Shamil, under the title of 'Huit Mois de Captivité dans la Schamylie.'"

We had marked several passages for extract, but the amusing French lady has occupied the space which should have been reserved for more important matter. In conclusion we may not omit to render due homage to the excellence of Mr. Edwards's translation. Of his accuracy, indeed, we cannot pretend to judge, but his well-known conscientiousness and the extent of his linguistic attainments are sufficient guarantees for the fidelity of his labours.

THE PRINCIPALS of the FRENCH and ENGLISH
MOSELY EDUCATIONAL ESTABLISHMENT RECEIVE
CHILDREN from a very early age, supplying the place of Parents as far as that relation can be replaced. The situation is excellent, the air pure, and, from being in a pastoral district, they are enabled to supply food of all kinds of the most wholesome description, and wholly free from adulteration.
 Where personal supervision is not possible, arrangements will be made to furnish Clothing, &c., for one moderate sum, avoiding all extras. To those having the charge of Orphan Children, or to Parents about to proceed to or returning from the East or West-Indies, this Establishment offers great and peculiar advantages.

For Particulars and References address Messdames FREFONTAINE,
 6, Trafalgar Terrace, Mosely, Worcestershire.

EDUCATION.—A benefited Clergyman, Graduate in Honours of Cambridge, residing in a most delightful part of England, and possessing very high recommendations as a private Tutor, wishes to TAKE CHARGE of THREE or FOUR BOYS, under sixteen years of age, whose friends may be in India, to EDUCATE for the East-India College, the Public Schools, or Universities. The Advertiser is competent to instruct in several of the Oriental languages, in addition to the higher mathematics, and classics, and was for some years most successful in preparing pupils for Haileybury.
 He would be happy to meet the wishes of any party of high respectability, who might, under present circumstances, wish to place his sons on comparatively moderate terms.

Address, Rev. J. JONES, Parsonage, Rowsley, near Bakewell, Derbyshire.

HOLLAND-HOUSE MILITARY COLLEGE
